THE day of the "crash" and "chase" comedy is done, and patrons want human situations and characters in their comedies, according to Julius Stern, president of Stern Bros., in an exclusive interview outlining the reasons back of the new Stern policy of comedies based on comic strips only, given in New York this week. Because certain things were considered funny 10 years ago does not mean that audiences will laugh at them now, he says. The human note is the keynote of success, in comedy as elsewhere, he declares, and patrons want to see real characters on the screen.

The first move in this direction was made by Sterns last year when they acquired the rights to the Buster Brown series made famous by R. F. Outcault. This was only a beginning. They wanted Buster, the boy, and Tige, the dog, portrayed on the screen by exactly the right types. A long search was instituted. Scores of youngsters were interviewed and many tests made. Finally Arthur Trimble was found. He looked the part—a Buster Brown haircut looked right on him, likewise the clothes. Tests were made. They looked right, but to be certain they were sent to the home office in New York. The reports were enthusiastic and Trimble was signed. Tige was specially trained for his part, and production of the Buster Brown series started. Nothing was spared in making them right—and the results need no comment. The Stern Brothers decided that their idea had proved its soundness, and set out to enlarge upon it.

"We looked about for another cartoon strip with human, everyday characters that would appeal to everyone and were widely known," says Mr. Stern, "and settled upon 'The Newlyweds and Their Baby,' by George McManus. Again we had the problem of correct casting. We looked at hundreds of babies to find a Snookums, but they all failed to measure up in one way or another. Finally, in desperation, a Hollywood radio station broadcast a description of what we wanted—and this brought us the baby that has played Snookums so successfully in the entire series to date. He had never worked in pictures before—his father is an athletic instructor—but he proved a find. He is so obviously a healthy, happy baby that it is a pleasure to watch him on the screen.

"Snookums is only two years old, but his intelligence is amazing. He takes direction like a veteran. His father has trained him and cared for him so that his health and strength are remarkable. His family life is ideal, and that is reflected in his sunny, happy disposition and makes him a delight to watch. He will not, for instance, hurt anyone—even for the purpose of a scene. It is impossible to get him to strike another person, or do anything destructive, even in play.

"That brings me to an important point. In none of these comedies, or the Buster Browns, will we permit any malicious or destructive pranks by the children, even for the sake of a laugh. It must all be clean, harmless fun—and this applies to all our comedies. Also, there must be no offensive or upleasant characters, and in bringing these cartoon characters to the screen we have avoided repulsive and grotesque make-ups or characters that might resemble the cartoonist's caricatured figures but would be unpleasant to look at."

Mr. Stern brought out an interesting angle in connection with this year's production—the fact that a number of young college men have been placed on the scenario staff and encouraged to furnish new, fresh story angles and gags. They are given unlimited time and opportunity—but they must remain away from the studio, or, Mr. Stern feels, they will begin to think in the same stereotyped ruts which he seeks to avoid. From time to time, as these young men show sufficient promise and ambition, they are being given an opportunity to direct.

Cost $24,000 to Run Ontario Censor Board

The Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors is costing the Ontario Provincial Government the sum of $24,000 during the current year, according to the announcement of Hon. J. T. Monteith, Provincial Treasurer. This is made up largely of salaries for the censors and staff, whose headquarters are at Toronto. The individual items are as follows: Chairman, salary of $3,500; vice-chairman, $2,700; three members at $2,500 each; censor of theatre advertising, $2,500; two projection machine operators at $1,800 per year each; clerk stenographer, $1,100, and contingencies, $3,500.

British Incorporated Pictures Begins Production

Announcement is made by the Canadian branch of the British Incorporated Pictures, Limited, the enterprise organized by Col. W. F. Clarke and R. T. Cranfield, that the production of short subjects has already been started at the Ontario Government's film studio at Trenton, Ontario, which has been placed at the disposal of the company.

Bills Pending Before Tennessee Legislature

THREE bills are pending in the Tennessee Legislature looking toward resumption of the opening of theaters and motion picture houses in the State on Sunday.

Last week a bill was introduced by the Memphis delegation to repeal the law closing theaters all over the State on Sunday which was enacted in 1923.

This week a second bill was introduced by the same delegation which provides for referendum on the question at a special election.

A third bill is said to be in preparation adding an additional tax on Sunday theater receipts, proceeds of which, under the bill, would be turned over to charity.

The second bill compels the election commission to hold a special election at the time of the next general election. This would mean that if the bill becomes a law the people will vote on Sunday shows at the election of the mayor and city commissioners in November.

Comerford Tenders Dinner to Press Correspondents

M. E. Comerford, president of the Comerford Amusement Company and theatre owner in Pennsylvania, played the host in Harrisburg, Pa., this week to members of the Pennsylvania Legislative Correspondents' Association at the Penn Harris Hotel. Practically all of the leading newspapers of Pennsylvania were represented at the affair, there being forty-five correspondents in evidence. Presiding over the proceedings was Captain John Cummings of the "Philadelphia Inquirer" and president of the association, who later turned over the gavel to Arthur James, lieutenant-governor of Pennsylvania and business partner to Mr. Comerford.

President R. F. Woodhull of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was the guest of honor and others from this city were Frank C. Walker, general counsel for the Comerford Amusement Company, M. J. O'Toole, Business Manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and Ben Barnett of the Amalgamated Vaudeville Agency.

Minnesota Governor Signs Anti-Daylight Bill

The bill prohibiting daylight saving in Minnesota, which had been adopted by both branches of the legislature, was signed last week by Governor Christianson. The measure specifies that central standard solar time shall be used within the state. It declares that no municipality can use any time that the rest of the state is not using. This automatically bars consideration of measures such as the one recently presented to the voters in Duluth in an effort to establish daylight saving there. It was because of this action in Duluth that the Northwest M.P.T.O. urged the introduction of the prohibitory bill into the legislature and theatre owners of the state have given it their support.

Ticket Tax Relief for Canadian Showmen

THE Provincial Government of British Columbia, Ottawa, Ontario, has provided further relief in the way of amusement ticket tax reduction. Two years ago the Government reduced the tax from 10 per cent. to seven per cent. This has now been further reduced to five per cent. and the tax has been removed from tickets selling up to 15 cents altogether.

The abolishment of the amusement tax on all tickets up to 25 cents, which was adopted by the recent session of the Ontario Legislature at Toronto, will go into effect July 1, it is officially announced by Premier Howard Ferguson of Ontario. This will mean a reduction in revenue to the Province of $600,000.

In the Province of Manitoba the Government has abolished the amusement tax on all tickets up to and including 25 cents. This follows the abolishment of the tax on children's tickets up to 16 cents, which was made some time ago.

The Quebec Provincial Government has widened the scope of the amusement tax to include church entertainments and free passes to theatres, the tax rate in Quebec being 10 per cent.

Mrs. Chapman Advocates State Films Showing History, Activities, etc.

MRS. NEWTON D. CHAPMAN, chairman of better films, D.A.R., in her report at the National Convention of the Daughters of the American Revolution, Washington, D.C., on April twentieth, advocates the need of producing in each separate state a motion picture dealing with the history, present-day conditions and activities of that state. Mrs. Newton's plan for contents of these films follows:

(a) History of the State; (b) Physical Geography of the State, that is, the mountains, rivers, sea shores, etc.; (c) The actual industrial life of the people; (d) The state activities such as new roads, schools, hospitals; in other words, a picture showing exactly how the tax dollar is spent by the state as a growing concern.

Stanley Theatres Purchase And Build in East

To Build in Albany; Acquires Penn Theatres; Finkelstein-Ruben Add Two to Circuit

THE Stanley Company of America operating four theatres in the downtown section of Albany, N.Y., purchased a site last week in the residential section of the city and will at once erect a house costing $150,000, and accommodating 1,500 persons. The theatre will be located at least two miles from the business center of the city and in an exclusive residential area now served by but one theatre. In Troy, N.Y., the company is reported to have purchased a site made vacant by the burning of the Masonic Temple, but whether to erect a theatre or to protect its own interests, can not be learned. The company now operates three houses in Troy and is virtually in control of the first-run situation in that city, as well as in Albany.

Negotiations are now pending under which the Stanley Company will probably take over the Strand Theatre, Shenandoah; the Embassy, Baltimore, and the Savoy, Bethlehem, all in Pennsylvania. The company has also started negotiations looking toward the purchase of theatre sites in Pottsville and other cities of importance in the anthracite coal regions. Negotiations which have been pending between Stanley and M. Lessy for the purchase of the Collingswood Theatre, Collingswood, N.J., owned by Mr. Lessy, have been complicated by the fact that Rovner and Handel, who are now building an 1,800-seat theatre in Westmont, N.J., have entered the field in competition for the Collingswood Theatre.

The Comerford Amusement Company, of Scranton, has extended its chain of motion picture theatres in the hard coal mining regions of Pennsylvania by acquiring, under long-term leases, control of two Danville theatres from the Chamberlain Amusement Company, of Shamokin. The theatres are the Luna, which seats 500, and the Victoria, with a seating capacity of 1,000.

Two more motion picture theatres were added to the Finkelstein & Ruben chain this week with the purchase of one theatre and the lease of another at Sioux Falls, S.D. The Orpheum Theatre was purchased outright, while the Egyptian Theatre was leased for 20 years. F. & R. will take possession of the Egyptian April 26 and the Orpheum on May 1st.

The purchase of the Uptown Theatre, suburban house of Kansas City, by Universal, was completed this week, the latter taking title in a holding company, the K. C. U. Theatre Company, incorporated under the laws of New York. Universal will complete the development of the theatre. The seller was the Valentine Realty Company, of which E. J. Willett is president.

Universal also has under consideration the purchase of the Warwick Theatre, another suburban house, it is understood, but a report that a purchase had been concluded was denied Tuesday.

Fluffy ballets and artists of renown, together with exceptional presentations of motion pictures, are all included in the plans, already perfected, for a 5,000-seat deluxe Loew Theatre, to be erected in the Fordham section of the Bronx. The plan, according to Nicholas M. Schenck, executive first vice-president of Loew's Inc., is to give the flourishing and growing Bronx community the same entertainment as found in the Capitol Theatre.

While Mr. Schenck would not divulge the exact location of the new theatre, at this date, he did announce that the plans had been fully prepared and that only the physical construction of the building remained to be completed.

N. Y. Grants Few Charters of Incorporation to Firms

Motion picture companies and companies allied with the industry, incorporating in New York State at Albany, during the past week, included the following: Visual Demonstration System, Inc., $25,000, moving picture machines, Buffalo; Howard H. Starrett, Edmund S. Brown, Percy R. Smith, Buffalo; First Division Pictures, Inc., $75,000, Lillian Cunningham, New York City; Florence Abramson, Middle Village; Henry R. Danziger, Brooklyn; American Sport Series, Inc., $20,000, Hyman B. Jackson, Mabel L. Danziger, Gertrude M. Weinberg, Brooklyn.

Ohio Attorney General States Law Cannot Stop Block Booking

BEING asked for an opinion on the bill prohibiting block booking in Ohio which is now before the Judiciary Committee of the House, Attorney-General E. C. Turner ruled that the State of Ohio has no business meddling in contracts between producers, distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures. The opinion was sought by Harry Ball, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

The Attorney-General stated that the motion picture business is not affected with the public interest to the extent that such legislation would be necessary. He holds that it would be undue interference with the rights of property, and that the bill would be in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Educational Convention Set for Los Angeles

Branch Managers and Home Office Executives to Meet at Ambassador Hotel May 2-6

BEGINNING Monday, May 2, the annual convention of Educational branch managers and officials from the home office will be held at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles, the concluding sessions to occur on Friday, May 6. The visiting Educational officials, home office representatives and branch heads of the Eastern seaboard will leave New York City the afternoon of April 28. They will depart in a special compartment-drawing room car on the Manhattan Limited of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Upon arriving at Chicago, this car will be switched to the Santa Fe line, and two more special trains containing branch managers from the Mid-West will be attached to the California Limited, which leaves the evening of April 29 from Chicago. The party will arrive in time for the initial session of the convention. The day following the conclusion of the meeting the Educational managers and officials will leave for their homes.

Several important figures in the Educational ranks are now in Los Angeles awaiting the party, whom they will greet and to whom they will act as hosts. Among these are the Christie Brothers, Al and Charles, Jack White, E. H. Allen, Sidney Brennecke, special representative on the Pacific Coast, and R. L. Hoadley, Los Angeles representative of the advertising and publicity department.

Heading the party of home office executives will be Earle W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., and his fellow travelers will include A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager; J. R. Wilson, sales manager; Gordon S. White, advertising and publicity director; Harvey Day, sales manager of Kinograms; and Captain G. McL. Baynes, president of the Kinograms Publishing Corporation.

Other Eastern officials who will occupy the special car out of New York will be J. F. Burke, traveling auditor; Max Stahl, special home office sales representative; Arthur Lucas, special Southern representative; Jack Skirboll, special representative; Oscar Hanson, general manager of the Canadian branches; and Lawrence Wooldridge, of the Far East Corporation, which takes care of Educational's foreign business.

F. and R. Plan No Future Theatre Moves as Yet

Stating that no "moves" in the theatre field are pending at this time by Finkelstein and Ruben (Northwest Theatres), M. L. Finkelstein this week issued a statement at Atlantic City, where he is stopping, that his firm has not endeavored to "build a fence around Minneapolis" but rather is anxious to make progress by tending to business.

Though Mr. Finkelstein denies that his company is looking to affiliation of its circuit of 129 theatres with another company, it is rumored that Richard F. Hoyt of Hayden and Stone is manouevering to bring F. and R. into the Stanley-West Coast-First National combination.

E. W. Wingart Director of F.B.O. Publicity

EARL W. WINGART, who has been identified with Paramount for the last seven years as director of the studio publicity department in the East, has been appointed director of publicity of the F.B.O. Flames Destroy Strand Bldg. in Morgantown, W. Va.

Flames which started mysteriously in an adjoining building at 4 o'clock in the morning of April 14, wrecked the six-story Strand Theatre building, in Morgantown, W. Va., entailing a loss of $625,000 to the theatre company alone. Of this amount $500,000 was to the building and the rest to the theatre proper.

The flames spread throughout an entire city block, causing a total loss estimated at $1,500,000.

It is estimated that the properties destroyed were insured in the aggregate for only about 30 per cent. of the total losses. The buildings were all about 25 years old. The Strand Theatre Company, as well as the owners of most of the other properties, have announced they will rebuild as soon as possible.

Northwest M. P. T. O.'s Meet at St. Paul Hotel

This year's convention of the Northwest M.P.T.O., which is to be held at the St. Paul Hotel Roof Garden on May 3, 4, 5, promises to be the largest ever held. Many acceptances to the invitation to attend are coming in daily. Notables in the film business have also been invited, but it is not yet known how many will be able to attend. The usual banquet is to be replaced by a cabaret buffet lunch and dance in the Palm Room of the St. Paul Hotel on May 4.

Twelve Rules on News Stories Announced by United Artists

AS a result of a year's investigation among editors United Artists this week announced, through Victor Shapiro, the crystallization of its policy on all news stories. Twelve rules have been formulated inspired by answers to inquiries by the company and by a recent editorial in Editor and Publisher in which the functions of a press department were listed. The rules to be observed follow:

1. No superlative adjectives.
2. No editorializing in news stories.
3. No news occurring—no stories will be issued.
4. No exclusives. Only Sunday feature stories will be exclusive. If an editor gets a story and telephones for verification, his confidence will not be violated.
5. No personal publicity. Each star has a representative.
6. No statement made without authority cited.
7. No story released until official, with contracts actually signed.
8. No editor is asked to run any story as a personal favor.
9. No advertising will be withdrawn because of sincere viewpoints in criticisms.
10. No expense account for entertainment.
11. No editor who violates a release date will receive any news thereafter.
12. No previews in projection rooms, without music, will be given any reviewers on United Artists Pictures.

Tiffany Nationalization at Atlanta Completed

WITH the formal opening of the Southeastern branch of Tiffany Productions, Inc., at 106 Walton Street, Atlanta, the nationalization of Tiffany's country-wide system of exchanges is completed. With the arrival in Atlanta of Edwin J. Smith, general sales manager, final approval was given the location chosen by William G. Minder, who is now actively functioning as Tiffany's Southeastern branch manager, and leases were closed for the building.

Start Work on F. and R. Theatre, Rochester, Minn.

Construction on Finkelstein & Ruben's new $350,000 picture theatre in Rochester, Minn., goes definitely under way this week. The new theatre will be known as the Chateau Dodge, and will be designed after a 14th Century Chateau. It will have a seating capacity of 1,700.

Revise Theatre Insurance

Reduction in New York on Theatres Conforming to "Theatre Schedule"; Loss Ration One Percent

INSURANCE premiums on theatres conforming to "theatre schedule" in Greater New York will be reduced on the base rate from 90 to 55 according to New York Fire Insurance Exchange. The reduction applies to all legitimate and picture houses whose stage equipment permits the playing of vaudeville acts or presentations which is the definition of "theatre schedule."

All modern houses of fireproof construction built by the chains and big independents are so equipped, and therefore are entitled to the reduction. Only the older and smaller houses in Greater New York will be unable to qualify for the rate reduction.

Each theatre must make individual application to the Insurance Exchange, preferably through its broker, to secure the reduction, which will be allowed on full occupancy of six months.

The Exchange states that the reduction came through the application last December of the International Theatrical Assn. representing legitimate theatres of New York City. However, the reduction includes all picture theatres of modern fireproof construction which automatically comes within the "theatre schedule" as above outlined.

It should interest exhibitors to learn that a recanvass of the field covering insurance carried, premiums collected and losses paid to members of the legitimate group indicates under existing rates the loss ratio is only about one per cent of premiums collected. Therefore, the rates charged upon fireproof theatrical risks were shown by the theatrical association to be altogether disproportionate to those on other more hazardous and less desirable risks. On these facts the New York Fire Insurance Exchange states it provided the rate revision.

New Orpheum Theatre Is Planned for Memphis

The South will boast no finer theatre than the new Orpheum, according to Millard Naill, who has received the plans from the architects, C. W. and George L. Rapp, of Chicago. The proposed Orpheum will be three stories in height and will seat 3,000 persons; its approximate cost will be $750,000. Orpheum has agreed to take a 25-year lease on the large block of stock if the people of Memphis will build the theatre. A company with a capital of from $400,000 to $450,000 is being organized to supervise the erection of the building and a committee of 15 has obtained an option on the site of the old Orpheum, which was burned three years ago. About half of the stock has been subscribed by the committee, of which George Randolph is chairman.

Newspaper Strip First National Exploitation

THE advertising and publicity department of First National has started a new press sheet feature. It is a newspaper picture strip which pictures the story in outline from the photoplay. This service will begin with "The Tender Hour," and will be continued with all future releases. "Flashes from the Week's Best Film" is the title of this picture strip.

Theatre Company Loses in Supreme Court Case

Theatres in West Virginia are responsible for injuries suffered by patrons as a result of defective equipment, despite the state law holding that proof of knowledge of the defect must be shown as a condition of recovery, it is implied by a refusal by the United States Supreme Court in Washington, D.C., to rehear the case of Marianita Truschel against the Rex Amusement Company.

The plaintiff was a patron of the company at its Rex Theatre and tripped over a loose stair carpet. She brought suit and was awarded damages of $18,000 in the West Virginia Courts, the company appealing on the ground the proof had not been furnished that it knew of the defective condition of the carpet.

Crawford Opposite Gilbert in "Twelve Miles Out"

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has chosen Joan Crawford to play opposite John Gilbert in the latter's next starring film, "Twelve Miles Out," which goes into work shortly, under the direction of Jack Conway. Ernest Torrence has been cast for the leading male role in support of Gilbert. Betty Compson has also been signed by M.-G.-M. for an important part in "Twelve Miles Out."

Next Costello Vehicle "Heart of Maryland"

"The Heart of Maryland," the Belasco play, is to go into production in the near future as Dolores Costello's next starring vehicle for the Warner Brothers. Actual work will start in three weeks' time with Lloyd Bacon directing from an adaptation by James T. O'Donahue. Jason Robards will be Miss Costello's leading man.

New Rork Film Changed to "Prince of Headwaiters"

Sam E. Rork's new picture for First National formerly titled "Modern Madness" and "His Son," will in the future be called "The Prince of Headwaiters." John Dillion is directing the production and among the players are Lewis Stone and Priscilla Bonner.

Lawrence Gray to Appear in "Liberty Bonds"

Lawrence Gray, now appearing in "The Callahans and the Murphys," will continue his association with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer when that company produces "Liberty Bonds," a new Norma Shearer picture. Monta Bell, author of the story, will begin directing it next week, as Miss Shearer has finished her work in "Old Heidelberg."

Theatre Jobs For Women

Moving Picture Positions Not All in Hollywood States Director of Pathe Educational Dep't

ALL the movie jobs are not in Hollywood, says Mrs. E. R. Dessez, director of the Educational Department of Pathe, in a statement advising women that it is not necessary to go to the Coast in order to become affiliated with the motion picture industry; right in their own home towns are good, substantial positions awaiting women, declares Mrs. Dessez, pointing out the need of exhibitors for workers in the public relations field and also in the introduction to schools and churches of moving pictures as an aid to education.

Understanding and intelligence are more requisite, perhaps, than experience in this line of work, for experience may be gained as one goes along and, in fact, it does not count for much, because each case demands different treatment; likewise, there are few women engaged in this work at present, so few precedents have been laid down, states the department director.

"The use of motion pictures in the classroom is coming, and coming very rapidly," said Mrs. Dessez. "When it really takes hold it will be a vast thing. Remember, there are about eighteen thousand theatres in the United States and about two hundred and fifty thousand schools and each school has from four to twelve grades.

"The school systems that are using pictures most successfully have visual instruction departments with a person in charge giving all his or her time in the selections of visual aids, to co-relating them with subjects taught and to the mechanics of routing and showing them in the schools. The use of visual aids to teaching is still new enough to be somewhat experimental, and, therefore, elastic. In this field, as in that of public relations, women can find work in their own towns—work that demands initiative and creative ability—pioneer activity in work that, in the next few years, will be enormously important."

Parm't Forms Authors Council on West Coast

HEADING a recently formed Authors' Council on the West Coast, Herman J. Mankiewicz, author-playwright, will immediately leave Hollywood for New York and Chicago, where he will interview leading authors for the purpose of inducing them to come to the Paramount studio in Hollywood. This is Paramount's definite launching of a campaign by means of which they hope to obtain outstanding contemporary authors to work directly for the films.

Ambitious Western Program Planned by F.B.O.

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY, president of F.B.O., announces that with his appointment of Robert North Bradbury as superivsor of Western units an ambitious program of expansion will at once be initiated by F.B.O. in the division of Western films. In the new schedule now getting into shape two new units and an increase in the budget for a third are provided for. Under Mr. Bradbury's supervision, one of the new units will begin work in May and another in June. It is planned to have a star head one of these units; he has practically been decided upon, according to F.B.O., and tentative plans for the second will undoubtedly reach a definite stage shortly.

Dick Sears, New England Cameraman, Joins Pathe

Richard Sears, one of the best known cameramen in New England, has been signed as territorial Pathe News representative for New England by Editor Ray Hall, of Pathe News. First Nat'l Works on Eight

Stars in Midst of Work on Forthcoming Releases; Moore and Barthelmess Vehicles Far Advanced

FIRST National units are making excellent headway in the production of their forthcoming releases. Colleen Moore's vehicle, "Naughty But Nice," is far along in work under the direction of Millard Webb. The picture is an adaptation from Lewis Allen Browne's "The Bigamist." In support of the star are Donald Reed, Claude Gillingwater, Kathryn McGuire, Hallam Cooley, Edythe Chapman and Clarissa Selwynne.

Production is nearing completion on "The Patent Leather Kid," a Richard Barthelmess film, which Alfred Santell is directing. First National studio executives believe that the picture will be one of their outstanding specials for the year. In this Al Rockett production, for which Winifred Dunn prepared the continuity from a story by Rupert Hughes, are Molly O'Day, Lawford Davidson, Arthur Stone, Mathew Betz, Raymond Turner, Nigel de Brulier.

"Diamonds in the Rough," a Milton Sills starring vehicle, is making excellent headway under the direction of Charles Brabin. The story is an original by G. W. Sutton, Jr., with continuity by Mary O'Hara. Supporting cast are Sylvia Kingston, Natli Barr and John Miljan. Preparatory work is already under way on Sills' next production, "Hard Boiled Harrigan," an original screen story by Carey Wilson.

Constance Talmadge's next vehicle, "Breakfast Before Sunrise," is scheduled to get under way the first week in May. "The Stolen Bride," Billie Dove's first starring picture, is in active work with Alexander Korda directing. Lloyd Hughes is in the cast. Harry Langdon and his producing staff are at work on the preparation of another original story, the rights to which the comedian has owned for years. The story is as yet untitled.

Johnny Hines, his producer, C. C. Burr, and his brother and director, Charles Hines, are well into work on the comedy sequences of "White Pants Willie." Having completed "The Land Beyond Law," Ken Maynard and his horse, Tarzan, are making "The Devil's Saddle," a Kenneth Perkins story, which Charles R. Rogers is producing. Al Rogell is directing and Kathleen Collins will again play opposite Maynard.

Sheehan's "7 Heaven" Stunt

French Taxi of War Fame to Travel Through Country as Part of Publicity on Current Fox Picture

"ELOISE," the pre-war French taxi secured by Fox Films from the French Government to appear in the film version of the stage play, "7th Heaven," is to be further used in the interests of the picture through an idea conceived by Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of Fox Films. The taxi will be used as a ballyhoo comprising part of the preliminary publicity campaign on the war picture.

"Eloise" is now in Chicago and will travel East under its own power, visiting every important city on its way to New York, where it is due July 3rd. Mr. Sheehan's plan will be carried out by the sales force under James R. Grainger, and Landon Burks will travel ahead of the car, making press arrangements and supervising the welcomes which have been prepared in most cities which the taxi will visit. It will be driven by Lieutenant Didot, formerly of the 39th French Infantry, 52nd Division, Eighth Chasseurs.

"Eloise" was one of the cabs which was commandeered to rush General Galieni's division to the banks of the River Oreq when Von Kluck's Army threatened Paris from the north and west, thus saving the French capital. The itinerary of the cab on its way from Chicago to New York is as follows:

April 25th, leave Chicago; April 25th to May 1st, Joliet, Streater, Peoria, Bloomington, Lincoln, Springfield, St. Louis; May 2nd to 15th, Terre Haute, Indianapolis, Richmond, Cincinnati, Hamilton, Middletown, Dayton, Springfield (Ohio), Columbus, Marion, Lima, Fort Wayne; May 16th to May 31st, Elkhart, South Bend, Niles, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, Lansing, Battle Creek, Jackson, Ann Harbor, Detroit, Toledo, Fremont, Sandusky, Akron, Canton, Youngstown; June 1st to June 15th, Cleveland, Ahstabula, Erie, Dunkirk, Buffalo, Jamestown, Oil City, Newcastle, Butler, Pittsburgh, Johnstown, Altoona; June 15th to July 2nd, Harrisburg, Gettysburg, Hagerstown, Frederick, Washington, Annapolis, Baltimore, Wilmington, Chester, Philadelphia, Trenton, New Brunswick, Elizabeth, Newark; July 3rd at New York.

Fox to Release Eighteen Shorts During May

FOX FILMS will issue twenty-four reels—or eighteen subjects—during the month of May. The short subjects listed are six two-reel comedies, three one-reel Varieties and nine issues of the Fox newsreel.

The Helen and Warren release is "Just a Husband," scheduled for May 1 and exhibiting Kathryn Perry, Arthur Housman and Allan Forrest. "Man About Town," an O. Henry story featuring Barry Norton is set for May 15 the release date also for "A Kangaroo Detective," an Animal comedy with Gene Cameron and Sally Phipps.

The May Varieties are: "Nature's Wonderland," on May 1; "Reflections," on May 15, and "Monarchs of the Soil," on May 29.

Eight Films Announced by Krellberg for 1927-1928

Stating that production would start at once on the first two pictures on a production schedule of eight pictures for the 1927-28 season, Sherman S. Krellberg, president of Krellberg Pictures Corporation, has announced his forthcoming schedule will include "The Little Girl God Forgot," Edward E. Rose's stage play, to be started before May 1, and "The King of Clowns," a circus story by Charles De Vry in which James Kirkwood will be starred. The six other productions which will follow these two are "Criminal Youth," "Her Pasteboard Lover," "Any Woman's Man," "Broadway After Midnight," "The Last Curtain" and "The Market of Souls."

Bud Barsky, independent producer and supervisor producer at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, will resign from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to become vice-president of Krellberg Pictures, a newly organized corporation. Mr. Barsky will assume his duties as general production manager for Krellberg within the next few weeks.

Changes in Pathe Branch Personnel

Harry Scott, general sales manager of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., makes public this week several changes in the personnel of the Pathe exchange system.

L. E. Kennedy, San Francisco branch manager, has requested to be transferred to his home town. W. G. Seib has been named head of the San Francisco exchange and Mr. Kennedy becomes a salesman in Los Angeles. A. W. Plues, manager of the Pathe branch at New Orleans, has resigned, and J. O. Rohde of the Dallas office will assume the managerial duties at New Orleans. Mr. Seib's appointment became effective April 11, Mr. Rohde's on April 18. Mr. Plues remains at the New Orlean's office until April 23.

McCormick Promotes Leroy to Directorship

Mervyn Leroy, of First National, has just been appointed to the rank of a director by John McCormick, West Coast production chief for First National who states that the young director will be entrusted with the direction of Colleen Moore's new picture, "Oh, What a Life," which will go into work shortly after "Naughty but Nice" has been finished by Miss Moore.

M-G-M Acquires Screening Rights to "Starlight"

The motion picture rights to "Starlight," the Gladys Unger stage play in which Doris Keane starred two years ago, have been purchased by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Company. The author is now a member of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer scenario staff.

TWO distribution negotiations for Columbia's next year product were concluded by Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, within the past week. During the season of 1927-28 "The Perfect Thirty," the name of the forthcoming Columbia productions, will be handled by Hollywood Pictures Corporation in the New York territory, and by the Glucksman Brothers, Jacobo and Max, in the South American countries of Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador and Brazil.

Five Releases in Tentative M-G-M May Group

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's releasing schedule for the month of May is made up of five feature films. Starring vehicles for Lon Chaney, Ramon Novarro, Marion Davies, and Tim McCoy are included in the list, which is tentative. The pictures are "The Unknown," a Chaney film, with Joan Crawford and direction by Tod Browning; "A Certain Young Man," the Novarro offering, which has Renee Adore and Carmel Myers in the cast and which Hobart Henley directed; "Tillie the Toiler," the Marion Davies production, which was also directed by Hobart Henley; "California," a new historical Western drama, featuring McCoy with Dorothy Sebastian in the feminine lead, and "Captain Salvation," with Lars Hanson and Pauline Starke heading the cast.

Four Releases From Warners During May

May will bring four releases from the studio of the Warner Brothers, who are now completing the concluding portion of their program for the current year.

"Tracked by the Police," Rin-Tin-Tin's latest starring vehicle, will have its first showing on May 7. One week later, May 14, "The Climbers," starring Irene Rich, will be released. "Irish Hearts," May McAvoy's second starring picture for Warner Brothers, will be issued to exhibitors on May 21. The final release of the month, scheduled for May 28, will be "A Million Bid," a Dolores Costello starring vehicle.

New McCoy Vehicle Goes Into Production

"The Frontiersman," the title of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new Western film starring Tim McCoy, was put into production last week at the M.-G.-M. studio under Reginald Barker's direction. The picture will set forth an historical theme—that of Andrew Jackson putting down an Indian rebellion—and will present that character in the person of Russell Simpson.

Sam Wood Signs Long-Term Contract

Sam Wood, whose latest directorial effort was "Rookies," will continue his associations with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer under the terms of a new long-term contract which he signed recently. His first assignment under the new contract has not yet been announced.

Sax Signs Stars and Stories for 1927-28

The names of two writers and two players were affixed last week to Gotham contracts through the endeavors of Sam Sax, the president of Gotham, who is lining up his product for the coming season. Contracts were signed by Mae Busch and Percy Marmont calling for the appearance of each of these two in a minimum of two pictures, with options for additional films. The productions and stories already contracted for and to which the players will be assigned are to be announced shortly. Motion picture rights to "Through the Breakers," an Owen Davis stage play, and a magazine story by Howard Rockey entitled, "The Chorus Kid" were also acquired by Mr. Sax.

Vitaphone Continues to Sign Up Artists

Additional musicians and entertainers who have signed contracts to appear and record for the Vitaphone are Phil Ohman and Victor Arden, pianists and vaudeville stars, who will bring their double piano act into the Vitaphone studio; Tom Brown and the original six Brown Brothers, saxaphone sextette, which has accepted an engagement; the Diplomats, who have been furnishing music at the Knickerbocker Hotel, and Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, who have already recorded a group of numbers for the Vitaphone, but who will do two more numbers.

Inspiration Pictures Elects Officers

At Inspiration Pictures' annual April election of officers, Walter Camp was re-elected to the post of president. J. Boyce-Smith, who already holds the offices of vice-president and secretary, succeeded Mr. Camp as treasurer. Frederick H. Stokes was again chosen for the positions of second vice-president, assistant treasurer and assistant secretary. The office of general manager was discontinued, while that of production manager was added. Emil Jensen will continue to act as sales manager.

Ken Maynard Starts Work on "The Devil's Saddle"

Ken Maynard began working last week on his new Western film for First National entitled "The Devil's Saddle." The story is a Charles R. Rogers production and is an adaptation by Marian Jackson of the magazine story of the same name by Kenneth Perkins. Al Rogell will direct Maynard following the completion of "The Sunset Derby." The Western star's latest, "The Land Beyond Law" is now in the cutting room.

"Time to Love" Title for Ray Griffith Comedy

The new title selected for Raymond Griffith's picture now in production at the Paramont studio is "Time to Love." It replaces "Dying for Love," a tentative title. Production was started this week with Frank Tuttle directing. William Marshall is the photographer. Supporting Griffith are William Powell, Vera Vorenina, Josef Swickhart, Mario Carillo, Pierre de Ramey, Helene Giere and Alfred Sabato.

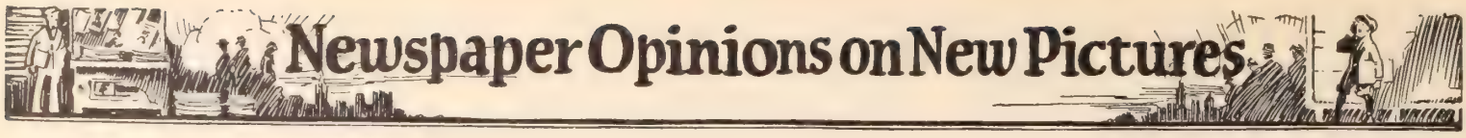
Ralph Block will have supervision over the preparation and filming of the story and will act as editor-in-chief.

Educational Has Thirty-Three Reels for May

Seven two-reel comedies, five animated cartoons, two current events [illegible] ties in addition to the eight regular monthly releases of Kinograms and Burr reels in all, make up the Educational program of releases for the month of May.

Included in the list are "Breezing Along," with Lloyd Hamilton, "Queer Ducks," featuring Jack Duffy; "Atta Baby," a "Big Boy" vehicle; "Circus Capers," starring "Poodles" Hanneford; "No Spanking," a Dorothy Devore comedy, "Who's Afraid," starring Lupino Lane; "Tie That Bull," a Bobby Vernon number. The novelty reels are "Growing Money," and "Mystic India," two Curiosities, and a Bruce novelty scenic, "Gray Days—A Dash Through Hawaii—Hello Hilo." "Auntie's Ante," featuring Wallace Lupino, and "A Gym Dandy," with Phil Dunham, are the two Cameos for May. "A Scenic Treasure Chest," a Hodge-Podge subject, two Life cartoons, "North of Nowhere" and "Welsh Rabbit"; "Felix the Cat in Eye Jinks," "Felix the Cat in Roameo," and "Felix the Cat Ducks His Duty," are the three Sullivan cartoons for the month.



Bray Off for Coast to Complete New Program

J. R. Bray, president of Bray Productions, Inc., departed this week for the Coast on his regular annual trip. He will complete his line-up of product for the new season and while there expects to see the first of his new comedies for the 1927-28 season. Mr. Bray has arranged for the production of a series of two-reel comedies which a national distributing organization will handle, the name of the organization to be announced shortly. While in California, Mr. Bray will also arrange for the production of two features for distribution through one of the larger national distributing agencies.

New Paramount Contract for Dorothy Arzner

As a result of her direction of "Fashions for Women," Dorothy Arzner has been signed to a new long-term contract by the Paramount Company. She will direct "Ten Modern Commandments," Esther Ralston's second starring picture, on which production is to begin in the immediate future.

"Slide, Kelly, Slide" — Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Cincinnati

Times Star: "A comedy hit. . . . William Haines again comes to front. . . . Outstanding in excellence of cast. . . . Authentic scenes from world series makes picture realistic."

Post: "Made for baseball bugs. Those who observed it smelled again aroma of peanuts, heard whack of hickory and saw winning run come dusting over pan in ninth. And did those bugs enjoy it? They devoured it, peanuts, hickory, dust and all."

"Alaskan Adventures" — Pathe, Grand Rapids

Press: "Nature probably has never had in movies as sensational a presentation as in Alaskan films. Popularity of this film proves that sheer beauty, wonder of strange creatures, primitive and real, can be as exciting as any he-man and flapper romance. Nature has every mood that greatest of human actors can claim; is as expressive, as fearsome or light, as villainous or comic. But it is also the most temperamental actor known. Only most patient and skillful and adventurous photographer can make a true and really vivid record of its drama."

"Slide, Kelly, Slide" — Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Cleveland

Plain Dealer: "Great stuff. . . . Don't forget that 'Slide, Kelly, Slide,' unless I'm now qualified for the pension list, will be among the best ten of 1927. . . . It's great, that's what it is. . . . Emotion, suspense, heart interest and smartness are so cleverly interwoven that the picture is without a barren spot. . . . It seems almost to reach perfection in pace and interest . . . one of the finest and brightest sets of titles a picture has had in a long time."

News: "Whether or not you are baseball fan you will get lots of fun. Best baseball story that has ever been filmed. . . . Quite as interesting as character study of boob by best boob actor in business and one of greatest finds for such roles in cinema history. . . . Will give you good hearty laugh."

Times: "Haines reaches heights few have attained. . . . If you miss 'Slide, Kelly, Slide' you'll be missing one of ten best pictures of year. . . . It is one of swellest pieces of celluloid entertainment here in 1927, filled with sweet sentiment, good baseball story, and whole thing woven into carefully timed, excellently titled and extraordinarily well acted photoplay."

"White Gold" — Producers Distributing Corp., Figueroa Theatre, Los Angeles

Examiner: "Has tensity of a Eugene O'Neill drama and absorbing interest of a Thomas Hardy novel . . . a curious combination of each, defying, in its own way, all the accepted standards of the movies. . . Because of his sublime courage, William K. Howard has made an exceptionally fine picture. Miss Goudal is superb."

Times: "Is different . . . interest does not lag . . . is without doubt, Miss Goudal's best performance and evinces a marked advance in her ability to delineate and evoke genuine feeling. . . . 'White Gold' has sincere quality as well as unusually strong story"

Herald: "Should inaugurate new genre among films of so-called Western variety. Is unique. Reveals rare intelligence behind megaphone. . . . Jetta Goudal is seen at her loveliest . . . her flaring rebellion at end is fine example of effect through restraint. Kenneth Thomson plays difficult part . . . consumately."

Express: "Howard unfolds with masterful steps story of the lives of four people on lonely ranch, where jealousy wreaks its inevitable fruition as forthrightly as in Greek tragedy . . . with superior guidance Jetta Goudal rises in this picture to heights of emotional expression that will compel her recognition as one of most skillful portrayers of feminine motives that studios have yet produced. . . . If you are discriminating . . . admire skill in story telling and can hold your breath for considerable periods, 'White Gold' will send you out an enthusiast for motion pictures."

"Long Pants," First National, Mark Strand Theatre, New York City

American: "Perhaps most amusing comedy Harry Langdon has ever done. Packed with laughs, spontaneous result of many clever gags which so fit in with action that it is impossible to think of them as being planted. It's rare comedy treat, thought of which will keep you in fine spirits for days."

Evening World: "If you miss an opportunity to see Harry Langdon on screen you are missing chance to see Charlie Chaplin's natural successor in making. Mr. Langdon literally takes this picture in both hands, shakes it violently and brings out many a hearty laugh and inward chuckle."

Morning World: "Most successful of all vagrant little drolls who have come forward to offer to devotees of cinema a visual substitute for . . . Charlie Chaplin. It really is a pretty funny picture."

Evening Sun: "Each of sequences is exceptionally long, but each permits inimitable Harry every chance to run through his tricks."

Tribune: "Is terribly funny. The beautiful blase lady is played by Alma Bennett. She really is great."

Morning Telegraph: "Far and away best picture of week and one of best comedies thus far this year. Neither ribald nor uproarious, full to overflowing with gentle humor, calculated to keep any audience dazzled with joy at mirth-making episodes.'

"Mr. Wu" — Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Allen Theatre, Cleveland

Plain Dealer: "Ordinarily good melodrama is made wondrous story with charm and fantasy of oriental fairy story. Precision and deftness in its movements. . . . Subtle power in unfoldment of narrative. . . . Power felt even at very outset. So really unreal and so cleverly handled and expertly played that it easily comes into class of outstanding productions. . . . Chaney played with his tested skill."

News: "Thrilling tale. . . . Scenes that rate from splendid to gorgeous. . . . Drama in most emphatic sense of word. . . . Chaney gives his customary splendid rendition. . . . Real honors we would give to Miss Adoree. . . . More typically Chinese in her make-up and features than Anna May Wong and other native girls in cast, she injects element of wistfulness that wins sympathy of audience. . . . If there are any better actresses than Renee Adoree we have not met them. . . . 'Mr. Wu' intensely dramatic, excellent picture. . . ."

"The Price of Honor"—Columbia, B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre, New. York

Daily News: "More than average screen stuff. It starts off splendidly, teeming with suspense, and peps up considerably at termination. Dorothy Revier gets better with each succeeding picture. William V. Mong's performance is praiseworthy and Malcolm McGregor serves leading man purpose well."

American: "An intriguing murder yarn. Story is well thought out, interesting and convincing. Direction is good, continuity smooth, and camera work effective. First acting honors go to William V. Mong and Gustav von Seyffertitz. Dorothy Revier makes pleasing and attractive heroine and Malcolm McGregor is handsome hero. It is the fourth good production this company has turned out in succession."

"Mr. Wu" — Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Detroit

Times: "Chaney's characterization notable addition to his extensive gallery. . . . 'Mr. Wu' vivid drama, framed in spectacular and exotic setting. . . . Nigh seems to have had fortunes at his disposal in making. . . . Choice of supporting players admirable."

Free Press: "There are cold creepings up small of back for those who have not yet seen Chaney in 'Mr. Wu'. . . . All eerieness of Chinese, all cryptic traditions, all exotic manners of that ancient race are brought into full play in this remarkable piece. . . . Chaney upholds his reputation. . . . Chinese mysticism radiates from every scene. . . ."

News: "Stirring oriental tale. . . . Right up to Chaney standard. . . . Film supplies plentifully grim, foreboding atmosphere. . . . Always presentiment that something spooky is going to happen and something does happen. . . ."

"The Monkey Talks" — Fox Films, Hippodrome Theatre, New York City

World: "This is good, stirring screen play, admirably produced, one which will be success wherever it is shown because it is made of stuff which never fails at box office."

News: "Choice bit of cinema of sawdust provides excellent hour of pictorial entertainment. Talks for itself where enjoyable movies are concerned."

American: "Story with idea. Much to recommend it. Fine photography, good direction, worthwhile acting and last, but indeed, not least, original story."

Evening World: "Very successful play that had good run in New York two years ago returned in picture form which is as acceptable as play. Mr. Lerner's portrayal of monkey was astounding. Olive Borden looked very pretty."

Telegraph: "Action of opus never strays from circus and footlights, both of which are rich dramatic material for camera. . . . Jacques Lerner's impersonation of super-monkey with a human brain could not be surpassed."

Sun: "Battle between man garbed as chimpanzee and real ape quite thrilling. Lon Chaney's professional pride will assuredly be severely ruffled when he sees M. Lerner playing an ape as well as he ever could. Olive Borden is pretty and coy as heroine."

"Flesh and the Devil"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati

Post: "Title allures, stars allure, reputation allures. We accord it nothing but praise, noisy, sophomoric, blatant praise. If print were articulate we should drill these tiers of type into cheering sections, roaring out rahs for the narrative itself, for the expert and brilliant directing by Clarence Brown, for the acting of the entire cast."

Tribune: "In many respects most creditable of all Gilbert successes. . . . Strong story, coherent and rapid, vital in struggle and admirably projected. . . . Cast far above average. . . . After last week's treatise on "It" Great Garbo presents most convincing demonstration of exactly what Elinor Glyn was talking about."

Enquirer: "Will rank high among motion pictures of year. . . . Not a false note in production. . . . Holds one enthralled and delighted from opening shot to final close-up. . . . Marvelously smooth. . . . Characters are creatures of flesh and blood. . . . Skillful is photography. . . . Settings both authentic and picturesque. . . . When reviewing production like this critic feels inadequacy of adjectives. . . . Must be seen to be appreciated."

Times-Star: "Fine treatment and expert acting. . . . Singularly impressive. . . . May best be described as new wine in old bottles. . . . Should rank with the most popular pictures of the season."

Love Makes 'Em Wild

Fine Audience Picture With Lots of "Kick"

Reviewed by Raymond Ganly

ONE of the best comedies that Fox has released. Being the story of Willie the Worm—the recipient of all the "passing the bucks"—it contains a quantity of humor and satisfying appeal. The fun is broad, apparent, undeceived and hits right home. Its complications, near-catastrophe and denouement are all breezy in movement and for those who are skeptical about the "names" in the cast, their drawing power, how they look in the marquee lights we heartily endorse those same "names" as ample proof of their capabilities is assimilated in these five reels or so. Stalking through the film, displaying his facial expressions and ability as a comedian, is the figure of Arthur Housman. Though he is really listed as one of the principal supporting players he contributes the finest performance in the picture and proves that he is one of the best comedians on the Fox lot.

The central figure of the worm and his turning is the hub around which the story revolves. Believing that he has but a few days to live because of a supposedly weak heart, the hero concludes that a wild and riotous life is logical for one whose days are numbered. With Housman become his attached intimate, they throw up their jobs, register at the Ritz as men of leisure, the hero spending his savings like water. From a worm Willie has developed into a roaring lion; he develops a superiority complex in place of his old feeling of abused inferiority. One by one he vanquishes those who had ill-treated him and his "book of grudges" becomes a book of squared accounts.

The cast: John Harron, Sally Phipps, Arthur Housman, J. Farrell McDonald, Ben Bard, Florence Gilbert. Directed by Albert Kay.

THEME: An office worm turns and has quite an experience in the process.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Housman's comedy. The worm's renunciation of work and Housman's escapades with him. Willie's payment of debts.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up the wildness and impetuosity of youth and its oft-times comical results.

DRAWING POWER: Good.

Produced and distributed by Fox Film Corporation. Length, 5,508 feet. Released March, 1927.

Scenes from "No Man's Law," a Pathe feature

The Brute

Good Audience Picture; Obvious But Interesting

Reviewed by Harold Flavin

THE fans should like this production as it contains those ingredients which appeal to the majority of movie-goers—action, a handsome hero, a pretty girl, good atmosphere and comedy of the slapstick variety. The story is one of the old reliables, that of the love of a cowboy for a pretty girl and his temporary disillusionment when he discovers she is a dance-hall entertainer; but there was a reason, so they go into the usual clinch at the end of the footage. One's interest is centered, not so much in the story and its unfolding, but rather in the individual incidents, which generate sufficient action to override the triteness in theme. While "The Brute" is a good box-office title, it seems rather inappropriate because, in the first place, we don't like to think of our heroes as being brutal and, in the second place, the star only manages to look stern when called on to register his alleged brutish side.

The action is rather slow in the first half, but it gathers momentum towards the middle and there's quite a bit of excitement packed into the latter reels, with the tapping of a wild oil well for an anti-climax and some very good atmosphere in the dance-hall scenes. Leila Hyams' full-face shots contribute that which constitutes her reason for being cast, but her profiles are not so good; Paul Nicholson makes a good bad-man saloon-keeper and the comedy of Clyde Cook, the slapstick variety, should amuse the not-too-discriminating. Continuity and direction okay.

The Cast: Monte Blue, Leila Hyams, Clyde Cook, Carroll Nye, Paul Nicholson. Story by W. Douglas Newton. Scenario by Harvey Gates and direction of Irving Cummings.

THEME: Melodrama. Cowboy is disillusioned when he discovers girl he loves works in dance-hall, but denouement proves she had good reason and they become reconciled.

PRODUCTION ANGLES: The dance-hall scenes and the capping of the oil well. The several floggings.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Use press book suggestions, which are excellent. Play up cast.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Length, 6,901 feet. Released April 30, 1927.

Irish Destiny

Has Undoubted Appeal for Irish People

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THERE is no question but that this production will draw enthusiastic commendation from all people of Irish extraction. It was made by an Irishman, with authentic scenes in Ireland, and it is enacted by a Gaelic cast. Likewise the story is mostly fact and only partly fiction, the latter injected to supply the love interest to enhance the appeal. The story is based on the attempt of the Irish to become a free state and their success to the extent that Ireland is now an autonomous government. The incidents, which are said to be historically correct, occur during the years 1920, '21 and '22, when the Irish Republican Army attempted to drive out of Ireland the English troops and officials. The scenes of the "ould country" will probably bring a tear to the eyes of Irish spectators as they did to the audience in the theatre in which the production was reviewed.

From a production angle the picture is pretty bad. The lighting is very poor in spots, the photography is hazy and the titling would stand improvement. But the technical faults of the production are overridden by the appeal of the story. Just why Peggy O'Rorke is starred, instead of Denis O'Shea, is hard to understand; the girl gives a fairly good performance but she has few scenes, the majority being devoted to O'Shea's work. The story cannot be considered as propaganda because the Ireland-England difficulty has been settled; it is simply a picture tale of the stormy events of that period.

The Cast: Denis O'Shea, Una Shiels, Kit O'Maille, Clifford Penbroke, Mary Connor, Bryan McGowan, Cathal McGarvey, Peggy O'Rorke, Val Vausden. Written, produced and directed by Dr. I. J. Eppel.

THEME: Historical drama with slight love interest. Ireland's attempt to become free state.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Picturesque views and historic spots in Ireland. The appeal of the story.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Make a play for the Irish.

DRAWING POWER: It's a great play for the Irish.

Produced and distributed by Dr. I. J. Eppel.
Length, about seven reels. Released—extended runs.

No Man's Law

A Wild Stallion and an Exciting Story

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THIS story smacks of the primitive. The locale is that of the wild, desolate and rugged Death Valley of California and of the time we are speaking the will or law of no one man predominated there. Reduced to its bare essentials the tale concerns a girl and her father, their gold mine, a friendly stallion who roams the neighborhood near their homestead, and two bad men who invade their domain bringing with them a foreboding of evil. Even though its climax is a little long in coming, and too much detail is gone into so that its swing and punch is slowed up, it is a good box office attraction for most any type of house. Intelligently directed, "No Man's Law" has been cast in the mould of realism; it comes out as an authentic Western and does not parade copperplate cowboy heroes whose morality is impeccable and whose tidiness is never mussed.

Rex, his equine companions, Lady and the two burros are not seen any too often. Rex is an arresting figure, intelligent to the nth degree. Theodore Von Eltz is extremely good as the bad man turned good and Oliver Hardy gives more than you could ask for in villainy. Barbara Kent is a charming bit of femininity with a most ingratiating smile. Jimmy Finlayson as her father supplies the comedy.

The Cast: Rex (Horse), Barbara Kent, Theodore Von Eltz, Oliver Hardy and Jimmy Finlayson. Fred Jackman directed from story by F. Richard Jones.

THEME: A horse and a reformed bad man combine to defeat avaricious villain who wants girl and her gold mine.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The enmity between the two bad 'uns. Their feelings towards the girl The game of checkers. Rex as the protector.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: All the regular paraphernalia for Westerns. The popularity of Rex. Death Valley as a spot of interest. Bill as the horse star's best vehicle.

DRAWING POWER: Good.

Produced by F. Richard Jones. Distributed by Pathe.
Length, 6,903 feet. Released April 24, 1927.

Short Subjects and Serials

"Jane Missed Out"
(Universal—Two Reels)

A LOVESICK hero lovesick on the affection of his boss' daughter and she as inaccessible as a rainbow because of her lion of a father who will not be bearded. There were possibilities in a structure like this, but this comedy does not realize them. Instead it shows the hero mooning around, the heroine exhibiting her petulance and the father braying and howling like a man possessed. Earl McCarthy, except for his shyness and general stupidity, does not make great headway in the gag and comedy interludes. The brunette whom he adores is unresponsive. But he captures her eventually; his feat really due to a taxi driver to whom he owed money. The moral to be drawn according to the girl's father, is that the successful business man is the one who marries his boss' daughter. Not so good.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"The Ore Raiders"
(Universal-Mustang—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

LESS than the usual interesting story that characterizes a Universal-Mustang release is one of the shortcomings of "The Ore Raiders," in which Director Wyler bent his energies to make a story of a Texas Ranger (Fred Humes) compact and alive. This it was not easy to do because much of the stuff that it shows is old, stereotyped; in some spots it has the earmarks of studio bunk. But there is some compensation in the dashing horsemanship of Humes and his encounters, singlehanded, against the gang he is after. The girl in the case is not so much except for good looks; she lends her decorativeness to the scenes, that is all. In the story her father is implicated in the crookedness of the aforesaid gang, but Humes sees to it that the real violators of the law are punished. Wedding bells for him and the girl.

"Smother O' Mine"
(Universal—One Reel)

THE amiable face of Charles Puffy wears a scowl in "Smother O' Mine" and this because the happiness of his marital life is clouded by a veritable windbag of an old lady whom he brought home after witnessing a belligerent bystander strike her because of her nagging. The gentle old lady's volubility proves disconcerting to Puffy and his wife and he blows up entirely when the old lady hints that there is something suspicious about his business transactions of late evenings. Only fairly entertaining.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Felix the Cat in Sax Appeal"
(Sullivan-Educational—One Reel)

ANOTHER amusing number of the Felix series and this time the poor cat is deprived of his sleep by the wailing notes of a saxaphone played by his boss. The composition of these cartoons reveals great ingenuity on the part of the artists who must lay awake nights planning stunts for the cat. In this number, Felix, having stolen the sax from his boss, buries it, but a burrowing mole discovers the mouthpiece and as a result Felix is regaled with underground music. This is only one of the many entertaining bits of business introduced in the reel.

It is to laugh long and loud.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

Pathe Review No. 18
(Pathe—One Reel)

QUITE interesting is this current issue of the Review which shows the "Tears of Pele," one of the waterfalls of Hawaii; Italy's method of coining money revealed by scenes in the mint of that country, and a pictorial interpretation of verses from "The Death of the Flowers," a poem by William Cullen Bryant, which is in Pathecolor. The latter portion of the reel is devoted to a motion picture interview with a grizzly bear.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Smith's Kindergarten"
(Pathe—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

ANYONE not laughing at this comedy can be considered as utterly devoid of a sense of humor for it is one of the funniest ever produced. The antics of Mary Ann Jackson, a two- or three-year-old child, and her equally youthful buddy, Buddy Nelson, should keep any type of audience in a gale of laughter from the start to the finish of the picture. Until this comedy was screened Mary Ann hadn't had such "Fat" parts, but let's hope they'll continue to write them in for her in the same measure as meted out in this vehicle for she certainly deserves plenty of footage.

Not forgetting the rest of the cast, all sterling troupers, Raymond McKee, Ruth Hiatt and Andy Clyde or the director, who isn't credited but who deserves it. Mother and daddy dress baby for school and then the fun begins with baby getting herself all mussed up; Buddy, too, is started to school, but he rebels and when finally dragged to the kindergarten makes life miserable for everyone in the cast.

"Naughty Boy"
(Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

LUPINO LANE gives a clever exhibition of his ability both as pantomimist and acrobat in his latest starring vehicle in which he is called on to play a little boy role in addition to that of grown-up. Both his antics and facial expressions cause a number of laughs and, as a whole, the comedy rates high in entertainment value.

He had to become a little boy in order to help daddy conceal his age from his fiancee and the mirthful complications arose when Lupino discovered daddy's fiancee was the mother of the girl with whom he was in love. Needless to say, Lupino won out.

The supporting cast includes Kathryn McGuire, Robert Graves, Blanche Payson and Wallace Lupino. Charles Lamont directed.

"Ginger and Genius"
(Sportlight-Pathe—One Reel)

GRANTLAND RICE'S latest contribution has a two-fold selling value as, in addition to his pictorial treatise on sports, he shows some of the great celebrities of the day indulging in their athletic hobbies. Literary geniuses, notables of stage and screen, artists, architects, musicians and sport leaders are shown playing hand-ball, tennis, golf, football and other forms of pleasant exercise.

If they don't want to see the sports, they have the celebrities to look at.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"A Fair Exchange"
Aesop's Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

AL FALFA this week trades his dilapidated flivver for a haunted farmhouse, thereby promoting much trouble for himself and an equal amount of amusement for those witnessing those troubles. And how they pile up. Having made the trade he enters his house and everything in it falls to pieces at the slightest touch; but the flivver's new owner finds he has no bargain as the car bucks, rolls over and lays down, and is possessed of all the eccentricities attributed to this popular brand of automobile in song and story.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"The Speed Hound"
(Bray—Two Reels)

THIS comedy is not so much as a laugh-provoker, even though it has in its cast such comedy veterans as Wanda Wiley and Lewis Sargent. It is one of the Fizzical Culture series and was directed by Al Herman. The usual college locale, athletics and secret societies provide the props on which it rests. There are fair damsels practicing their skill at archery, youths striving valiantly to lower track records, and other stuff, which though familiar is reliable. The hero can establish a new record for speed when the girl gently urges him onward with a well-aimed arrow and she sees to it (with her bow and arrow) that he wins the big race at the end of the picture. An initiation sequence is comical as it shows the hero, on roller skates, falling all over himself at a dance and cutting a ridiculous figure in general.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"The Draw-Back"
(Tuxedo-Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THIS is quite an amusing burlesque on football with Johnny Arthur playing the role of the hero who saves the game two minutes before the whistle. It contains quite a number of funny gags of the slapstick variety with Johnny in the midst of every scrimmage.

The story tells of the farmer boy who enters college and goes through the usual hazing process administered by the sophomores; later he becomes a sub on the football team and is instrumental in saving his team from defeat.

Pretty Kathryn McGuire appears opposite Arthur and the cast includes Wallace Lupino and Al Thompson. Norman Taurog did a capable job of directing.

"Hot Soup"
(Cameo-Educational—One Reel)

WELL-TIMED gags, fast action and comical comedy by the comedians are the highlights of this short length fun-film which achieves its purpose, laughs. A ham actor and a dwarf, broke, try to get two meals for the price of one by posing as mother and child, which attempt is unsuccessful. They try again with the dwarf this time posing as a dog, but again luck is against them and they are hauled away in the dog-catcher's wagon.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

Will Rogers Heads List of Pathe Shorts

The third detour in the Will Rogers pilgrimage which Pathe is releasing is the top-notch release on that company's list of short subject releases for the week of May 1. The Rogers number is titled "Will Rogers in Paris" and other releases on the same program include "Smith's Kindergarten," featuring Raymond McKee, Ruth Hiatt and Mary Ann Jackson and produced by Mack Sennett; "Ginger and Genius," a Grantland Rice Sportlight; "The Heiress of Craghaven," the fourth episode of the serial, "Melting Millions"; Pathe Review Number 18 composed of "The Tears of Pele," "Money to Burn," "Death of the Flowers" and "An Unusual Interview"; "A Fair Exchange," an Aesop Film Fable, Topics of the Day Number 18 and numbers 38 and 39 of the Pathe News.

Reports from Key Cities

Brief Reviews of Box Office Conditions at Leading Theatres About the Country

New York City

IT is scarcely necessary to say that last week, being Holy Week, business along Broadway was very bad. Good Friday was somewhat better than expected, but no one expected a great deal on the way, and so no one was disappointed.

The Roxy did a week's business on "White Gold" that would have seemed to justify a hold-over, but it was taken off to make way for "Ankles Preferred," a Fox picture, which was doing so well this week that a second week was assured. Fox pictures will rule the Roxy screen, for the next few months at least, judging from announcements.

The Paramount did the lowest business in some time last week on "Afraid to Love." Apparently the management took for granted that business would be bad, and made no special effort to attract patronage in the way of stage numbers or supporting attractions.

"Metropolis" ended its six-week run at the Rialto with an excellent figure, in view of the week, making an average weekly gross for the run of close to $25,000.

The Capitol was somewhat below average for the week, "Frisco Sally Levy" doing less than $50,000 for the seven-day period.

The Strand had a week which was not exceptionally good, but which was an improvement over the very weak showing the week before. The attraction was "The Notorious Lady."

The Colony, with "Matinee Ladies," and the Cameo, with a revival of "Monte Cristo," had fair business only. The two-dollar attractions all fell off heavily.

Albany

HOLY WEEK proved a happy disappointment to the owners of motion picture theatres in Albany and Troy, the business running far ahead of any similar week in the history of the houses. While the same week last year had shown an improvement over the similar period of the year before, last week was far ahead in receipts of 1926. The Mark Strand, for instance, featured Adolphe Menjou in "Evening Clothes," and four presentations on the Vitaphone. Receipts on the opening day approximated $1,400, which is extremely good for Monday at this house, or would have been before the advent of the Vitaphone, which is now packing the theatre afternoon and evening.

The weather continued cool and this no doubt augmented business. At the Leland, "Love's Blindness," running the week, played to excellent business although there were no standing crowds such as characterized Lon Chaney's "Tell It to The Marines" and other superfeatures. At the Mark Ritz, "The Monkey Talks" ran to fine business day in and day out. The Clinton Square, continuing its double feature first runs, did well with "Fools of Fashion" and "A Man of Quality."

In Troy the Troy Theatre split its week, "An Affair of the Follies" running for the first four days and judging from the business, pleasing to the theatre crowds. The last three days of the week saw "The Monkey Talks" running to only fair business, but in this respect it should be borne in mind that Holy Week is probably more generally observed in Troy than Albany. The Vitaphone was also split with two presentations for the first four days and two for the last three. At the Lincoln, Corinne Griffith in "Three Hours," did only fair business.

Kansas City

ALMOST a solid week of rain injured business only slightly in Kansas City first run houses down town this week, the only marked shortage in attendance being noticed at the matinees, rain keeping most women shoppers at home.

At the Newman, Douglas MacLean in "Let It Rain" did a good week's business, drawing well from military patronage at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., a suburb. "The Flaming Forest" at the Royal did not come up to the average attendance mark of most long-run feature pictures which have been shown at that house. Clara Bow in "The Plastic Age," despite the fact that the picture was played on a return engagement at the Liberty, drew well all week. "The Wreck" at the Pantages did only fair, attendance being slightly below normal, while "Fighting Love" at the Globe played to an average week's attendance.

Memphis

DESPITE the usual slump in theatrical business Holy Week and frequently intermittent torrents of rain, the three big theatres opened Monday to fair business. Corinne Griffith in "Three Hours" opened the Palace Publix house to almost capacity but the business fell off as the week wore on.

Reginald Denny in "The Cheerful Fraud" assisted by a bangup vaudeville program sent Pantages off to a flying start but rain and Holy Week hit the Main Street house a wallop later in the week. The same may be said of Loew's State. Mae Murray in "Altars of Desire" added to the drawing power of a well balanced vaudeville bill.

The Strand reports business keeping up well with Richard Barthelmess in "The White Black Sheep." Milton Sills in "The Sea Tiger," is billed for the last half. The Majestic cleaned up the first of the week with "McFadden's Flats" (second run, having played Loew's Palace several weeks ago) and "The Winning of Barbara Worth," the last half (also a second run from Loew's Palace).

Seattle

A COMBINATION of fine weather and stormy weather during the last week failed to have much effect upon show business in general in this city, and local houses chalked up one of the best weeks in recent months. Outstanding in gross business was Lon Chaney's "Mr. Wu" which played to very large houses at the Fifth Avenue Theatre in conjunction with an elaborate "Mardi Gras Idea" on the stage, and the return of Ollie Wallace conducting the Fifth Avenue's Syncopating Soloists.

Second in receipts was "Resurrection" at the United Artists Theatre, playing the first week of a two-week engagement. An added attraction at this house was the appearance of George Lipschultz, Columbia recording artist and former orchestra conductor at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, as the director of the United Artists Orchestra.

Vitaphone and "Don Juan" at Hamrick's Blue Mouse Theatre continued to click at a good rate for the third week. This house has established a record of a waiting line for twenty-one consecutive days for both evening performances. The present program is scheduled to run five weeks.

At the Coliseum, "Altars of Desire" did a very pleasing business, in conjunction with the appearance of Coster and Hewlett, Victor recording vocalists, in a series of semi-popular songs. "The Love Thrill" at the Columbia Theatre attracted average houses, as did "Money to Burn" at the Embassy.

Pantages, in conjunction with its vaudeville program, offered "The Music Master," but business for the week was reported to be noticeably off. Hamrick's Egyptian continued to walk away with suburban house honors, using "It" to excellent business in spite of the fact that the same picture did a remarkable downtown business at the Fifth Avenue Theatre only a few weeks ago.

San Francisco

IN spite of the fact that during the week there were two freak storms, the downtown motion picture houses did very satisfactory business last week. The St. Francis showed the war picture, "Tell It to The Marines" and for a couple of days did exceptionally well, due partly to the fact that some officers made it a point to see this picture, for just ten years ago the boys were called to arms. The comedy "Special Delivery," which was featured at the California Theatre, drew a crowd. Part of this crowd was drawn because of the presentation act, "The Doll Dance," a hefty revue in six acts of music and stepping, produced by Jack Partington.

"McFadden's Flats," shown at Loew's Warfield Theatre, drew a very big crowd. Fanchon & Marco's presentation act "In Dutch," drew well as did the antics of those who took part in the act, as did the "Sunkist Singers and Dancers."

"Afraid to Love" was considered a picture of great popularity and those who are anxious to see love pictures and scenes, crowded the California Theatre where this was shown. "Three Bad Men," was shown at the Rivoli Theatre to a fair attendance. "The Denver Dude" proved popular at the Cameo Theatre and "Love's Game" was popular at the Golden Gate.

The residential houses did well, Nat Holt's Wigwam Theatre doing exceptionally well with "Michael Strogoff." Levin's Coliseum Theatre drew a crowd with "The Lady in Ermine."

St. Louis

HOLY WEEK just about put the St. Louis theatres on the ropes the week ending on April 15. Business was off, very much off, at both the first run palaces and the neighborhood theatres of St. Louis the past week.

Terminating on Good Friday was the worst run of weather St. Louis has had in many moons and it took a full moon on the sixteenth to bring a change. So the motion picture proprietors both large and small are hoping for better days in the weeks to come.

"Fashions for Women" was on the screen at the Ambassador. It was in keeping with the pre-Easter time, remindful of the Easter parade that was to come. Eddie Cantor in "Special Delivery" bucked the rain at the Missouri in fairly good style. But it didn't break any records.

The Grand Central with "Easy Pickings" had a fair play.

The St. Louis, featuring Marie Prevost in "Getting Gertie's Garter" splashed through to a fair week, while downtown "The Belle of Broadway" featuring Betty Compson landed its share of what business there was to be had.

Canada

EASTER shopping and Holy Week observance had their effect upon patronage at the theatres in Ottawa, Ontario, during the week of April 11, particularly for matinee performances. Attendance was poor on Good Friday afternoon because of church services and also because of the fact that practically all local stores were open until 6 P. M.

The "flash" of the week was "The Show" at the Regent which was both liked and disliked. There were spots where there had been evident deletions by the censors. "The Canyon of Light" at B. F. Keith's drew the Tom Mix crowd but business was not as heavy as usual. "Don't Tell the Wife" did not cause much excitement at the Imperial which has been in a slump in recent weeks. "Winners of the Wilderness" was not the usual type of picture for the Centre Theatre and patronage was fair.

Returns were fairly good at both the Rex and Fern Theatres, neighborhood houses, because both were playing the last chapter of serials, "Bar C Mystery" concluding at the Rex and "Strings of Steel" at the Fern. The Fern also had second run of "Kid Brother," and the Rex had second run of "The Unknown Soldier." "Laddie" drew steady patronage at the Columbia. Business was off at the Francais Theatre because of Lenten influence among the French-Canadians, the features here being "Duchess of Buffalo," "Kosher Kitty Kelly" and "Spook Ranch."

Over in Hull, Quebec, the Laurier Theatre had a good run with "Flesh and the Devil." "Paint and Powder" was fair at the Eden. Hull theatres were closed on Good Friday.

Baltimore

THE week beginning Monday, April 11, with Good Friday falling on the 15th, proved a very poor one for moving picture theatres in Baltimore with two exceptions. That week, recognized generally as the worst in the year for theatres and movie playhouses, lived up to its name very nicely.

There were two bright spots however in Loew's Century and Valencia theatres, the former having Bebe Daniels in "A Kiss In a Taxi" the latter playing "The Love of Sunya" with Gloria Swanson. They are reported to have done very good considering that it was Holy Week.

Most of the managers at the other playhouses expressed business as being "rotten" but from a personal observation, it did not appear to be as low as that, for each house was carrying a fair crowd considering the week except one, when visited.

The Garden had "The Bachelor's Baby" with five acts of vaudeville; Keith's Hippodrome had "The Sensation Seekers" with five acts of vaudeville; the New Theatre had Laura La Plante in "The Love Thrill"; the Rivoli had "Ritzy"; the Warners' Metropolitan had "What Every Girl Should Know" and the Embassy had "Rubber Tires" which went worse than rotten at that playhouse.

Portland

BRIGHT weather throughout the week rather discouraged business at the theatres.

"Mr. Wu" at the Broadway created a new record for that house. Lon Chaney happened into the theatre on the opening night, but would not appear on the stage. Fanchon & Marco's "Golf" idea was received just moderately. Not a knockout, by a long way.

Rivoli played "Afraid to Love" to fair business. Fans like the picture, but newcomers couldn't see what it was all about. Peoples had "Mother" and with the aid of judicious exploitation got very good returns. Picture very well liked. Blue Mouse still continues to draw with "Don Juan" and Vitaphone. Management thinks this picture will go for at least six weeks.

"Long Pants" at the Liberty got good business and was well liked. "Taxi! Taxi!" was well liked but suffered somewhat from Lent and fair weather.

Philadelphia

WHILE Holy Week made considerable inroads upon picture business in some houses yet other stands along Market Street seemed to profit very materially by the fact that most of the city's picture patronage migrated to the shopping district and patronized the "grind" houses downtown, leaving most of the neighborhood houses high and dry for the week.

The Stanley Theatre did fairly well with "Afraid to Love," featuring Florence Vidor, backed up by Waring's Pennsylvanians. The Stanton had a very fine week with "Children of Divorce," considering that it was Holy Week. "The Taxi Dancer" at the Aredia just about [illegible] along, while the Karlton with "The Perfect Sap" did a little better. "Casey at the Bat" at the Palace had only a fortnight week, while Buster Keaton in "The General" at the Victoria. [illegible] the Fox, the first time this has ever happened, got away to a big week. The Fox did well with "Love Makes 'Em Wild" and a good list of presentations, including Sissle and Blake. "What Price Glory" is still holding up the capacity at the Fox Locust.

Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE exhibitors expected a decided slump during this week, the week before Easter, and were most gratifyingly disappointed in their expectations. Business was good, surprisingly good, far above last year's receipts for the same week. The weather decidedly was not an ally of good business, but it was typically April.

Among the first run houses down town, the Alhambra showing the "Love Thrill" was an exceedingly popular place. "The Sea Tiger" drew crowds to the Wisconsin where the stage presentation, "Ave Maria" was greatly appreciated. "Beau Geste" in its second week at the Davidson continued to uphold its attraction. "Monkey Talks" at the Garden was very well received. "Blind Alleys" shown at the Strand and the "Taxi Dancer" at the Merrill were popular with theater goers.

Neighborhood theatres shared good business with down town houses. The Colonial continues to attract a large audience to see the new theater. This week "Flesh and the Devil" added to incentive to visit the theatre. The Milwaukee found "Husband Hunters to be a strong attraction, while box office receipts were boosted at the Tower and Modjeska by "The Fire Brigade."

Salt Lake City

BUSINESS during the past week at the Salt Lake downtown picture theatres has been very good as a whole. The first run theatres all report very favorably, with the "The Beloved Rogue" starring John Barrymore in his first United Artists release, having drawn big crowds to the Paramount Empress. A new policy was adopted by the American Theatre, commencing last week, and two feature pictures will be shown from now on, as well as a two reel comedy and news. The features this last week were "The Lady in Ermine", and "Taxie, Taxie," and this new policy is packing the house according to announcement.

Douglas McLean in "Let It Rain" went over very satisfactorily at the Victory. "The Love Thief" is said to have been a secondary attraction at the Gem Theatre in comparison with the interest and enthusiasm shown in regard to "Alaskan Adventures" which was the biggest attraction the Gem has had for a lengthy period, it is stated. "Ankles Preferred" proved to be a big drawing card at the Pantages, and "The Belle of Broadway" topped the vaudeville program at the Orpheum Theatre. "The Cheerful Fraud" was a satisfactory comedy feature at the Kinema, which in connection with some local juvenile performers, packed the house. Gloria Swanson in "Fine Manners" was the second run attraction offered at the Mission, a neighborhood house. Competition was keen this week with the average amount of exploitation having been employed. Weather conditions were favorable in as much as it has kept very bright although rather cold.

Tampa

THE fact that this was "Holy Week" may have had something to do with the business being a little "off." However, Lon Chaney, in "Mr. Wu" pulled an exceptionally good Sunday, for the opening at the Tampa, and the four days engagement was a little above average. For the last three days, "Nobody's Widow" was the attraction, and it was well liked and business good.

At the Strand, "High Hat" opened the week with a two days showing but it failed to bring in business. "The Hills of Kentucky" did better on its three days, and "Ankles Preferred" pepped things up for the last two, but the week as a whole was not up to standard.

The Victory, second largest house in Tampa and drawing much the same class of patrons as the Tampa, is doing as well as could be expected with second runs, following their showing at the Tampa. This week "Orchids and Ermine" held the boards for three days, "Casey at the Bat" the next two and "The Monkey Talks" the last two. This latter picture was a first run, while the other two were second. Business Fair.

The Franklin had "War Horse" the first three days. "Price of Honor" the next two and "Rambling Rangers" the last two. Westerns always pull good here and business was about average.

Des Moines

"MR. WU" playing at the Des Moines Theatre, due in large part to the fact that Lon Chaney has a strong following but also to the strong supporting program with Roy Smeck, Vitaphone artist well advertised, and an Our Gang comedy that was a drawing card, did very good business last week. The Capitol next door also had an attractive bill with "The Cheerful Fraud," light but amusing, and one of the biggest of the Publix Stage Shows, "Opera Versus Jazz." Judging from the thunder of applause a number of the jazz acts won the especial favor of Des Moines audiences. At the Strand for a half week run, "The Telephone Girl" did very well and "Too Many Crooks" also went very good.

Cleveland

TIME was when theateres in Cleveland locked the front door and turned off the lights during Holy Week. Not so now. While none of the local downtown houses broke any records last week, still they held their own, and, comparatively speaking, did satisfactory business. "The Night of Love" drew big crowds at the Stillman. While there were no box office lines, still the house was practically sold out every day, which, under the circumstances, is equivalent to exceptional business. It is being held over a second week. "The Triumph of the Rat," sequel to "The Rat," was well liked and brought the Cameo Theatre receipts up to average. "Evening Clothes" with Adolph Menjou fell down somewhat at the Allen. This was attributed fully as much to the picture as to the calendar. The State Theatre reports that "Long Pants," Harry Langdon's latest comedy feature, did better than other pictures have done during Holy Week. Keith's Palace was badly affected although "The Lily" received complimentary notices. "White Flannels" was fair at the Par. Reade's Hippodrome was "off" all week both with "Going Crooked" the first three days and with "The Truthful Sex" the last of the week. Business was below average at Keith's East 105th Street Theatre where "Going Crooked" was likewise the featured photoplay for the week. The Circle Theatre did tolerably well with "The Music Master," second run, and Vitaphone specialty acts. Legitimate theatres suffered severly from the Easter slump. Neighborhood houses did too.

Minneapolis

MOTION picture theatres in Minneapolis survived Holy Week in a very encouraging fashion. The weather, as a whole, was mild and conducive to theatregoing, and there were few counter-attractions which cut into the picture attendance to any very great extent.

The State Theatre, showing the Vitaphone for the first time in Minneapolis, succeeded in smashing its attendance record for a single day, set on a Saturday at which Gilda Gray made a personal appearance. The house was packed at virtually every performance, and Holy Week apparently did not affect its business in the least. "Afraid to Love" was the picture attraction.

At the Strand Theatre, where Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky held over in "A Night of Love" for a second week, a fair business was reported.

Tom Meighan in "Blind Alleys" also did a fair business at the Garrick Theatre.

The Lyric reported an excellent attendance for the week with Douglas McLean in "Let It Rain."

Pantages, featuring the war film "The Lost Batallion" which was sponsored by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, advertised it heavily, and experienced a very profitable week as a result.

Central Pennsylvania

WHILE church attendance during Holy Week cut deeply into the business of the motion picture theatres in Harrisburg, generally speaking, not even this factor was able to stop the flow of patronage into the Colonial where Tom Mix was featured in "The Last Trail."

The Victoria, was disappointed at the business done by "Afraid to Love."

Average crowds went to Loew's Regent to see the Eleanor Glyn story, "Love's Blindness," though church services on Good Friday cut down the attendance at the theatre. Fair business was done at the Broad which offered "The Lost Battallion." The film attraction at the State the first half of the week was "Marriage," with "Money to Burn" shown during the last half. Fair-sized patronage was reported.

Los Angeles

A STRONG line-up of entertainment in Los Angeles theatres has made all box-offices hum with activity. The attractions presented this week offset the depression generally felt at this period of the Lenten season.

The Figueroa Theatre which up to the present time has played pictures with a light presentation, has switched over to vaudeville and pictures. "Don Mike" was the first feature to play under the new policy. The move looks like a favorable one. Good business is reported for this week.

Two openings important enough to set up sunlight arcs, took place this week. The Criterion with "Resurrection" had its share of blaze and crowds outside—and a packed house inside, which is more important. The picture is doing good business and looks promising for a satisfactory run.

The other opening was "Mr. Wu" at the Forum. Good business is reported for the production.

"What Price Glory" in its twenty-second week at the Carthay Circle, still continues to draw crowds. "Old Ironsides" at Grauman's Egyptian holds up after a run of twelve weeks. It is understood it will close after a sixteen-week engagement. "Casey at the Bat" at the Million Dollar is doing satisfactorily. "Venus of Venice" at Loew's State played to better than normal business.

Oklahoma City

THE exceedingly heavy rains and local storms affected all the business houses in Oklahoma City the first part of the week. And Holy Week services had their part in decreasing theatre going the later part of the week. At the Criterion Theatre noon services of a religious nature were held every day under the direction of the Ministerial Alliance. This meant that the theatre gave up the morning matinee which usually begins at 11 o'clock. But judging from the friendly comments made on the theatre's unusual policy, one would say the Criterion did a wise thing in cooperating with the churches for this one week.

"Casey at the Bat" did good business at the Criterion considering the handicaps mentioned above. At the Empress there was a double program, "All Aboard," and "The Alaskan Adventures." The latter picture drew some splendid comments from the press, and those who saw it spread the news that it was a real picture. Business held up well here. "Lost Trail" played to a fair house of Tom Mix fans at the Liberty the first of the week, and "The Return of Peter Grimm" did better at the end of the week—very good comments from the audiences on this. The Capitol started the week with "Let It Rain"—and it did! Seemed to be a good picture although business wasn't rushing. "Too Many Crooks" finished the week with fair business.

Studio Briefs

Dudley Smith, Buster Gardner and a kangaroo have been added to the cast of Tom Mix's starring vehicle, "The Circus Ace." The story went into production a few days ago.

Julian Johnson, playwright and screen writer, was this week assigned by B. P. Schulberg to assume the position of film and title editor at the Hollywood plant of Paramount. Johnson is the latest member of the Eastern studio's executive personnel to go West, following the consolidation of Paramount's production forces on the West Coast.

"Colleen," an original story, by Randall H. Faye, is Madge Bellamy's first screen work on the Fox lot after an absence of several weeks. A new director on the Fox lot, Frank O'Connor, is in charge of the production. George Schneidermann, head Fox cameraman, is cranking on this production. In the cast are Charles Morton, in the leading male role; J. Farrell McDonald, Tof Maguire, Marjorie Beebe, Sammy Cohen and Ted McNamara.

Receiving an opportunity to leave immediately for an extended tour of Australia, Edmund Burns has withdrawn from the cast of Universal's "Midnight Rose," the forthcoming Jewel for next season, which will have Lya De Putti in the foremost role. The story is from an original story, "Backwash," by J. Grubb Alexander.

Another new screen player will make her screen debut in "The Great Mail Robbery," since Yvonne Howell, a sixteen-year-old player, was signed last week by F. B. O. for a part. Miss Howell had initial roles in "Bill Grimm's Progress," the comedy series. Lee Shumway has the principal role in "The Great Mail Robbery."

Victor Nordlinger, Universal production expert, has been designated casting director at Universal City, where he is replacing William Cohill. The former casting director is now on a brief vacation and will announce his new affiliations soon.

Willis Goldbeck, who recently returned from France, where he did the screen play of "The Garden of Allah," which Rex Ingram is now directing for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has been placed under contract to write the screen play of Channing Pollock's stage play, "The Enemy." Fred Niblo will direct "The Enemy."

Work has started on "The Irresistible Lover," a new Universal Jewel picture in which Lois Moran co-stars with Norman Kerry. The film was previously known as "Too Many Women" and it is being directed by William Beaudine. In the cast are Gertrude Astor, Lee Moran, Myrtle Stedman, Philip Smalley, Arthur Lake and George Pearce.

F. B. O. has signed Virginia Valli for one of the principal parts in "Judgment of the Hills," based on a "Cosmopolitan Magazine" story, by the late Larry Evans. J. Leo Meehan will direct the picture, for which a strong cast is now being assembled. Frankie Darro will have the part of "the kid" of the story, which was a posthumous work of the author.

Cedric Gibbons has been given a new contract as art director by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Company. In his new position Gibbons is art director-in-chief.

Jerry Miley will have a prominent part in "The Gingham Girl," which David Kirkland is directing. Lois Wilson is in the title role.

With the engagement of Jack Nelson to direct the ten episode chapter-play of Artclass Pictures, "Perils of the Jungle," actual camera work on the production is to begin at once. Portraying the chief roles in the serial will be Eugenia Gilbert, Frank Merrill, Bobby Nelson and Milburn Moranti. The menagerie of Col. William S. Selig's Hollywood zoo will be pressed into service, as will also the animals of the A. G. Barnes circus and the lion troupe of Charles Gay.

Augmenting the cast of "The Frontiersman," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer historical Western which features Tim McCoy, are Captain John Peters and Frank Hagney. The featured feminine lead will be played by Claire Windsor, and Dorothy Sebastian has a vampire role. Tom O'Brien and Russell Simpson are in the cast. Chief Big Tree, an Iroquis Indian, also has an important part. Reginald Barker is directing the story, an original, by Ross Wills and Madeline Ruthven.

"Don Desperado," Leo Maloney's newest Western production for Pathe, has been completed and will be released soon. The film was made at the star's pretentious studio at Skyland, in the San Bernardino Mountains of California. Eugenia Gilbert is seen as Maloney's leading lady. Fred Dana, Charlie Bartlett and Bud Osborne appear in the support.

Marian Ainslee, title writer, who has been under contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer during the last three years, has signed a new contract with that organization. Miss Ainslee began her literary career about eight years ago at the Louis B. Mayer Studio.

Josie Sedgwick, a sister of Edward Sedgwick and a star for many years in Westerns, has been signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. She will have an important role in "The Trail of '98," on which Clarence Brown is making rapid headway at the Culver City studio.

A comedy with the "world's worst army" or Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy and Jimmy Finlayson, is now being produced by Hal Roach.

Filming on "The Way of All Flesh," Emil Jannings' first American starring production, has been completed and the picture is now in the hands of the cutters. Director Victor Fleming filmed the ending fadeout in chronological order as this scene was also the final last shot on the picture.

Again contributing to the making of a Columbia picture will be Malcolm MacGregor and Dorothy Howell when "The Kid Sister," a comedy drama of backstage life will go into production at the Columbia studio. Malcolm MacGregor is the only player chosen for the cast thus far, and he will have the chief male lead. Dorothy Howell will do the scenario of "The Kid Sister," which is an adaptation of the novel, "The Lost House."

Margaret Quimby, formerly associated with George White's "Scandals," has begun her first screen work in the supporting cast of Florence Vidor's "The World at Her Feet." Arnold Kent, Paramount leading man, and William Austin are in the support also. Luther Reed is doing the directing.

"Catch-as-Catch-Can," a William Fairbanks vehicle which Lumas Film Corporation is releasing, was recently finished by Charles Hutchinson, who directed Rose Blossom, George Kotsonaros, Jack Richardson, Larry Shannon, Walter Shumway and George Chapman. The story is built around wrestling.

Josephine Dunn, a graduate of the Paramount Pictures School, has been assigned the leading feminine role in "Fireman, Save My Child," a fature comedy which will again bring together Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton. This will be Miss Dunn's second important role.

The Warner Bros. have exercised their option on the services of Leila Hyams so that her services have been secured for a long-term of years. Miss Hyam's initial role is in "The Brute" listed for release on April 30.

Chance Ford, character actor, has joined the cast of "Rolled Stockings" which Richard Rosson is directing.

Filming of "The Country Doctor," featuring Rudolph Schildkraut in the title role, is now in progress at the De Mille studio. Rupert Julian is at the megaphone. The play, a drama of New England life of fifteen years ago, was written and adapted by Beulah Marie Dix. Names of prominent players are Sam De Grasse, Junior Coghlan and Louis Natheaux. Bertram Millhauser will supervise the production.

Charles Delaney, a former vaudevillian, who played the male lead in "Frisco Sally Levy," has signed a long-term contract with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Company. His new role is in "The Thirteenth Hour," which is now nearing completion under the direction of Chester Franklin.

With all detail for its preparation finished and out of the way, Robert Kane's production, "Dance Magic," went into production this week at the Cosmopolitan Studio in New York. Pauline Starke and Ben Lyon head the cast of the picture, which will be a First National release. Louis John Bartels, Sylvia Sidney, Adrienne Truex are members of the cast. Victor and Hugo Halperin, who owned the screen rights to the story, are making the picture in conjunction with Kane, who is said to have paid $50,000 for the screening rights.

Regional News from Correspondents

Baltimore

WHILE the Avalon Theatre, Park Heights Avenue and Howard Place, was opened to the public at 1 P. M., Saturday, April 16, by the Avalon Theatrical Corporation, the premier performance for invited guests was given on Sunday night at 8:30 o'clock, April 17.

About 800 persons attended the special performance and the Saturday program at that playhouse was presented. Short addresses were made by Howard Jackson, Mayor of Baltimore, and William Curran, candidate for the mayoralty at the next election.

Arthur B. Price, Avalon president and general manager, was badly handicapped in opening the playhouse because he is now suffering from an infected right hand which had to be operated on and drainage inserted.

Work is going forward steadily on the construction of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exchange building, to be located at 1009 New Jersey Avenue, Washington, D. C. The construction work will be finished about July 15, it is thought. It is a one-story building.

George A. Hickey has been succeeded as district supervisor for the Washington, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Charlotte exchanges for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer by George F. Dembo recently Philadelphia and Chicago manager for Fox, and one time general manager for Robert Kane Productions. Mr. Hickey has been transferred to the West Coast Division of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

A moving picture theatre to measure 48 by 108 feet and to have a seating capacity of 500 persons, is to be built on the site of the old colored school building now being razed on North Mechanic Street, Cumberland, Md., by E. K. Magruder. The theatre building will contain two stores.

Cleveland

GEORGE A. LANGAN has resigned as managing director of the Allen Theatre. He came to Cleveland fourteen months ago to take over the management of the Allen and to supervise the new presentation policy. He has not announced his plans for the future. William Haynes is his successor. Haynes is a member of the New York Loew organization, and has had active experience in motion picture production, distribution and sales. He is also an experienced vaudeville manager.

Loew's Canton de luxe theatre has inaugurated its summer policy. This means the elimination of the presentation acts. Russell Bovim, manager, will confine the policy to straight motion pictures, minus novelties over the warm months.

Henry Reese is the new cashier at the Paramount Exchange in this city. He succeeds Mrs. Bernice Brown, who held that position for nine consecutive years. She resigned last week to go into intensive farming.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association entertained more than two hundred and fifty guests at a buffet luncheon last Tuesday. It was a house warming party in honor of the new office and club rooms of the organization. William James, president of the state exhibitor organization, sent his congratulations from French Lick Springs, where he is building up for the forthcoming convention in Columbus. P. J. Wood, Secretary of the M. P. T. O. A., sent his felicitations with a beautiful basket of flowers.

Joseph Laronge, of Loew's Ohio Theatres, has recently returned from a two weeks' vacation at French Lick Springs.

Jerry Horna, Superintendent of Service at Loew's State Theatre, has formed the "Loew's State Ushers' Club." It holds a formal meeting every Sunday, from 12 noon until 1 o'clock. Drills are part of the meeting. Cash prizes are offered to the boys of the club.

Chicago

BARNEY BALABAN, of Balaban & Katz, left for Atlantic City last Monday, where he will attend the annual convention of First National.

Reports that Ascher Brothers have completed arrangements with Balaban & Katz Midwest, have been officially confirmed and Midwest is already buying pictures for Ascher Brothers Circuit of twelve theatres. It is understood that the arrangement only covers the buying of pictures and that Balaban & Katz Midwest has not secured any financial interest in the Ascher houses.

Joseph Pastor, of the Mohawk, Argmore, Lincoln-Webster and Bryn Mawr theatres, has just returned from a week's trip to New York. While in New York, Mr. Pastor invited movie stars and executives to attend the Grand Ball and Movie Frolic, which is scheduled for May 4th at the Stevens Hotel, under the auspices of the Exhibitors Association of Chicago.

President Carl Laemmle and Maurice Fleckels, of Universal Film Company, stopped off in Chicago last Monday and Tuesday, and then continued their journey to California, where both gentlemen expect to remain for some time. Mr. Laemmle, it is understood, will not return to Chicago for Universal's national sales convention, which is scheduled for the first week in May.

Joseph Lipton, of the New Lyric Theatre, has purchased the California Theatre, at 1002 N. California Avenue, which he will also operate. The California was completely remodeled seven months ago and is an attractive small house of three hundred seats.

Manager H. C. Young of National Screen Service, left for New York on Tuesday, and from there will go to Atlantic City to attend the convention of his company. He was joined here by Manager Jack Fier, of National Screen's Los Angeles office, for the trip.

Final work on the Marbro Theatre is being rushed by Marks Brothers, who hope to open this house about May 1st. Charles Kaley has been engaged to lead a stage band at the Marbro, which will alternate with Benny Meroff's band, which has been working exclusively at the Granada.

Seattle

THE early part of April witnessed the actual beginning of the establishment of a new Film Row in Seattle, when three of the pioneer exchanges moved from their quarters on Third Avenue to the new site, a few blocks further north on Second Avenue, where the building of a complete "film block" is now under way. The first distributors to move were United Artists, now located at 2403 Second Avenue; Warner Brothers, now at 2405 Second Avenue, and Film Booking Offices, at 2407 Second Avenue. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer plans to leave their location at 2018 Third Avenue within the next few weeks for their corner office, at 2401 Second Avenue.

D. C. Millward, general manager of the Western Film Corporation, returned last week from a flying trip to Los Angeles, where he conferred recently with Tiffany Productions relative to their output for the coming season, which will be distributed in the Pacific Northwest by the Western offices in Seattle and Portland. Mr. Millward made the trip entirely by automobile.

Frank Graham, of Auburn, spent a short time in this city last week and reported an overwhelming opening for his newly-remodeled Granada Theatre, formerly the Mission. The house has been closed for several weeks and was entirely redecorated and refurnished during the dark period.

Two new automobiles made their appearance on Film Row last week—sure harbingers of spring. Dave Frazer, manager of the Producers' Distributing Corporation, blossomed out in a handsome new custom-built Cadillac. And not to be outdone, Jimmy Beale, sales representative for Manager Mat Aparton, at Universal, stepped forth the following day in a new model Essex.

Ben F. Shearer, director of the National Theatre Supply Company's local interior decorating office, last week received word from Eastern headquarters that his office was to do installation work on the 3,000 Heywood-Wakefield opera chairs for the new Orpheum Theatre in Seattle.

Manager Ben Fish, of the local Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Exchange, had as a visitor last week Auditor Wassell, of the home office in New York. This was his first visit to this section in more than two years.

Establishment of the publicity and exploitation headquarters for the Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., under one roof in the United Artists Theatre Building was effected last week. In these new offices are centered the activities for the various P. N. W. houses in the Northwest territory, under the able direction of Eddie Hitchcock and Knowles Blair.

The Community Investment Corporation of this city last week announced that they will soon open a new motion picture house at Camas, Washington, with Fred W. Horrigan as house manager. The seating capacity will be approximately 800.

Frank M. Farrow, house manager for Joe Danz at the new Embassy Theatre since its opening until a short time ago, last week announced that he has purchased the Madison Theatre, neighborhood playhouse, at Broadway and Madison, from J. W. LaVigne. He will assume active management of the house the latter part of April.

The Pacific Theatres Circuit this month will change its name to "The Northwest Theatrical Enterprises," according to Hugh W. Bruen, general manager. The company last week closed the Queen Anne Theatre, one of their smaller houses, and it is rumored that a 1,500-seat house in the same locality will soon be constructed.

Ned Holmes, associated with First National Pictures, in connection with the screen tests of college men, arrived at Manager Jack Bower's exchange this week. He will remain in this territory until May.

Through the courtesy of John Hamrick, owner and general manager of the Hamrick Circuit of theatres, the Uptown Theatre was turned over one night last week to a specially selected theatrical committee, who staged a benefit show for the Children's Orthopedic Hospital. The men who sponsored the performance included A. C. Raleigh, of the Coliseum; James Q. Clemmer, of the Fifth Avenue; Lloyd Dearth, of Pantages Theatre; L. A. Samuelson, Pathe branch manager; Ben Fish, M.-G.-M. branch manager; P. E. Irving, the Uptown, and Mr. and Mrs. Hamrick.

Denver

HARRY T. NOLAN, owner of a number of theatres in the Denver district, left for New York City Thursday for several weeks' visit with the First National office. Mr. Nolan will stop en route at Chicago and Atlantic City.

The Washington Park Theatre, one of Denver's newest suburban houses, has been sold by D. & R. of the Western Enterprises to Clinton M. Stowell, a newcomer in this territory.

Charles Klein, of the Black Hills Amusement Company, of Deadwood, S.D., is still in Denver, doing a lot of business with the various exchanges.

Two exchange managers of Denver were annoyed by mysterious telephone calls last week. Last Tuesday, at 12:45 A.M., Fred P. Brown received a telephone message from someone purporting to be the chief of the fire department, saying that the Deluxe Feature Film Exchange had burned to the ground. Mr. Brown went to his exchange immediately and found everything just as he had left it earlier in the evening. The same day Sam Cain, manager of Universal, received a call from some person representing himself to be the Chief of Police of Ft. Collins saying that Mat Skorey, a Universal salesman, had been killed on the Ft. Collins Highway. The call proved to be the work of another practical joker. Efforts to locate or identify the persons calling were without success.

Charles R. Gilmour, Warner Bros. manager, is away on a sales trip, visiting exhibitors in Cheyenne and Casper, Wyo. He will return to Denver Sunday.

Kenneth Hodkinson, United Artists District Manager, arrived in Denver Saturday for a two weeks' visit with Jack Krum, local branch manager of United Artists.

The Orpheum Theatre, of Sheridan, Wyo., has been sold to the Western Enterprises. The deal was closed Thursday of last week and the new owners took immediate possession.

Another theatre transfer of interest to Denver exchanges was the purchase of the Avalon Theatre by Dominic De George, who for many years has owned and operated the Royal Theatre over on the North Side. J. W. Dimmitt, former owner of the Avalon, is reported to be opening a new theatre in Grand Junction, Colo.

Harry E. Brooker is the new manager of the Fox Film Exchange of Denver. Mr. Brooker succeeds M. S. Wilson, who was transferred to another territory. Mr. Brooker has been with the Fox organization as sales representative for a number of years and is recognized as the logical successor to the management of the local Fox branch office. Ben Rosenberg supervised the installation of the new manager.

Seth Perkins, district manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has returned to his desk after spending the past ten days visiting exhibitors in the New Mexico territory.

Canada

THE United Amusement Corp., Limited, Montreal, Quebec, has opened its twelfth large district theatre in Montreal, the Rosemount, at 11th Avenue and Masson Street, in the heart of the Rosemount residential section, which had not previously been served by a cinema. The new house, which accommodates 1,600, is practically a one-floor theatre. There is a balcony of the loge type with 350 chairs.

J. E. Blaine has been appointed manager of the Rosemount, while chief officers of the United Amusement Company include Ernest Cousins, president; Isidore Crepeau, vice-president, and George Nicholas, managing director. The architect-builder of the structure was E. Gobet, of Montreal.

The regular policy of the theatre will be to offer two features, as well as short subjects, on every programme, stage attractions being presented on special nights. Evening and Sunday prices are 15 and 25 cents; matinees, 10 and 15 cents.

The Rosemount is constructed of reinforced concrete, the floor also being of concrete. There are an extra number of emergency exits.

The Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, formerly operated by Capital Amusements, Limited, has been reorganized and will be continued by the Brouse Estate which owns the theatre building. J. T. Moxley will continue as manager of the theatre, it is stated. The Imperial was one of several theatres operated by the late Harry Brouse, charter director of First National.

Joseph Pelisek, conductor of the Regent Theatre Orchestra, Ottawa, for some years, is now leader of the orchestra of the Capital Theatre, Ottawa. Joseph was associated with his brother, the late Rodolph Pelisek, at the Ottawa Regent for many years.

Arthur Cohen, vice-president and general manager of Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, has returned home after a lengthy visit in California and a trip through the Canadian West.

Hamilton, Ontario, has a new moving picture theatre, the Cinderella, an Ontario Provincial license having recently been granted to the house.

Irwin Taylor has been appointed manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Toronto, by Famous Players Canadian Corp., in succession to H. R. Hitchinson, who has become manager of the handsome new Belsize Theatre, a suburban house.

Minneapolis

WILLIAM WARVILLE NELSON, conductor of the State Theatre concert orchestra in Minneapolis, has composed a march entitled "The Land of Ten Thousand Lakes," which will be given its premier rendition at the Elks combination minstrel show and revue at the Lyceum Theatre, April 28-30. The march, with which the Minneapolis Elks will attempt to win first prize at the national convention in Cincinnati, is said to interpret the trout fisherman's ecstasy. Mr. Nelson himself is a veteran fisherman and outer.

Theodore Hays, general manager of F. & R., has been named on the committee which will have charge of the annual theatrical frolic to be held at the Hotel Radisson, Minneapolis, April 22, under the auspices of the Twin City Theatre Managers' Association. Proceeds of the benefit will go to the tuberculosis building fund of the National Vaudevile Artists' Association.

Finkelstein & Ruben turned over some of their loop theatres to the churches at noon on Good Friday, and services were held to capacity audiences. The Minneapolis Council of Churches arranged for services at the State and Garrick theatres. The Federation of Lutheran Brotherhoods conducted the services at the Grand, and the Lutheran Bible Institute had charge of the services at the Lyric.

The employees of the Sherman Theatre, St. Cloud, Minn., held a carnival night for their monthly party in March. They all came dressed as movie stars and vaudeville acts, dancing, and supper made the party last until morning.

The mother of Crockett Brown died last week at the age of 70 years. Brown operates the Grand Theatre at Nashwauk, Minn.

The girls in the F. & R. offices in Minneapolis have organized a club and are to meet for dinner the second Thursday of each month. In addition they plan to go in for outdoor sports as weather permits.

Two of the F. & R. theatres in Minneapolis and one in St. Paul, now have special children's matinees. The Rialto Theatre, Minneapolis, had nine mothers from the Parent Teachers' Association of the Greeley and Horace Mann schools present as chaperones at the first special matinee, Friday afternoon, March 18. They tied up with a neighboring store whose popcorn is popular and admission was five cents and five labels from popcorn boxes. The labels were redeemed at a cent apiece.

George Peterson, manager of the Nokomis Theatre, reports that attendance at his second matinee doubled that at the first. He gave a box of candy to each child who brought five newcomers to the matinee.

Jim Stroud, manager of the St. Clair Theatre, St. Paul, started his Kiddie Matinee Club recently with a 300-name membership at the first matinee.

No definite date has yet been fixed when the Tiffany Exchange will move into its new quarters. It now looks as though F. B. O. would remain for another year at its present location.

Harmanus Bleecker Hall, in Albany, one of the oldest and largest theatres in the city, was the scene of a slight fire last week, which fortunately was confined entirely outside of the theatre. It originated in packing cases but the flames leaped high into the air and attracted a large crowd. The audience was unaware of what was going on outside and there was no confusion.

George H. Moeser, salesman in the Buffalo exchange of United Artists, was last week elevated from the ranks to the post of sales manager of the Buffalo exchange, succeeding John Von Tilzer, who has been appointed manager of the Philadelphia exchange.

St. Louis

IN its day the Hippodrome Theatre, 17 South Sixth Street, was perhaps the most popular amusement place in St. Louis. But it has been closed to the public for many years and the police in a report submitted to the Building and Health Commissioners for the city have suggested that the building be condemned unless present conditions are remedied.

Mrs. Alex Sommers, manager of the Lowell Theatre, 5037 North Broadway, St. Louis, Mo., on the night of April 14 left her office to go into the auditorium for a few minutes and a thief stole her purse containing $40.

The William Fox Theatre in St. Louis, which will seat 5,500 persons, will be opened early in 1928, according to the present plans of the owners. Financing has been completed and the general contract for construction has been awarded. It will be located at Grand and Washington boulevards.

The Grand Opera House, St. Louis, Mo., on Monday, April 18, slashed its week-day matinee price for adults from 40 cents to 25 cents. It shows feature pictures and short subjects in conjunction with vaudeville from the Orpheum Circuit.

St. Louis film stocks closed April 16 as follows: Skouras A—$41.50 bid and $43 asked. One year ago, $47. St. Louis Amusement A—$43.50 bid and $47 asked. One year ago, $47. That's that.

The floods that are menacing Eastern Missouri, Southern and Central Illinois, Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi have hit hard the theatres in the affected areas. It has also interefered with the handling of motion picture films out of St. Louis and other exchange points.

Mounds and Cairo, both in Illinois, have been entirely surrounded by water, while parts of Sikeston, Charleston and New Madrid, in Southeast Missouri, are also flooded. Conditions in Arkansas are very much worse.

Motion picture salesmen working out of St. Louis could not use their automobiles the past week as the Illinois and Missouri highway departments had closed many of the highways. But three trunk roads out of St. Louis into Illinois were open on Sunday, April 17. Train service was also very uncertain, and as a result the volume of picture sales for the week was far below what it otherwise would be.

Due to high water the Owens Theatre, Clarksville, Mo., has closed until further notice.

The Home Theatre, Oblong, Ill., Star Theatre, Newton, Ill., and The Strand and Grand theatres, in Robinson, Ill., have been combined under the management of the Home Theatres Circuit, controlled by Price & Dalrymple, of Oblong and Newton, and J. C. Hewitt, of Robinson.

San Diego

FOLLOWING many weeks of conjecture as to the future occupant of the new California Theatre, just reaching completion at Fourth and B streets, San Diego, announcement has been made that the lease has been taken by the West Coast Theatres, Inc. H. L. Hartman, now managing the Balboa and Cabrillo, two other San Diego houses under the West Coast control, will manage the new theatre. The California was constructed for Adolph Ramish, but a change in his plans brought about the new lease. Mr. Hartman announces that the seating in the theatre will be changed to follow the general plan of the West Coast houses, providing for loges. The California will seat about 2,100, and it is hoped to have it ready for opening on April 22. The house will be devoted to high class stage and picture productions on a de luxe scale, according to Mr. Hartman.

A "theatre moocher" recently operated at three San Diego film houses, the Balboa, Cabrillo and Plaza, getting a small amount of change from each place. He used the same scheme in each instance, that of diverting the attention of the cashier at the box office window and then scooping up change in sight and making a quick getaway.

There has been in operation in San Diego for some ten years or more a motion picture house using the name "California," and some interest is being manifested in the fact that the new theatre just completed bears the same name. The older house is under control of the National Theatres of California, which also operates the Plaza, Superba, Mission and Rivoli.

SUMMER prices are in vogue now in Tampa. The Victory has made a cut of a dime to adults and a jit to the children, the prices now being 20 cents and 40 cents. The Tampa has reduced their night prices from 75 cents to 60 cents. Over in Ybor City the Rivoli is putting on bargain days with a "Two for One" offer to their patrons. The arrangement is, on these bargain days, that an adult may purchase a two-bit ticket and bring along a companion free. The kids may buy a ten-cent ticket and bring in one of the same size.

C. C. Klutts is heard from again. Klutts was operating the Glades, at Moore Haven, when the hurricane and high water cleaned up his little city and left him without a thing. Nothing daunted, Klutts went back to work and is building up again, and also making plans to open a second house in Clewiston, a neighboring city.

New York and New Jersey

MOST of the news items in this department seem to relate to exhibitors and exchange men and it is seldom that anyone tells us about what's going on with the musicians. So, with this in mind, we want to write a few words about one of the most popular motion picture organists in northern Jersey.

Like Irving Berlin, James S. Reich, who presides at the organ of the Central Theatre, Jersey City, got his start on the East Side of New York. At the time he decided to go in for music, Reich was earning the munificent sum of $4 a week as printer's devil and whatnot on the Produce News. A chance came to play a piano in a theatre at Avenue A and 14th Street and his salary jumped to $5. The hours were 1 p.m. to 11 p.m., seven days in the week.

A year later, Reich met a Frenchman who interested him in the organ and he began its study. From the time he secured his first theatre engagement, he could look back at his past endeavors and laugh; for organist's salaries today are not to be sneezed at. There are plenty of them in this section earning from $300 to $400 per week, and one of the best known of them who works in a Broadway picture palace, is said to have a contract at the $1,000 mark.

This house was opened under the direction of Lester Evans, well-known theatre manager in this section. Evans, it will be recalled, was at one time exploitation manager for Fine Arts Picture Corp., and has had about fifteen years experience in this field. He was lately connected with the Terminal and Commodore theatres. Speaking of the Central's first night, Manager Evans said: "In all my experience, it was one of the finest openings I have ever had the pleasure of conducting."

The Economy Construction Company, lessors were represented by Messrs. M. Chipenick & Son, and the lessees by Mr. Haines.

THE Colonial picture house, recently sold to the Capitol Amusement Company, headed by Frank J. Rembusch, will reopen Easter Sunday Night, April 17.

Earl Cunningham, who has been connected with Paramount-Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, returns to Indianapolis to become manager of the house.

Formerly he was associated with Zaring's Egyptian house and Paramount Indianapolis branch exchange.

Extensive repairs were made, the building being put in tip-top condition.

Mr. Rembusch plans purchasing several other houses, it is said.

The Colonial, which was operated by Harry E. Cohen and Edmund Singham, was placed in the hands of receivers. Sale price of the furnishings, purchased by the Capitol Amusement Company, was $941. H. H. Woodsmall, Indianapolis, is vice-president of the Rembusch firm.

Theodore W. Barhydt, 57, father of Terre Haute theatrics, died there last week. He was the former lessee of the Grand and at one time was half owner of Variety Theatre there, first combination house in the city. He was widely known through theatrical circles. He was a Mason and Elk.

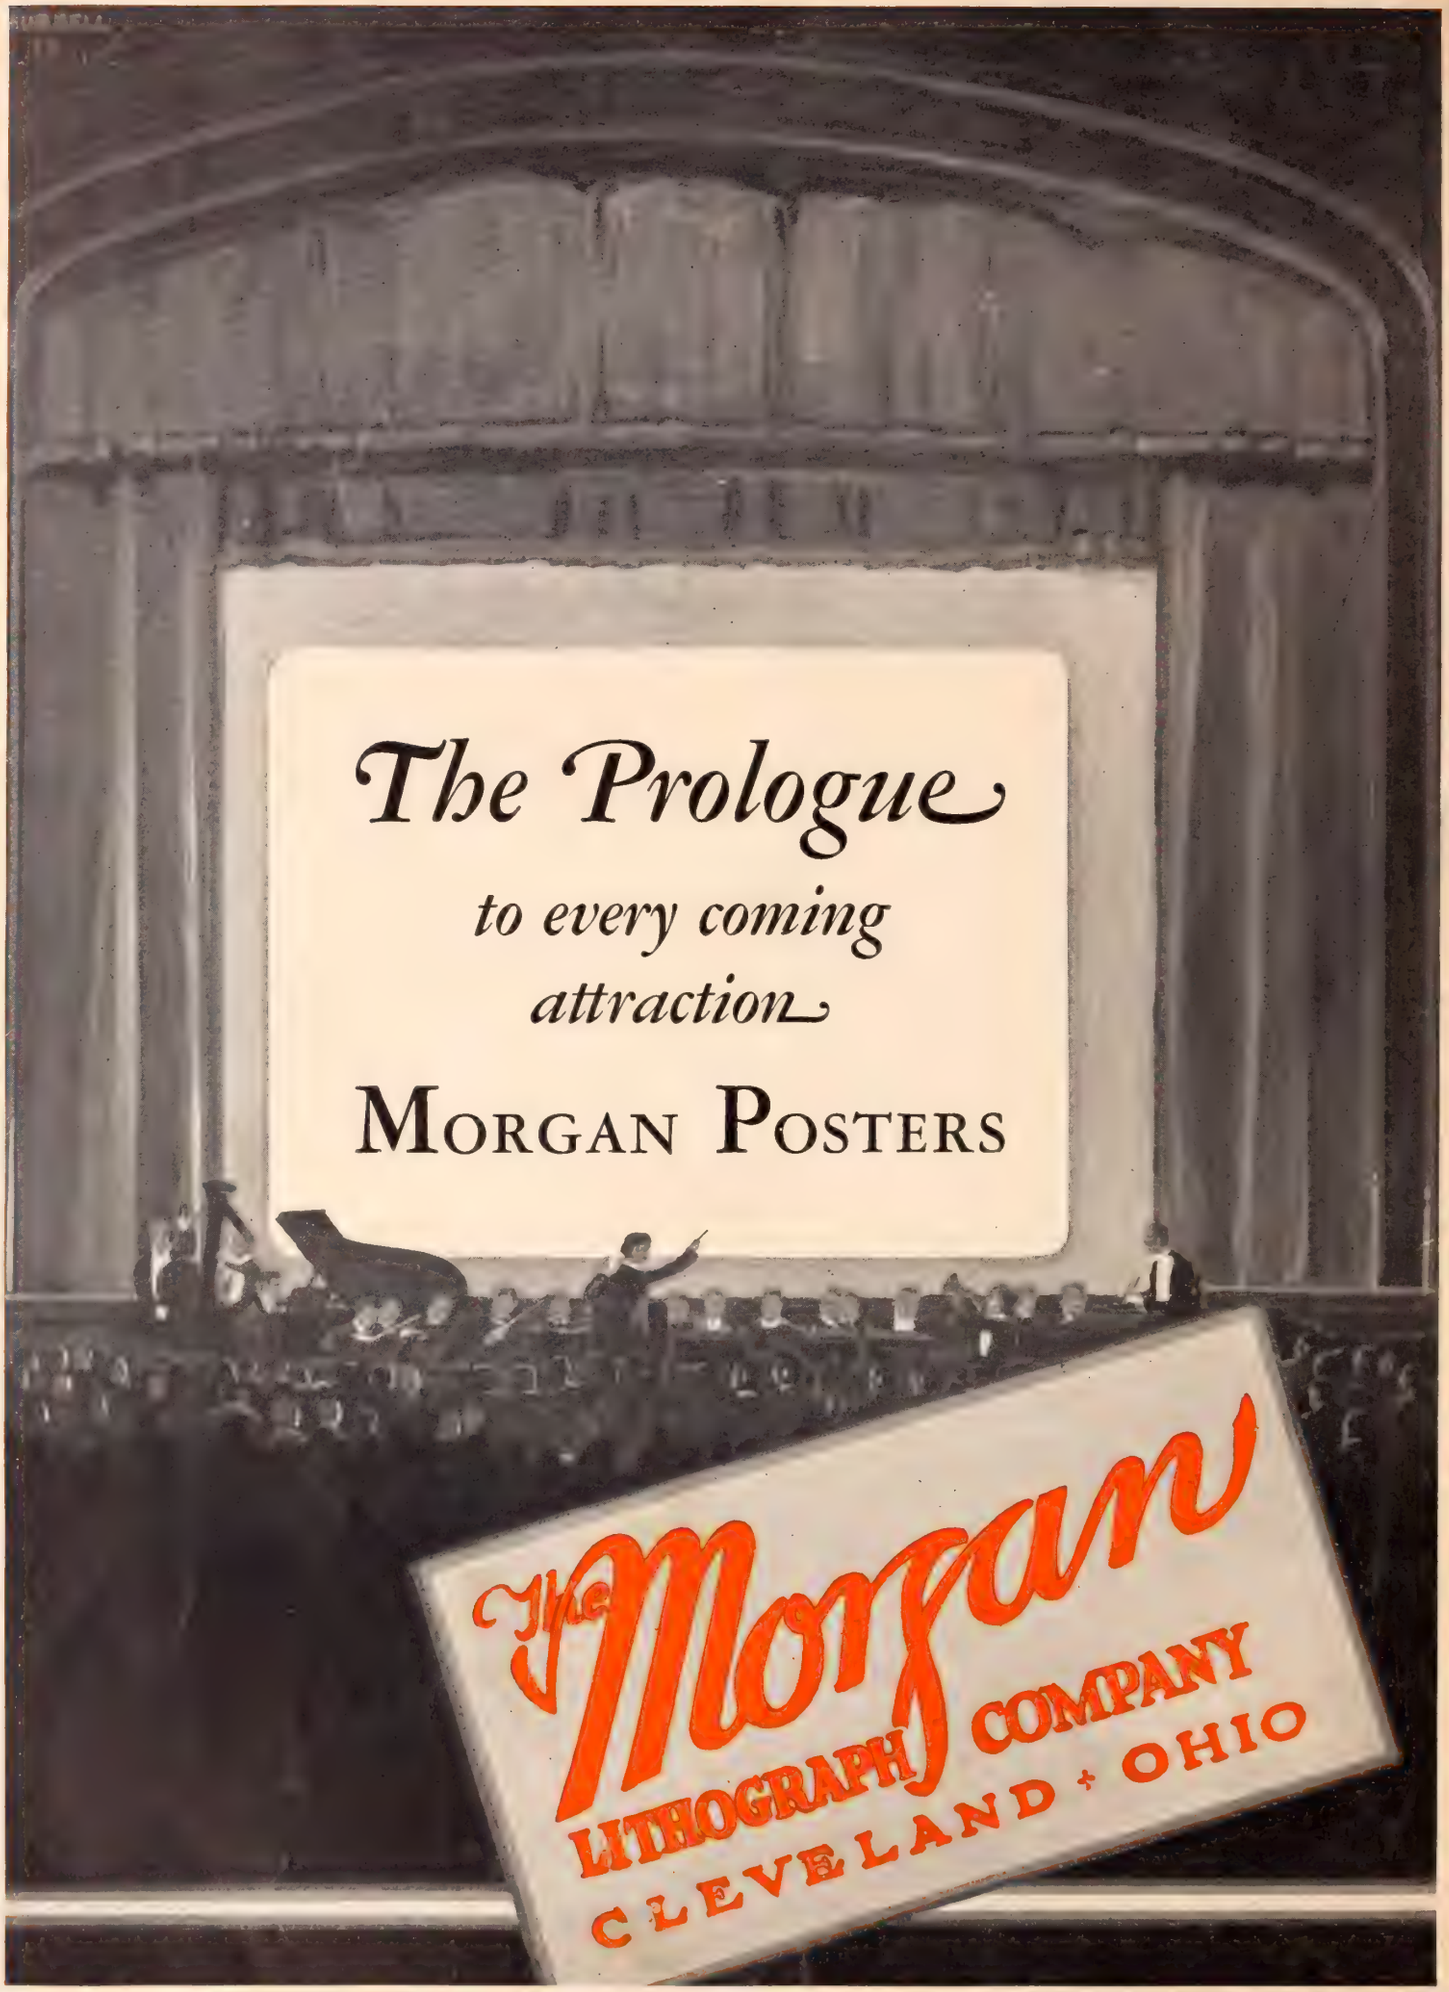
Preordained



"— the final result of the motion picture on the screen was preordained from the day that Edison got his first sample of Eastman film."*

That was in 1889. And today the film that made motion pictures practical is the film that makes the most of the cinematographer's art and carries all the quality through to the screen—Eastman Film.

WHAT ARE THE FACTS ON THE 1926-7 SEASON?

By S. R. KENT

NOW is the time of year when you, as a wise showman, take account of stock.

As a protection for your business and a guide for the future, you check up on your box office records for the 1926-7 season.

PARAMOUNT is confident of what such a check-up will show.

Paramount Pictures

Never in its sixteen years of leadership has this company delivered as fine, consistent a record of successes as during the present season. Such as:

"Aloma," "Padlocked," "Mantrap," "Tin Gods," "Variety," "Kid Boots," "The Campus Flirt," "The Ace of Cads," "The Quarterback," "We're in the Navy Now," "The Popular Sin," "Stranded in Paris," "It," "A Kiss in a Taxi," "Casey at the Bat," "Knockout Reilly," "Special Delivery,"—to name but a few.

In New York, PARAMOUNT'S "Old Ironsides," "Beau Geste" and "The Rough Riders" at $2 top are the talk of the town. "Wings" and "The Wedding March" are on the way. Think what business that means for your theatre in the near future!

TRADE MARK

And the best of PARAMOUNT'S product is still to come between now and August:

Clara Bow and Esther Ralston in "Children of Divorce," Gilda Gray in "Cabaret," Clara Bow in "Rough House Rosie" (another "It"), Esther Ralston in "Fashions for Women," Ed Wynn in "Rubber Heels"; such action thrillers as Zane Grey's "Drums of the Desert" and Gary Cooper, a big new find, in "Arizona Bound" and "The Last Outlaw"—and many more!

Stability and organization backing real box office stars and stories, smart showman directors, boundless enthusiasm—that's the secret of PARAMOUNT'S success.

SHORT TALKS ON SHORT FEATURES

--- Into Their Own

Announcements of new product for 1927-1928 to be made during the next few weeks will turn a new and brighter light on short features. The short feature has very definitely come into its own.

Through all the talk, don't forget this fact: the line of short features that has so definitely dominated the field for the last seven years will continue to dominate it in 1927-1928. Educational Pictures, which have so consistently led the forward march of the short feature in the past, will be your first consideration in the future.

Short features have come into their own in the theatres, too. The wisest showmen are playing them and exploiting them more extensively every week. Plan now for the best advertising as well as the best presentation of the best short features—Educational Pictures—for added profits next season.

HOW TO PLEASE YOUR WOMEN PATRONS—

Here's the answer realistically flashed on the screen in the season's outstanding romantic comedy drama "THE HEART THIEF" featuring Joseph Schildkraut champion lover of the stage and screen and magnetic appealing Lya de Putti.

There's romance in the title, romance in the story and romance in the cast — What a natural for the ladies, and how they will flock to see it.

An original story from the magic pen of Irvin S. Cobb, the daddy of American humorists, transferred to the screen as a riotous, rapid-fire, whirlwind comedy, with a great cast including Rudolph Schildkraut, in the greatest comedy role of his career, as the New York rug merchant who hates women and inherits a Turkish harem. Here's a comedy natural---a perfect laugh hit that will register right on the box-office bullseye.

THE PERFECT THIRTY

THE BLOOD SHIP
By Norman Springer. With Hobart Bosworth in the greatest role of his career.

VIRGIN LIPS
A sparkling story of the younger generation, by Jack Lait, noted writer of plays and stories with a present-day background.

MODERN MOTHERS
By Rachel Crothers, author of "A Little Journey," "Old Lady 31," and other stage hits.

LADY RAFFLES
By Alfred Henry Lewis. With Priscilla Dean in a gripping role of dramatic intensity.

BEWARE OF BLONDES
By Pierre Dumond, who knows his blondes—and proves it—interestingly.

ALIAS THE LONE WOLF
By Louis Joseph Vance. With Bert Lytell in his most thrilling "Lone Wolf" characterization.

SPORTING AGE
A fast-moving romance of those who take life in high gear, by Charles K. Tennant.

STAGE KISSES
By George Bronson Howard. A sophisticated tale of the love fakers of both sexes.

SO THIS IS LOVE
A vivid story by Gertrude Atherton, author of "Black Oxen," "The Tower of Ivory," and other best sellers.

SALLY IN OUR ALLEY
Shirley Mason in a story and picture bigger than "Sweet Rosie O'Grady."

THE COLLEGE HERO
Adapted from a dramatic story by Willard Mack, author of "Tiger Rose," "The Noose" and other noted plays.

FORGOTTEN WOMEN
By Louella Parsons, well known syndicate writer for the Hearst newspapers.

SAY IT WITH SABLES
By Dorothy Howell. A story that will keep audiences on the qui vive with suspense and excitement.

SAN FRANCISCO
Featuring Betty Compson in a production that is the last word in a stupendous society underworld spectacle.

BY WHOSE HAND?
A tense drama by Channing Pollock, author of "The Fool," "The Enemy," and other stage successes.

FASHION MADNESS
An up-to-the-minute story with a startling climax.

BRIDGE
Timely in theme and treatment. A nation-wide contest will be run to get a popular title.

GOLF WIDOWS
A strikingly different story of golfers and golfers' wives, by Henry Clayton Cooper.

THE SIREN
Priscilla Dean in a penetrating drama of bewitching fascination.

AFTER THE STORM
A story that opens wide the floodgates of all human emotions.

THE ADVENTURESS
By Frances Marion, who wrote the screen versions of "Stella Dallas," "Zander the Great", "The Dark Angel," and other motion picture successes.

MY WIFE'S RELATIONS
A peppy drama of marital complications that clicks to a laugh a minute.

BROADWAY DADDIES
By Grace Atkinson. A dynamic drama of modern maids, modern men, and modern morals.

THE WAY OF THE STRONG
By Octavus Roy Cohen, known the world over for his inimitable stories in the Saturday Evening Post.

THAT CERTAIN THING
An entertaining story about those who have and those who haven't "IT."

THE OPENING NIGHT
By Owen Davis, author of "The Nervous Wreck," "Icebound," "The Donovan Affair," and other stage hits.

THE WARNING
Gripping mystery drama by Edgar Rice Burroughs, who needs no introduction to screen audiences.

COME BACK TO AARON
An inter-racial drama replete with humor, romance and throbbing heart interest.

THE TIGRESS
Priscilla Dean in another Alfred Henry Lewis role that fits her like a glove.

A WOMAN'S WAY
Thompson Buchanan's celebrated stage success made into a smashing screen play.

Columbia's Past Record Is a Guarantee of Future Performance

BOX-OFFICE records of the past year testify to the fact that Columbia delivered pictures upon which exhibitors of all ranks could depend for Quality and Profit. The "Big Twenty-Four" were acclaimed internationally as the most consistent program of the year. They were booked by leading circuits and first-run theatres from coast to coast.

Encouraged by increased exhibitor support and confidence, Columbia plans to go further than ever before with THE PERFECT THIRTY, which are to be produced on an elaborate scale with prominent stars and worthwhile casts.

Columbia's pledge to the exhibitor is to continue to make the kind of pictures the public want to see, and that the theatre can play with profit, prestige and satisfaction.

The best production brains in the industry plus an experienced and well seasoned producing organization guarantee that THE PERFECT THIRTY will be a series of attractions worthy of a prominent place on the booking sheets of every theatre.

Columbia Offers 100 Per Cent Showmanship Service to Exhibitors

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION, in announcing THE PERFECT THIRTY for the Season 1927-1928, earnestly desires to impress on the mind of every exhibitor its ability to make pictures on a par with any producer in the industry. It prides itself on having as complete a production studio and as efficient an executive and sales organization as any company in the business.

During the past year, Columbia has succeeded in establishing a closer contact with exhibitors than ever before, both through its personally owned exchanges and through specially selected franchise holders who are pledged to give exhibitors 100 per cent service in each of their respective territories. Theatre owners are therefore guaranteed not only a high standard of production, but efficient distribution as well.

Columbia Pictures is solely a producing organization. It owns no theatres and is not in direct competition with any theatre owner. It has no interests apart from producing the best pictures it knows how to make, and is amply financed. Thus exhibitors are assured beyond question that THE PERFECT THIRTY for the Season 1927-1928 will be a high class, dependable product, with the utmost in box-office value.

Gentlemen:

We want to take this occasion to express our extreme pleasure at the wonderful business that RESURRECTION has been bringing at the Madison Theatre.

In spite of the fact that the second week of the run is Holy Week, the picture has reached the control figure and we are keeping it for a third week's run.

Yours very truly,

The Trade Mark That the Public Knows

A film salesman may be able to sell you another news reel—

BUT

Will he be able to sell your public?

Why is it that Colgate's toilet preparations, Shredded Wheat, Gillette safety razors, Ivory Soap and a multitude of other commodities continue to increase their sales year after year, in the face of greater and greater competition, in spite of extravagant claims by competitors?

Because the public knows them, knows they are good, knows their quality is backed up by powerful organizations with reputations to sustain, and knows the fallacy of the competing salesmen's argument, "something just as good."

The public knows the Pathe News, wants it, loves it. We know of a number of instances where an exhibitor has attempted to substitute "something just as good," and has received public protests of a number and vehemence that have amazed him.

The staunchest customers that Pathe News has are the exhibitors who have taken the trouble to find out what the public thinks of the world's first news reel. Pathe News has always been just as good as money and the best brains could make it. It will continue to be the best.

The public will continue to want to see the reel that they know.

It will continue to be the standby of the exhibitor who wants the best.

MONTY BANKS IN HORSE SHOES

An excursion on a Laughter Limited to unlimited laughter!

The best tonic you can get for your box-office, a comedy that bubbles over with fun, originality, stunts, gags and fast action.

Clock the laughs. You'll find they run as many as any feature comedy you ever played.

TRADE MARK

Speaking of the best westerns-

Dominance comes from quality not mere numbers.

If you are familiar with Pathe's five series of Westerns, you know who has the best Westerns. You know also that in the five series there is such diversity in stars, locations, stories and kind as to satisfy any exhibitor demand, no matter how exacting.

That the quality is the best is your first consideration; but that the prices are so amazingly reasonable certainly should be your second.

If you haven't been showing these Pathe Westerns, ask for a screening,—and prices. You'll be surprised!

LEO MALONEY

With Ford Beebe an unbeatable combination. Trade paper reviews, and exhibitor comment on every one of his pictures have been remarkable. We insist, no better Westerns anywhere than these. "Don Desperado" a May release.

BUFFALO BILL, JR.

A real "dyed in the wool" Cheyenne cowboy, once a broncho buster and fancy rider with the SellsFloto Wild West Show. Boy, how he can ride! You get in his pictures all the action any heart can crave. Current release "The Ridin' Rowdy." Lester F. Scott Jr., Producer.

BILL CODY

Excels with horse, lariat, whip and gun. No better riding or faster action anywhere. His pictures full of real dare-devil stunts. Current release "The Arizona Whirlwind."

BUDDY ROOSEVELT

A college-bred cowboy who left Harvard to join a Wild West Show as trick rider. In each of his pictures there is not only heart interest drama and fast action, but also a real comedy element. Lester F. Scott, Jr., Producer. Coming release "The Code of the Cow Country."

WALLY WALES

Another real cowboy, hailing from Texas. Looks good either on a horse or in a dress suit. Each of the pictures already released has registered big. Coming release "The Meddlin' Stranger." Lester F. Scott, Jr., Producer.

Another contender for national rating among Independent programs is EXCELENT PICTURES CORPORATION.

The exhibitor should give these pictures his thoughtful consideration; first, because he wants as open a production market as is possible and, secondly, because with the big companies straining at specials the independent producers concentrate more upon the standard type of feature.

Their studio resources have paralleled the general advance here and the big list of free lance players here makes available, although at high salary costs, the desired number of box-office names.

WHY Imitators Success

(No. 522—Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl La

WHEN ANYTHING GENUINELY NEW AND REVOLUTIONary is done with outstanding success in the moving picture business, attempts are made to imitate it.

THE MOST REVOLUTIONARY AND THE MOST SUCCESSful innovation introduced during the past decade is the Universal Complete Service Contract.

IT KNOCKED THE PROPS FROM UNDER THE OLD METHods of selling and it saved the business existence of innumerable exhibitors.

NATURALLY, ATTEMPTS WERE MADE TO IMITATE IT. But without success.

WHY?

WELL, UNIVERSAL COMPLETE SERVICE IS MORE THAN A mere phrase or a form of contract. It is even more than my own personal desire to provide an intelligent means of booking small theatres. If it were nothing more than that, any company producing short subjects and features could imitate it tomorrow.

BUT BACK OF UNIVERSAL COMPLETE SERVICE IS THE fact that Universal is the only company equipped with the variety of product that makes Complete Service possible—and a willingness to use that variety in a genuinely helpful way.

CAN'T Imitate fully nmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation)

WHAT OTHER COMPANY COULD HAVE SOLD YOU THE equivalent of Universal Complete Service a year ago—if willing—and what company could have offered you the variety and selection of product that you need? Go down the list and you'll not find one to check! Go further. Combine the product of any other feature company and any single short product company — and still you haven't the variety you get under Universal Complete Service!

THIS IS NOT ACCIDENT. IT IS PLANNED. UNIVERSAL always has made pictures for all of you. Not for highbrow critics alone. Not for smaller theatres alone. But for all!

YOU NEED SPECIALS. YOU NEED CLASS FEATURES. YOU need Westerns. You need short westerns, too. You need varied comedies. You need news reels. And whether you need all of these, or part of these, Universal has them!

THE YEARS TO COME WILL BRING A LOT OF IMITATIONS of Universal Complete Service. But they are starting to school about twenty-one years too late!

THERE IS NOTHING "JUST AS GOOD" AS UNIVERSAL Complete Service. It is the most revolutionary move of years, and the more you analyze it the more you will realize it.

An Editor in Hollywood

Fifth of Series of Articles on the Production Centre

By William A. Johnston

¶ Great changes have been wrought at United Artists studios.
¶ In "The Gaucho," his new picture, Fairbanks has a strong spiritual note coupled with rattling adventure stuff.
¶ Grauman's Chinese Theatre is great. Atmospheric to the nth degree, with features absolutely unique among photoplay houses.
¶ Frank Newman has a showman's job on his hands with the Metropolitan, the Million Dollar and the Rialto, and he is making them pay.
¶ Mack Sennett goes his calm way, saying nothing, but ready to set his competitors a stiff pace in comedy production.
¶ Stern Brothers also ready for year's race for supremacy in short subject field.

Hollywood, April 19.

GREAT changes have been wrought at the United Artists studios. A few years ago the sets of "The Thief of Bagdad" dominated this entire lot; the shining silver mosque could be seen from a far distance in fact.

Today there's an orderly mass of great yellow concrete buildings, paved streets, rows of offices, etc.

The new street of charming bungalows now houses Mary Pickford, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Gloria Swanson, Corinne Griffith and John Barrymore. The latter has had a cage built on one side of his abode as a home for his pet monkey.

The monkey, says Mr. Barrymore, is a utility as well as a pet; he can grin at the studio visitors and do quite as well as his master.

Another story about Mr. Barrymore, in passing: he came back from Catalina Island the other day with a weird story involving undersea life, with forests of kelp, etc., and crabs and jelly fish as actors. This, he unfolded enthusiastically and proffered it to Joseph M. Schenck for production.

Mr. Schenck was not impressed.

"If I had the money," countered Barrymore, "I'd do it myself."

"I know you would," said Mr. Schenck. "That's why you haven't the money."

* * * *

GREAT changes, as I say, have happened on this lot, physical changes; but the personalities of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks dominate as ever.

I went out there with Edwin Schallert, of the Los Angeles Times, who, by the way, is rated head-and-shoulders above the rest here as reviewer and writer of things photoplay; and I note that Schallert devotes his entire article in the Times to these two, who have done so much for motion pictures.

Douglas Fairbanks is the same vital force, with the same boyish joy of living; and Mary Pickford the same thoughtful counsellor and charming woman.

Fairbanks served Russian tea, chatted about his trip to Europe, talked to his business associates, gave advice to his son, Doug Jr., made some interesting observations about Charlie Chaplin, introduced us to the Duncan sisters, who are filming "Topsy and Eva," talked rapidly about pictures, how much still remained to be done, gave us an exhibition along with an Argentine cowboy of his new skill with the Boleadoras (the Argentine lariat) and wound up a vivid afternoon with a rattling game, in his gymnasium, of "Doug," a combination of tennis and badminton.

William A. Johnston's Survey

All of which was, as ever, typically,—Fairbanks.

* * * *

IN "The Gaucho," his new picture, he believes he has the best story of his picture career.

And this unfolds the fact that the Fairbanks trips abroad are working trips. England gave him his inspiration for "Robin Hood" and Spain for "Don Q." On his last trip he brought back with him a profound impression of Lourdes, the famous shrine in Southern France, and the miracles wrought there.

So there will be strong spiritual note in "The Gaucho," a theme in fact; similar in plan to the lesson in "The Thief of Bagdad"—that happiness is earned.

He has not one but two woman parts of exceptional strength, so much so that Gloria Swanson and Lillian Gish have expressed much interest in them. He wants Dolores del Rio for the worldly woman part—and will have her if certain kinks in her contract with Edwin Carewe can be ironed out; for the spiritual woman part he has a "find," the name to be announced later on.

"The Gaucho" will be the title. He believes it better than the English term "The Cowboy" and that he can coin the new word both as to pronunciation and meaning with a preliminary and educational campaign of advertising to the trade and to the public.

The picture of course will be a rattling adventure one a la Fairbanks. The spiritual side he formerly had in mind for a picture in itself. It was Mary Pickford's idea to combine the two and it is also her belief that Doug should have heroines of stronger character and bolder relief.

It is to be hoped that Dolores del Rio can take part in the picture. But Edwin Carewe has cast her in "Ramona" and is already at work on his locations and Doug wants to start shooting about June 1st.

This young woman, by the way, will be in the starlight this year in "Resurrection," "Carmen" and "The Trail of '98"—all notable and contemporaneous pictures.

* * * *

"RESURRECTION" opened here this week at the Criterion and, by all signs, is in for a run. Del Rio does her best work here—a remarkable and finished performance. Rod La Rocque is excellent; the only criticism, and that is not vital with the average audience, is his make-up in the latter part of the picture—that it is too old for a lapse of seven years. "Resurrection" has a strong appeal to women and it is a most creditable contribution to pictures.

Manager Ralph Allen puts on a high-class and popular show at the Criterion; courtesy, snap, atmosphere, all are there in fine harmony. Jan Rubyne, his Little Symphony Orchestra, his specialties, all are delightful attractions.

"Mr. Wu" had its world premiere at the Forum on the same evening on which "Resurrection" opened. The picture did not get as much attention from the critics. But it is also in for a run. Lon Chaney seems about the surest-fire box office these days.

* * * *

I HAVE seen the Chinese Theatre here, and it is great!

Day after day I have walked by the boarded-up and locked-up front of Grauman's new dream theatre in Hollywood Boulevard and felt an intense desire to look inside. Other passersby evidently felt the same way about it; great curiosity prevails. Over the high boards you can see enough of the bronze pagoda towers and the tops of date palms to please but only intrigue.

Evidently Sid is afraid that someone will steal his atmosphere—and I don't blame him.

Here is an atmospheric theatre.

I judge that Mr. Grauman has been reading so much about John Eberson's atmospheric theatres in the East and South Atlantic that he said:

"The West Coast is the West Coast—always a leader in picture theatres. And the Pacific Coast knows atmosphere as is atmosphere.

"So we'll just give you a taste of Oriental art and splendor!"

of the Production Situation

At any rate, the passes were finally produced and the keys came forth and guided by watchmen, I went into and through a sanctuary of modern picture theatre beauty.

I would suggest that it's worth the trip here from New York just to see the Chinese Theatre.

It is exquisite. That's the one word; and it is a test indeed to apply it to a large theatre.

* * * *

SIGHTSEEING trips through theatres are generally boresome, so I'll try only to give some quick impressions.

A spacious court with large vari-colored tiles—neutral tints of yellow, green, red; date palms, bamboo trees, fountains, pools with goldfish, and a pagoda style box office so charming that it will be a pleasure—artistically at least—to deposit money there.

The foyer has four great columns of lacquer red, a silver ceiling shaded a cool blue by the play of lights, a Chinese screen of descriptive scenes in gray and black arising from floor to foyer dome.

The seats, of gray velour with ornamental leather backs and the sides cast in a special design with gold and black coloring, are restricted to the orchestra floor. There is a false balcony, the front of which is faced with shallow alcoves, containing magnificent lanterns. The stage is exceptionally large; the curtain heavily embroidered against a pale blue background; on either side a quaintly charming box; a great center chandelier with colored lights shaded by silk.

This is a piece of theatre art; only an artist could give an adequate description. As a film man, I can only remark, as Abe Warner did when he emerged from the opening night of the Roxy, "This is certainly an advance over the nickelodeon."

* * * *

GRAUMAN'S Egyptian Theatre is but a block away, so Hollywood will have in its midst two long-run houses when the Chinese Theatre opens on May 11th with "The King of Kings." Then, but another short distance down the boulevard, Warner Brothers are building a big one. There are those who say that Hollywood Boulevard is destined to be one of the most interesting streets in the world. Certainly, the theatre patronage here is remarkable. I have been to all four of the new legitimate theatres and, with the exception of El Capitan, found them packed. "Alias the Deacon" is in for a run of twenty weeks.

* * * *

FRANK NEWMAN came up from his busy job of running the Metropolitan, the Million Dollar and the Rialto theatres in downtown Los Angeles to have lunch—and a most interesting one.

What with the investment in the Metropolitan and the long-run houses here drawing away the big pictures, he has a showman's job on his hands. But he is making his theatres pay, even with a heavy added overhead since he took charge. If New York headquarters approve a new schedule he outlined to me they will, I believe, do better still.

It is worthy of remark that eighteen years ago, in Saint Jo, Frank Newman was giving a good orchestra with his picture bill and at ten cents admission. He still believes in the drawing power of this true and tried entertainment combination. Eddie Peabody, a local favorite, is just now an added attraction at the Metropolitan, backed by heavy advertising. When "We're in the Navy Now" had its recent long run at the Million Dollar his presentation set cost twenty-five dollars and less than eight hundred more for a chorus of twenty-four male voices.

Which latter I cheerfully submit, for cost comparisons, to the metropolitan theatres of the East.

* * * *

THE Carthay Circle is one of the wonders of today's theatre world—a neighborhood house, and distinctly so, with high admissions and picture runs as long as six months. It isn't as far out, however, as I had been led to believe. Looking down at night from Beverly Hills—upon the magic panorama of the Los Angeles plain, you observe that its lighted dome is well in the midst of many dwellings.

The Week in Review

Comment on Passing Affairs

WILLIAM LE BARON, who was appointed as vice-president of F.B.O. in charge of production was announced last week, has put in a busy time since then, getting acquainted with things, seeing past F.B.O. product, reading the scripts of pictures in production or about to start, studying the story line-up for the year, preparing to go to the Coast, and a thousand and one details. He stopped long enough, the other day, however, to tell us something of what he hopes to do in this hustling organization.

We discovered, first of all, that Mr. Le Baron has known Joseph P. Kennedy, the president of F.B.O., for upwards of ten years, so the move is a natural one. Kennedy is constantly on the alert for means of further improving F.B.O.'s output to keep pace with the times—and what more logical than to bring Le Baron, Edwin C. King's former teammate at the Paramount Long Island studios, to the Coast to share with him the responsibility of making F.B.O. pictures? The combination has already proved itself a strong and ideal one—therefore it involved no experiment to bring it back together.

Le Baron stresses the fact that his going to the Coast will not affect King's position. "There are two big jobs in running a studio," he says, "that of physical operation of the plant, and the other, which is the creative side. Mr. King will have charge of the first, I will have the other. Our authority will be equal, each in his own field. It will be great to be teamed up with him again, and I hope we will be able to do some gratifying things.

"I am not going out with the intention of a 'shake-up' or a complete reorganization. There are no doubt a great many capable, competent people at the F.B.O. studios, and there would be no object in changing everything about to make a show of authority. My job will be to study ways and means of making F.B.O. pictures better—and that does not necessarily mean spending a lot more money. It is a matter of planning—of story construction—of thought and ingenuity, rather than dollars and cents. I have seen many pictures which could have been made much better, using the same actors, the same sets, the same general resources—in other words, at about the same cost—had they been approached a bit differently. That will be my job at F.B.O., and I am looking forward with enthusiasm to getting started on it."

STAGE and screen used to be considered mortal enemies, but that idea goes into the discard with the opening of "Spread Eagle," a new Broadway play that shapes up like a hit. There's a picture theatre scene, in which the actual audience at the play becomes the audience in an imaginary movie house, and not so imaginary either, because a screen is lowered in the most approved fashion, and Pathe News flashes on. Scenes of "The War with Mexico," which is the motivation of the play, are shown, and then two of the characters are carried by screen action down to the border. When the final spoken act starts, there they are, just as if they had stepped from the films into real life.

It's a clever idea and has the effect of giving the whole play a novel twist. The more so, as the distinct news weekly idea fitted perfectly into the play. There have been productions before which were part spoken play and part picture, but this is the first time, so far as we know, that the news weekly has become part of the actual dramatic action on the stage.

THOSE interested in the Chinese film trade would do well to obtain a copy of "The Chinese Motion Picture Market," compiled by Clarence J. North, chief of the Motion Picture Section of the Specialties Division, U. S. Department of Commerce. This 42-page booklet, obtainable for a few cents from the department, covers the field with amazing comprehensiveness, taking up the history of motion pictures in China, position of American films, Chinese tastes, domestic production, the synopsis of a typical Chinese photoplay, distribution in the various areas, theatres in the cities, special laws, tariff, taxes, piracy, industrial films, advertising, educational pictures, fan magazines, and a complete table of producers, distributors and theatres.

SAM KATZ, president of Publix and a director of Paramount, spoke recently before the students of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration on the business fundamentals of theatre operation. He traced the development and rise of the picture theatre, touching upon selection of site, problems of financing, architecture and policy. He exhibited various forms used in this work, and went into details of operation, personnel, training, service, accounting, ventilation and refrigeration. Most important, however, were the things he had to say about ideals and community spirit in circuit operation:

"More and more is the motion picture theatre becoming essentially a community institution, in the very best sense that the term implies. Every far-seeing person, whether engaged in the business or merely a patron, recognizes that a properly conducted theatre is as important to a community as a school or church, for wholesome recreation and entertainment are among the essentials of modern community life.

"Order, system, cleanliness, comfort and comparative luxury in appointments—these are the outward manifestations of good management. But back of all these lies what we who have the best interests of the motion picture theatre at heart are striving for—that intangible something which means institutional character. The theatre that possesses this attribute, we find, is the only one that will continue to draw steady patronage week after week, month after month, and year after year.

"It is the idealism that is put into theatre operation that ensures against failure when the veneer of novelty, which may attract for a time, wears off. This idealism is the thing that changes a business into an institution.

"While the formation of country-wide theatre chains or circuits has been dictated primarily by economic necessity, it has been the very best thing imaginable for the development of the theatre as a community institution. Standardization of entertainment for all sizes of towns and all types of audiences is impossible. But standardization of operation, through the development and interchange of ideas of real service and the inculcation of ideals of management, is not only possible but practical. In fact, this seems to me the most important and most truly worthwhile angle of chain or circuit operation."

THE value of the Schuefftan method of trick photography by means of mirrors, the American rights to which are held by Universal, should be definitely established by "Metropolis," recently on view at the Rialto in New York. This makes possible a multiplicity of effects obtainable in no other way.

We are in receipt of a letter from the Aktiengesellschaft fuer Spiegeltechnik, the German company controlling these patents, listing the scenes in "Metropolis" done in this way, including: the workmen's city below ground; the stadion; the yoshiwara, outside and inside; the Moloch machine; the engine house; the interior of the church; the bridge with motor cars; the tower of Babel; the house of Rotwang; and the street scenes.

Pictures and music dominate the excellent entertainment, under the able collaboration of Manager Fred Miller and Musical Director Carli Elinor.

MOST everywhere you go out here, in Studioland, someone on the set and always some outstanding hit, is pointed out as a recent or past graduate of the Mack Sennett studios. One gets the impression that most feature stars got their start and training with this master of comedies.

In the meantime Mack Sennett goes his own calm and uncommunicative way. I don't know of any producer who is more deeply and more completely out of the studio life here than this same person. Neither he nor his studio change one bit. So far I have only peeped through the gates; he himself is always in a story conference. So probably he is fixing to show these new short feature programs a stiff pace in comedy production.

STERN BROTHERS, in the brand new and compact studio, are also ready for the year's competition among seven national distributors.

They have this imposing list of the kings of the comic sections: George MacManus, Pop Momand, Rube Goldberg, R. F. Outcault and Ring Lardner.

And these famous series: "Let George Do It," "Keeping Up with the Joneses," "The Newlyweds and Their Baby," "Buster Brown," "Mike and Ike" and "You Know Me, Al."

Here's a wealth of ready-made advertising with the public.

Production, too, is greatly facilitated by this policy of pictures in series.

The Perfect Man

GEORGE O'BRIEN, according to Dr. E. A. Skaletar, California physician, is the "perfect man," both physically and mentally. The physician was called upon to examine O'Brien prior to the three grueling fights in "Is Zat So?" after which he made this statement, saying he was amazed to find an actor in such magnificent condition. Physical condition is paramount with the Fox star. He neither drinks nor smokes, eats carefully, keeps regular hours and takes plenty of varied exercise. His chest is 44 and his collar 16½, but his waistline varies between 28 and 30. He is six feet tall and weighs 180 pounds.

Honesty Commended

BERT ADLER'S recent article in THE NEWS concerning a recognition of the truth about Europe by the American industry won hearty commendation from Kinematograph Weekly, the British trade journal, which said:

"Better in touch with trade opinion over here than most Americans, he bluntly tells the New York trade some of the reasons for the British viewpoint, and we hope that his outspokenness will bear fruit. He reminds them of sharp practice on the part of producing and exhibiting interests against the small exhibitor; of the method which uses the big firm's output as a club to drive the exhibitor into an unwanted partnership; of the scant courtesy accorded to the visiting producer when he tries to sell his picture in New York; of the ill-chosen representatives that America sends abroad."

Oh, to Be in China. . . .

ALL the above scenes were taken with Devry . . . impossible to use regular camera." This explanation, appended to James Seeback's title and dispatching sheet on 1,400 feet of film of the Chinese revolution, caused considerable speculation among the editors and cameramen of Fox News when it was received a few weeks ago. All-revealing was a story in the Shanghai Times, a copy of which was received in the office of Fox News this week. It read, in part:

"Surrounded by a mob of angry Cantonese sympathizers at Yu Yuen Road and the Shanghai-Hangchow Railway, three American photographers were robbed, pelted with stones, beaten with bamboo poles and rescued from certain death by a Cantonese officer and a number of Cantonese soldiers on Tuesday afternoon.

"The photographers were Messrs. G. T. Rucker of the Pathe Film Company; James Seeback, representing the Fox Film Company, and T. E. Grant, of the London Daily Mirror.

"The Cantonese officer demanded that the mob return Mr. Rucker's belongings and, after a delay, the camera, minus the lens, was returnred. Mr. Seeback lost a camera valued at $1,500."

Titles in the Ash Can

TWO assistant directors, four stage hands and half a dozen extras joined hands this week for nearly a day in pursuing an ash wagon over New York City. The cause of this strange behavior was a set of titles written by James Ashmore Creelman for his newly complete Robert T. Kane production for First National, "High Hat." He had written them in manuscript form and left them laying on his desk. The first title was: "I'm Through with This," so the janitor gathered them up and threw them out. When this was discovered, next morning, Harold Godso gathered up the aforementioned crew and started in search of City Disposal Wagon No. 582. Late in the afternoon it was overtaken, and the titles found. Not the first set of titles to be thrown in the ash can, but probably the first to be rescued from that fate.

Mechanics Make Merry

LAST Saturday evening the motion picture studio mechanics of the New York local held forth at the Hotel Astor on Broadway and the way in which they handled the annual get-together left nothing to be desired in the matter of entertainment, dance music or the midnight viands served at just the right time, if you know what we mean. One of the best aggregations of stage talent seen in some time performed for the edification of the guests on the floor of the grand ballroom. The artists, secured through the courtesy of the B. F. Keith booking office, comprised the "Little Devils" of the Bunny Weldon Revue, now playing at Everglades, a popular New York night club; Monroe and Bailey, Jack Unger's Revue, George Stamper and many others. The "Little Devils" proved the outstanding hit of the evening.

Following the entertainment the grand march was staged with Ben Lyon and Gilda Gray heading the procession which, at its climax, was photographed. Many high officials of the various theatrical unions were present, as well as leading social lights. Seen in the audience were Mr. Gompers, Jr., William S. Canavan and R. H. Hammer. Heading the committee on arrangements were Mr. Scoppa, Charles O'Laughlin and John Doran. The affair was well attended and there was no lack of good fun.

Foreign Legionnaires Here

FOUR of the group of foreign representatives of Paramount have arrived in New York in the last few days to attend the annual spring sales convention of the company, May 2nd to 5th, and to confer with E. E. Shauer, general manager of the company's foreign department, regarding future distribution plans in their respective territories.

They are John W. Hicks, Jr., of Sydney, Australia, managing director of the Australasian organization, accompanied by Mrs. Hicks and their young son; John L. Day, Jr., of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, general manager of the Paramount South American organizations; R. A. Loomis, of Guatemala City, branch manager for Guatemala, and Harry Novak, of Cristobal, Canal Zone, branch manager for Panama.

Woods Morrison, Author

JAMES MORRISON, actor, has blossomed out as Woods Morrison, author, with the publication by G. P. Putnam's Sons of "Road End." A member of the Vitagraph stock company when that firm was in its heyday, Morrison has enjoyed a wide following as an actor, and we hope that "Road End" will be instrumental in starting him off toward equal popularity as a fictionist. We have not yet had time to read the entire book, but a perusal of the first few chapters augurs well for its merits. It is written in a lively, flowing style that carries the reader along breezily and catches the interest from the start. Its hero is out of a job in New York, with a dollar in his pocket. He decides to spend that on a taxi ride, his taxi crashes into another, and thus meets THE girl and her ogre-like aunt. They leave a newspaper behind them, and he finds a marked want ad for a chauffeur at Road End on Long Island. He accepts Fate's hint, pawns his suitcase, and goes to Road End, where he gets the job. Mystery starts piling up, with Persian cats, bootleggers, chorus girls, detectives and what not thrown in for good measure. We don't know the outcome yet ourselves, so you'll have to buy the book to find out. It sounds like great movie material for a star such as, for instance, Ben Lyon.

Costly Fan Mail

HARRY LANGDON, according to the ever truthful press agent, has discovered a new and effective, if somewhat expensive, way of building fan mail. Two youngsters in the slums of New York's East Side wrote Langdon some time ago saying that they wanted to see "Long Pants" when it came to the Strand, but that family financial circumstances made it impossible. Langdon sent each of them a small check and a letter telling them to see it as his guests. Within three weeks thereafter he received more than a thousand letters from East Side New York youngsters offering to see "Long Pants" at the Strand—at his expense.

Lya de Putti Entertains

SEVERAL members of the trade, fans and daily press were the guests of Lya de Putti at luncheon last Thursday, a few hours prior to her departure for the Coast. She had only arrived on Sunday, but a wired offer from Universal of the chief role in "Midnight Rose" sent her back to the Coast post-haste. The same thing happened when she was in New York before; she arrived for a vacation, and a couple of days later De Mille signed her by wire for a part and the vacation was terminated.

She takes her frustrated vacation efforts philosophically, however. She likes Hollywood immensely, but not when she is idle between pictures, so she prefers to take the long train ride for even a few days in New York rather than remain inactive.

Miss De Putti feels that she has suffered badly from miscasting here; that the American public liked her in "Variety" but has not in her pictures here, because she has been given "vamp" roles of a wholly unsympathetic character. She will have no more of them, she declares, and hopes that "Midnight Rose" will bring her something more in keeping with what she wants. We hope so, too, for we should like to see the vibrant, vivid figure that we saw in "Variety" once more.

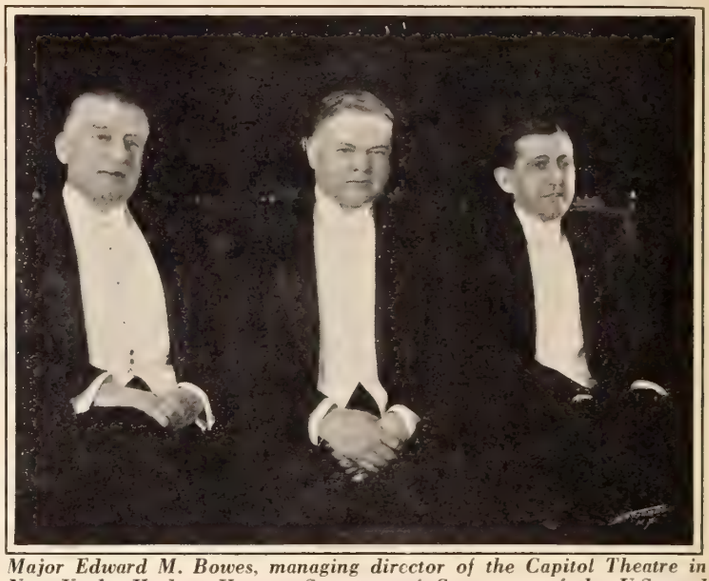
W. Pathe Club to Hold Two

C. SMITH, president of the Pathe Club, announces two meetings of this social organization for the month of April. On April 21st, at 1600 Broadway, the organization will hold its regular monthly meeting and dance with music by the Pathe Club Orchestra. On April 30th the Home Office Pathe Club will entertain, as its guests, the Philadelphia Club. The Quaker City men's and women's organization bowling teams will play return matches with the home office "roosters." In addition to dancing on this occasion, there will also be a special entertainment program.

Walsh's Twice-Done "Carmen"

RAOUL WALSH has been getting a particular "kick" out of producing "Carmen" for Fox Films—the more so because it is the second time he has directed it, and for the same company. Years ago, when Walsh first gave up the greasepaint for the megaphone, he made "Carmen" with Theda Bara in the title role. Walsh was called into the office of William Fox on a Saturday and told he was to film "Carmen." Over the week-end the scenario was written, the cast selected, locations found and costumes rented. Monday found the company at work and two and one-half weeks later the completed picture was being previewed by Fox executives.

But witness the new version. Six months were spent in preparation alone. The story was written and rewritten. Special agents were sent to Spain to collect costumes. Three weeks—more than it took to film the first version—were taken up in casting the principal roles. Location trips included Juarez and Mexico City, and all told, the time consumed in making the second production was fifteen times that of the first.



*"The King of Kings"

TWO asterisks were awarded this week by the National Board of Review. The first deservedly went to Cecil B. De Mille for bringing to the screen the story of Christ in "The King of Kings"; the second went to Pathe Review, issue No. 21.

W Brings Bride Back from Abroad

HEN Pierre Collings, Paramount scenarist, left Hollywood last spring to go to New York and write a script or two there he did not anticipate returning with a bride. But he did, just the same, last week.

Collings met his fate under most unromantic circumstances while he was in Paris personally photographing some exterior scenes for "The Popular Sin." He had arranged to stop sidewalk traffic for one "shot" of the entrance to Alfred Savoir's home, and was cranking his camera, when a strange young lady walked into the scene and spoiled it.

Major Edward M. Bowes, managing dirccor of the Capitol Theatre in New York; Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce of the U.S., and Will H. Hays, president of the M.P.P.D.A., photographed together at the annual A.M.P.A. dinner recently.

The writer, or acting cameraman, admits that he "bawled her out" very heartily, and when she walked away without replying he thought the incident closed. However, as he leaned over the rail of the Olympic on his way home, weeks later, he saw the tender from Cherbourg deliver the same young lady on board the steamer. And lo! she was most attractive.

To make the story short, Collings' apologies were accepted by Miss Natalie Harris, special European correspondent of the "Boston Traveler," and they became good friends on the homeward voyage. That was in October, and on December 23 Miss Harris changed her name to Collings.

Watch Big Boy!

BIG BOY, the serious imp in Educational-Juvenile comedies, whom we freely, frankly and unshamedly confess is our favorite movie actor, is crashing in among the big timers. The other day we ran into a number of his pictures in obscure Central European newspapers, and this last week the Buffalo Courier Express used his picture on Page One, no less, in connection with a special children's party.

W Goldbeck, Ingram Scenarist, Returns

ILLIS GOLDBECK, who wrote the scenario for Rex Ingram's picturization of Robert Hichens' novel, "The Garden of Allah," for Metro-Goldwyn, has returned to the United States after several months spent in southern France and Africa, and will go out to Hollywood after taking a short vacation in the East. He reports excellent progress by the Ingram Company, now making "The Garden of Allah" on location in northern Africa.

Color Unit Returning

HAL HALL, directing "Call of the Sea," a picture in technicolor of Colorart with Hope Hampton in the principal feminine role, writes from Bermuda to say that the company would leave there on Tuesday. Gorgeous outdoor shots have been obtained, he says, and he expresses high hopes of coming back with the most beautiful color subject yet made.

Edna Murphy to Wed

THE latest engagement to be announced in the film colony is that of Edna Murphy, leading lady to Monte Blue in Warner's "The Black Diamond Express," to Mervyn Le Roy, who has been assigned to direct Colleen Moore in her next picture.

Negri Sails on Vacation

POLA NEGRI arrived in New York City on Monday morning and on Tuesday night sailed on the Aquitania for a European vacation. She will be gone for several weeks.

Industry Mobilizes To Aid Flood Sufferers in South

Hays, Richards and Woodhull Issue Appeals—Exchanges to Co-operate in Benefit Performances at Theatres

THE industry got busy this week in active relief measures to aid the sufferers in the Mississippi basin, where the floods are the worst in history. A large number of theatres have been put out of commission, but what the total is has not yet been determined. Exchanges in St. Louis, Little Rock, Memphis and New Orleans find the ordinary routine of business demoralized.

An urgent appeal was issued by E. V. Richards, Jr., of the Saenger Amusement Co., New Orleans, who declared in a telegram to MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

"I am sure our entire industry would respond if they were here and could realize serious need and increasing suffering in Mississippi Valley."

Mr. Richards announced that benefit performances were being arranged immediately in all the towns of the Saenger Circuit and all Publix houses in the South. Entire gross receipts will be given to the Red Cross. Admission prices will be advanced for these performances. In the six day towns performances will be given on Sunday and in the seven day towns, midnight performances. Extensive advertising will be used.

Immediate action by all picture theatres was urged in a statement issued by Will H. Hays, who added that theatres controlled by distributor members of the Hays organization have enlisted in the cause.

A proclamation was issued by R. F. Woodhull, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, appealing to exhibitors to act without delay.

Telegrams were sent out from the headquarters of the Film Boards of Trade, following a meeting of general sales managers of national distributors in New York.

These wires went to the presidents of all film boards of trade in the United States and Canada, and authorized co-operation with exhibitors by contributing pictures in specific instances where theatres give benefit performances under the auspices of the Red Cross or other relief organizations provided all receipts are given to flood relief funds.

It was recommended that exhibitor arbitrators be asked to act upon committees with members of the local film boards.

Statement by Hays

The statement issued by Mr. Hays follows:

"We have suggested to motion picture theatres throughout the United States and Canada that they aid the American Red Cross promptly in gathering funds to aid the sufferers in this terrible emergency," said Mr. Hays. "At a meeting of the directors of our association today the assistance of the motion picture producers and distributors was pledged for this relief work and their hundreds of theatres were enlisted in the cause. Special performances are to be given in many theatres.

"The news reels are carrying to every motion picture theatre patron in the country an appeal for funds for the Red Cross and through actual scenes of the disaster are bringing vividly to the public the urgent need for relief."

Mr. Hays gave out the following telegram received from Homer V. Guy, owner of the Apollo Theatre in Dayton, O., a city that knows what flood suffering can mean:

"Have turned over entire theatre to Dayton Automobile Club Thursday night for benefit of flood sufferers. Mayor of city, city manager, chief of police, congressmen, directors of automobile clubs, will act as ticket sellers, doormen and ushers. Getting up special display in front of theatre using old boats of Dayton's 1913 flood as an appeal and object lesson."

Messages were sent by Mr. Hays to Herbert Hoover, Henry M. Baker, director of disaster relief of the American Red Cross, and to the governors of the afflicted States as follows:

"In behalf of the motion picture producers and distributors of America we express deepest sympathy for the flood sufferers. Our news weeklies are carrying appeals to the public to subscribe to Red Cross at nearest Red Cross chapter. Can you suggest any other effective means for the motion picture industry to be of service in this emergency?"

George E. Scott of the central committee of the Red Cross replied:

"We deeply appreciate quick and generous co-operation by motion picture industry and motion picture theatres throughout United States with Red Cross disaster relief fund campaign. In accordance your request only additional suggestion we have would be possibly special collection in all motion picture theatres or special benefit performances behalf fund by motion picture theatres. This procedure now being done in many cities. Wish to assure you, however, greatest possible co-operation by motion picture industry is continued use in connection news weeklies flood pictures adequate Red Cross captions and appeal to public to subscribe to Red Cross at nearest Red Cross chapter."

In Los Angeles the entire local industry mobilized for a special benefit performance at the Metropolitan Theatre, April 29th, to raise funds to be turned over to the Red Cross.

The performance was organized as the result of a suggestion wired by Harold B. Franklin from New York. Full co-operation was given by Fred Beetson of the Association of Motion Picture Producers.

Woodhull Urges Speed

In his proclamation to exhibitors, President Woodhull of the M.P.T.O.A. said:

"We therefore desire to call the attention of all motion picture theatre owners to this deplorable situation now confronting many thousands of men, women and children in all of the cities and towns affected by this flood, and earnestly urge every theatre owner to do everything possible to help raise funds to alleviate this acute distress and help their afflicted fellow citizens to restore normal conditions in their home centers.

ACT QUICKLY

FROM E. V. Richards at New Orleans comes an urgent appeal for the whole industry to act immediately in aid of the flood sufferers. He puts the crisis in these words:

"I am sure our entire industry would respond if they were here and could realize the serious need and increasing suffering in the Mississippi Valley."

Commendable measures have been taken and plans are under way to meet the situation. These are described in detail in this issue.

We add our voice to the appeals already made and we feel sure the whole industry will again demonstrate in emphatic fashion that it is always in the forefront in relieving suffering by contributing its services and its dollars.

Here is a great need. Let each one of us do his part and do it now.

—William A. Johnston

Big Damages to Industry in Flood Area

"To this end we suggest that every possible action be taken by all theatre owners to achieve immediate results. The need is pressing and must be met at once. Let all State and regional organization offices act on this matter without delay and individual theatre owners take it upon themselves to introduce co-operation with these offices and others, to push such plans into practice at once as will create funds for the flood sufferers.

"We suggest one or two ways to effect immediate results. One is to give a portion of a specified day's receipts. Another is to use the world war plan of four-minute speakers to take up collections in the audience.

"Time is the most essential element. If your organization has not had the time to act officially in this matter and appoint a custodian of these flood funds, then take the money to the mayor or some other executive official of your community and have him forward it with all possible speed to the flood sufferers.

"The big thing in this movement is SPEED. Act at once. Collect all the money you possibly can. Remember that, 'A friend in need is a friend indeed' and act with all possible haste."

Many Theatres Hit

Theatres in scores of towns in the Mississippi basin have been put out of business or damaged by the unprecedented floods. The story is told in a graphic series of dispatches to MOTION PICTURE NEWS. They follow:

Memphis, Tenn.—C. W. McKean, president of the Little Rock-Memphis Film Board of Trade, declares that all exchanges are being severely crippled by the flood conditions. With the breaking of several main levees, the condition has reached an acute stage with thousands homeless in the inundated area. Arkansas is completely cut off from service, but the western portion of Tennessee and the northern part of Mississippi can still be reached.

Manager John Franconi of the F.B.O. exchange states that service in his branch is more than 50 per cent curtailed as the pictures now in the hands of Arkansas exhibitors cannot be shipped to Tennessee exhibitors having bookings on the same films.

In some of the flood-bound cities of Arkansas theatres are running the same pictures over and over, exchanging them with other theatres that can be reached by improvised transportation. One picture has played twelve theatres in the partly inundated town of Newport, and if relief does not come soon it will probably make the rounds again.

The entire region is demoralized and manpower to fight the situation has been commandeered for miles. The Red Cross is pushing relief and rehabilitation, but the disaster has reached such alarming proportions that the forces are unequal to cope with it.

New Orleans—The past week was one of the worst ever experienced by New Orleans theatres. Torrential rains fell steadily for almost twenty-four hours, few theatregoers ventured out and the result was a big falling off in attendance. The rains flooded the business section and residential section of the city.

The New Saenger $2,500,000 theatre and Loew's State suffered thousands of dollars of damage due to the high water, which flooded the basements of these playhouses. Both organs at these places were badly damaged. Both suspended performances on Saturday, one of the biggest days of the week for the downtown theatres.

St. Louis—"Surrounded by water. No parcel post open. First-class mail by skiff."

This laconic message received by a St. Louis exchange from E. J. Ballinger of Hunter, Ark., tersely tells the story of death and ruin that is sweeping through the lower Mississippi Valley—the worst flood in the history of the North American Continent.

Exchanges in St. Louis, Memphis and Little Rock that are serving the stricken towns in eastern Missouri, southern Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi have had their business demoralized, and that it will be absolutely impossible to make up the losses this season is a situation that national distributors must face.

Coupled with the national coal strike, which now has southern Illinois in its throes, the St. Louis film center is facing the worst situation in its history.

Parcel post service into and out of St. Louis is shot to pieces and exchanges have been forced to adopt the policy of no show until the last is returned. And with the parcel post suspended in many sections that will force suspension of many houses that have survived the high waters.

The towns put out of business in Arkansas and Mississippi run into the hundreds, but not all of them have shows. Clarendon, Marked Tree, Judsonia, Cotton Plant, Des Arc and Hunter were among the more important Arkansas theatre towns completely put out of business.

Atlanta, Ga. (By Anna Aiken Patterson)—The flood situation in Arkansas and Mississippi along the river and in the delta area is the worst in history, according to latest reports. Many theatres in that section are completely out of commission and others, on higher ground, are being used to house refugees. This is particularly true of the Strand, Universal house, at Jonesboro, Ark.

E. V. Richards, of New Orleans, general manager of the Saenger Theatres, operating houses in Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas, several days ago estimated his company's losses from flood already had passed a quarter of a million dollars. The amusement business in the affected area is demoralized and it is believed will not be able to recover entirely for several years to come.

Exchanges in New Orleans, Memphis and other cities are unable to get prints in or out of certain sections. In towns not directly affected by floods but cut off from proper transportation facilities, the same film is being played over and over, from one house to another.

St. Louis (By Harry Weiss, president St. Louis Film Board of Trade)—Every effort is being made by the St. Louis exchanges to maintain an uninterrupted film delivery service in the flooded area in southern Illinois and Missouri. Some of the towns and theatres are under water to the extent of 12 feet. Towns of this latter class include New Madrid, Mo., at which the Mississippi River, ordinarily one mile wide, is 25 miles wide at the present time. Perryville, Mo., due to high water, is cut off from parcel post, express and mail deliveries. Altenburg, Mo., and Cape Girardeen are the same.

The towns affected at the present time on which we can get no reports as to whether the theatres are running or not are listed below. Where we have reports that the theatres are not running, it is so noted:

Hannibal, Mo.; Louisiana, Mo.; Clarksville, Mo. (not running theatre on account of high water); Crystal City, Mo.; St. Genevieve, Mo.; Altenburg, Mo.; Perryville, Mo.; Cape Girardeau, Mo. (water rising; theatre will keep on running until forced to stop); Alton, Ill. (water standing in dressing rooms to the depth of 12 inches; will suspend operations when water gets into auditorium); Wood River, Ill. (will suspend operations if water continues to rise—within one foot of street level at present writing); Chester, Ill. (will suspend operations if water rises another foot).

The theatres at Thebes and McClure are closed and under water.

This does not take in the towns that are inland and which local creeks and rivers and back-water from the Mississippi have affected.

For the first time in the history of the moving picture business in St. Louis, films are being shipped by Mississippi River boats. The Eagle Packet Company is delivering film with no trouble. The docks in many towns are under water but the boats get as close to a landing place as possible.

Emergency truck service has been put into service by the Film Board of Trade to get shows to exhibitors where the mails, express companies and railroads have ceased operations.

From available information at hand, the crest of the high waters will not be reached in this district until pretty nearly the end of the month. The Mississippi River is rising slowly and the dikes along the river already weakened from the strain of the high water in the last two weeks are apt to give way momentarily.

Rosenthal Gets Columbia's Product for St. Louis

Negotiations for the continuation of his Columbia franchise in the St. Louis territory were consummated this week, when Barney Rosenthal signed a contract with Joe Brandt, President of Columbia Pictures, for the distribution of Columbia's 1927-28 product in his territory.

Mr. Rosenthal also signed a contract for the 1927-28 series of "Screen Snapshots," Columbia's "fan magazine of the screen."

Percentage for Lloyd Pictures

Important Statement by W. R. Fraser Also Declares Comedian Does Not Wish to Saddle Exhibitor With Unreasonable Admission Price

IN an important statement of policy made this week, William R. Fraser, general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, declared that his company had come to the conclusion that the percentage plan is the only equitable arrangement for producer and exhibitor.

Mr. Fraser, on behalf of Harold Lloyd, also stated that his company felt its best interests, as well as the best interests of the exhibitor, would be served by an admission price that will enable the greatest possible number of persons to see his pictures.

The Fraser statement follows:

"The problems and interests of the motion picture producer and exhibitor have become so closely related these days that the industry is at the stage where the much mooted question of percentage is again a highlight of consideration in its affairs. Countless arguments have been advanced for and against percentage, but after an exhaustive investigation of the entire situation, the Harold Lloyd Corporation has come to the conclusion that in the instance of a product of the high-class nature consistently produced by Harold Lloyd, the only equitable arrangement for both producer and exhibitor, is one calling for a sharing arrangement based on a percentage of individual box office receipts taken in each theatre.

"For several years we have devoted most of our time to this problem of the industry, and we have concluded that there is no little foundation upon which can be built any schedule of flat rentals that will adequately protect at the same time the exhibitor's and the producer's interests. Box office values of any picture or series of pictures vary so extensively that no proper estimate can be arrived at on a flat rental basis, even in the instance of standard attractions, such as Harold Lloyd releases. General conditions beyond the control of the producer or the exhibitor frequently make estimates grossly inaccurate.

"Because of the ever-increasing cost of production, an independent producer such as the Harold Lloyd Corporation is confronted constantly by the problem of obtaining fair returns at the box offices of America's motion picture theatres for the product they make. Prosperity for the exhibitor and success for the producer in the last analysis comes only from expanded box office returns. The first step in obtaining maximum box office returns is, of course, the making of pictures that merit and receive the fullest approval and patronage of the public. This act alone has the tendency to assure maximum national box office returns. "Star value," common to so many picture attractions, is nothing more than an accumulation of public satisfaction accorded to the past offerings of the leading player of the picture in question.

"The making of excellent pictures in only the first step toward adequate box office returns. There is no question but that next in importance to the merit of the attraction offered, returns are most vitally influenced by the method of presenting the picture to the public. The successful handling of this phase of the problem rests largely on how well a picture is exploited and advertised, as well as staged. By the general nature of the picture business at this time, exploitation and advertising of pictures, in addition to their suitable presentation, is very largely an exhibitor's problem. It is true that certain pictures in recent years have been exploited and advertised by producers direct to the public to such an extent that box office records have been established, even on "specials" of ordinary quality. No way has as yet been devised, however, to apply this procedure to anything other than an occasional big special that can be sold to the public on a road-show scale of admission prices, and as far as the Harold Lloyd Corporation is concerned it is not interested in this type of production or exploitation. It is primarily interested in making pictures that the regularly established motion picture theatre can play and profit by.

"Since the release of "Grandma's Boy," the first feature-length subject starring Harold Lloyd, he has offered direct to the standard motion picture theatres nine feature-length subjects designed to fulfill every requirement of supreme audience satisfaction. Harold Lloyd has taken the gamble out of motion picture values in every case where the exhibitor has gotten behind his offerings with proper exploitation and presentation, so that he might obtain the fullest measure of box office returns. In the records of Harold Lloyd production he has still to make a single picture that did not come up to the standard of the highest class of comedy. Under his method of production it is virtually impossible for him to produce a picture under standard, for, regardless of money involved, Lloyd demands a good picture. Nothing else matters with Harold. His primary interest is production. He has turned over completely the selling of his pictures to his business organization, for the problem of making consistently funny pictures demands that his interest in that direction be undivided.

"The task of building his pictures up to a standard of perfection is performed within the limits of human ingenuity. No expense is spared and no sacrifice too great for the star himself, or his organization, to insure the first requirement of large national box office returns and the production of high class pictures. This requirement having been built into every Lloyd attraction, it is only logical that the second claim on box office satisfaction and success, that of proper advertising exploitation and presentation, must legitimately be expected of the exhibitor.

"Maximum box office results forthcoming from the building of an excellent picture, preceded by a number of other excellent pictures from the same star, and which have been properly exploited, advertised and staged by the exhibitor, should naturally be enjoyed by those who create these big returns. Hence it is inevitable that the only proper measure of returns to producer and exhibitor is found in a sharing arrangement based on a percentage of individual box office receipts. We must repeat that there is little foundation upon which can be built any schedule of flat rentals that will adequately protect the exhibitor's interest and the producer's welfare. It is the conditions beyond the control of the producer and exhibitor which make rental estimates so grossly inaccurate. On a percentage basis we are sharing the gamble on local conditions with the exhibitor and profit only to the extent to which we are entitled through the drawing power of our product, and through the exploitation effort we logically feel the exhibitor should place behind our attractions.

"When a producer has delivered the maximum in quality and when the exhibitor has taken full advantage of this performance by proper exploitation, advertising and presentation, a percentage engagement permits each to profit by their creative energy, whereas an inaccurate flat rental arrangement leaves both parties at the mercy of every outside influence and prevents a proper compensation for outstanding performance. It is only through the application of correct principles of percentage distribution that the Lloyd Corporation has received national returns that make it possible for them to continue building a superlative quality of productions year after year, in spite of tremendous increases in production costs.

"In this same connection there naturally arises the question of increased admission prices. This is a matter which the Harold Lloyd Corporation feels can be worked out to the best advantage of all concerned through the mutual co-operation of exhibi-

M. P. T. O. of Buffalo Disapproves New Film Board of Trade Zoning Plan

THE tentative zoning plan submitted by the Film Board of Trade, Buffalo, New York, to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the Buffalo Zone, has not met with the approval of the latter. Proclaiming that the matter of buying and selling pictures should remain a matter of free trading between distributor and exhibitor, the committee of fifteen exhibitors, representing Buffalo, Rochester, Niagara Falls, Batavia, Syracuse, reached the conclusion that if the zoning plan were put into effect along the lines suggested by the Film Board of Trade, it would prove to be a restraint upon trade and for that reason, the committee said, the exhibitors' organization could not become a party to it.

The committee of fifteen was appointed to meet on April 8 and went into detail on the zoning proposition as submitted. The committee reported back to the exhibitor unit at a special meeting held on April 15.

Publix-Sparks Circuit Deal Near Close

Affiliation of Above Named and Publix-Saenger Near Consummation, Is Report from Atlanta

CONSUMMATION of negotiations which have been pending for more than two months between E. J. Sparks Enterprises, Public-Saenger Corporation and Publix Theatres looking toward an affiliation of those three circuits, is seen near in advices this week from Atlanta. It is understood that the deal includes all holdings of the Sparks Circuit in Florida and certain Publix theatres falling into the same classification as the Sparks houses which have been acting in competition.

Mr. Sparks' holdings in Florida include the Riverside and the Empress theatres in Jacksonville; the Alcazar in St. Petersburg; the Cameo in Lakeland; Garden Court, Ft. Lauderdale; and a new 1000-seat house now under construction in West Palm Beach.

The only serious competition Publix has had to combat in Florida was offered by the Sparks Enterprises and the Universal chain of theatres. With Sparks affiliated rather than competing, and with Publix-Saenger in the deal, the Publix chain will gain a strong lead, and it is probable that further expansion and development will result in that state.

Along with the report that the Sparks-Saenger-Publix deal is virtually consummated comes word that several changes will be made in the Publix staff line-up. First, J. J. Fitzgibbons, now Publix district manager for Florida, is to be transferred to New York about June 1st, where he will become director of theatres for the southeastern district; Frank Dowler, now district manager for Tennessee, will succeed Fitzgibbons in Jacksonville.

The Tennessee territory is to be divided three ways, according to reports. Chattanooga will be added to the Georgia and Alabama districts, headed by Montgomery S. Hill; Knoxville and Johnson City will go to the North and South Carolina district, while Memphis will be handled directly out of the New York office of Publix.

The battle for small town holdings between the Saxe and Fischer circuits continues. The Saxe chain is adding the Princess Theatre at Elkhorn and the Majestic at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, both formerly owned by Dan Kelliher. Fischer circuit recently acquired theatres at Whitewater, Burlington and Delevan. Both circuits are now busy lining up additional towns as fields for expansion.

A theatre to cost $300,000 will be erected on Parker Avenue, Collingsdale, Pa., to be operated by the Stanley Company of America in co-operation with Marcus Benn. The building will be on a plot 110 by 219 feet and the auditorium will have a seating capacity of 1,500. Above the auditorium there will be offices and apartments. Plans are being prepared by the Hoffman-Henon Company.

A $750,000 theatre at Adams and Jefferson Streets, Muncie, Ind., is planned by George S. Challis, owner of the Wysor Grand Theatre.

Lesser's Theatre Chain Absorbs Dalton in L. A.

THE Dalton Theatre in Los Angeles was this week taken over by Principal Theatres, the recently organized company of which Sol Lesser is the head. The name of the house will be changed to the Arcade. The theatre is said to involve an annual rental of $52,000. The Arcade firm organized with a capital of $1,000,000 and is coupled with a $1,500,000 realty firm.

There are at present nine other theatres in the Lesser group and the company plans to build a combination of 100 theatres.

Percentage for Lloyd Films Declares Fraser

tor and distributor. There is no desire on the part of the Lloyd Corporation to saddle on an exhibitor an admission price for Lloyd pictures which it is not reasonable and possible for his patrons to meet. While the Lloyd corporation feels that in entertainment value its attractions are the equal of any road-show offerings on the market, its chief aim—and it is the principal interest of Mr. Lloyd—is that everyone in the community should have an opportunity to see the Lloyd comedies, and should not have their desires barred because of an admission price that is too high for them to meet. Consequently the Lloyd Corporation feels that its best interests, as well as the best interests of the exhibitor, will be served by an admission price that will enable the greatest possible number of persons to see his pictures.

"Harold Lloyd pictures are made for an appeal to the general masses of theatregoers. He is as popular with the day laborer as with the bank president and, as far as the Lloyd corporation is concerned, the exhibitor's interest in protecting his patronage is the same as ours. Harold Lloyd pictures have not been made for road-show purposes. As far as entertainment values go they are, but Harold Lloyd always has demanded that his pictures be played in standard motion picture theatres. He builds his pictures not to appeal to any one class of patronage. They have been successful in the lowest class communities as they are in the most exclusive residential sections in the larger cities. This general appeal requires that they be exhibited at a schedule of admission prices that will not bar the patronage of any class or group. Lloyd pictures should be played by the exhibitors of America at admission prices in line with those their public is accustomed to pay for attractions of a similar standard. The class of patronage appealed to in any district, general conditions in the territory from which the exhibitor draws his business, precedent of admission prices and many other conditions should be the guiding factors in establishing admission prices for Lloyd attractions.

"Commensurate box office returns are the life blood of the motion picture business. Quality production, intensive exploitation and advertising, high-class presentation and FAIR admission prices supply the industry with the returns so vitally necessary for the continuation of its progress."

Aid from Minneapolis Film Men Suggested

The Northwest M. P. T. O. has suggested that contributions of everyone in the film industry in Minneapolis for the municipal organ be combined and presented together as coming from the city's film industry. The organ for the nearly completed auditorium is being presented to the city by the citizens of Minneapolis. A committee of prominent citizens has been appointed to help raise a fund of $100,000. W. A. Steffes, president of the M. P. T. O., and Theo. Hays, general manager of F & R, have been named on the committee.

Probable Change in Dates for Kans.-Mo. Unit Meet

Although the tentative dates of May 16 and 17 have been set for the semi-annual convention of the M.P.T.O. Kansas-Missouri, it is probable that the dates will be changed to the latter part of May or the early part of June, according to R. R. Biechele, president of the Association, due to several conflicting arrangements.

Topeka, Kan., is favored as the place of the convention, although Wichita, Kan., is in the running. It was at Topeka three years ago that the Missouri and Kansas organizations were merged into the body. Although President Biechele has not announced his candidacy yet, he is conceded to be a strong favorite for re-election. Producer-owned theatres, chain circuits, various phases of the uniform contract and new product of the year will be the chief topics of discussion. A banquet is planned, while an effort will be made to obtain several widely known speakers.

No Decision by Canadian Parliament on Copyright

The first session of the 16th Canadian Parliament at Ottawa was prorogued without a decision being reached as to the bill introduced by L. J. Ladner of Vancouver, B. C., to amend the Canadian Copyright Act and as a result Canadian exhibitors and others can rest easily for another year at least. The bill provided for the collection of royalties on all copyrighted music played in theatres, by orchestras, military bands, fall fairs, etc. The Canadian Performing Rights Society wanted to charge a flat royalty fee each year on a seat basis, for which a license would be issued to a theatre to play any music desired. But, for the third year in succession, proposed amendments to the Canadian Copyright Act which would have permitted this have died a natural death in the Canadian House of Commons.

New 1,500-Seat Theatre for Minneapolis

Minneapolis is to have a new suburban theatre, seating 1,500, equipped not only for motion pictures but also for talking pictures, vaudeville, and regular theatrical productions. The theatre will be in Richfield, the newest addition to Minneapolis, at Nicollet Avenue and Fifty-fourth street. It will be the first in Richfield and has been made possible by the repeal of a village ordinance which provided a $100 a day license fee for all sorts of theatrical and amusement projects.

The new building is being constructed for Joseph W. Cohen on property which he has owned for some time at a cost of $125,000. The entire structure will be 143 by 129 feet. Construction will probably start early this summer.

Iowa Exhibitors Evade Sunday Blue Laws

Garner, Iowa, is to have Sunday shows by a unique plan. F. S. Livermore, owner of the Lyric Theatre, abides by the Blue Laws, but he has leased the theatre on Sundays to Richard Waller and Charles Strom. Mr. Livermore operates the theatre the rest of the week.

"Is Zat So?" Makes Hit at Preview in Glendale, Cal., News Staff Man Reports

BY WILLIAM McCORMACK

West Coast Representative, Motion Picture News

HOLLYWOOD, April 26. Chalk up a decided hit for Fox in Alfred E. Green's production of "Is Zat So?" The picture was tried out at the Alexander Theatre in Glendale tonight and caught the audience like a storm. It packs story interest, together with laughs, from start to finish. It's a real comedy.

Edmund Lowe and George O'Brien, as manager and fighter, are a riot. The cast is fine throughout. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., gives a splendid performance, one that should mean a turning point in his career. Al Green has made a production that should go over in any theatre.

Warner Brothers Halve Sales Territory

Divide Country Into Eastern and Western Divisions; Claude Ezelle in Charge of West, Arthur Abeles of East

THE Warner Brothers' sales organization will in the future be divided into an Eastern and a Western territory. This latest move in the Warner sales ranks was made public by General Manager of Distribution Sam E. Morris, who opened the company's annual convention, Friday, April 29th, atop the roof of the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York, where fifty members of the Warner selling force, comprising division and branch managers from all over the country, are assembled for the meeting, which will last for three days, terminating the evening of Sunday, May 1st. The division of the country into two territories was decided upon in the interests of increased sales efficiency. In charge of the East will be Arthur Abeles, while the West will be under the supervision of Claude Ezelle. Both men have given long and efficient service with the Warners and they will make their headquarters at the home office of the company. Mr. Abeles has been division manager for the New York territory and Mr. Ezelle has had a similar post in Dallas.

Claude Ezelle, Western, and Arthur Abeles, Eastern territory manager for Warner Bros.

During the convention important announcements concerning the distribution and production policies of Warner Brothers will be made. Practially all of the company's executives are attending the meeting, with the exception of Jack Warner, in charge of production, who was unable to leave the studio on the Coast at the present time. Before the convention comes to an end the assembly will be addressed by H. M. Warner. Other department heads will also speak. On Sunday the product and policies for the 1927-28 season will be set before the gathering.

One of the features of entertainment which has been arranged for the out-of-towners will be the appearance of George Jessel, who is under contract with Warner Brothers, at the convention. He will speak before the luncheon session on Friday and will be seen by the entire group of salesmen, who will attend the Century Theatre to see the stage version of "The Jazz Singer."

Mo. Sunday Test Case Attracts Attention

THE fate of Sunday shows in virtually every smaller town in Missouri will be decided at a hearing before the Kansas City Court of Appeals in the near future.

Exhibitors all over the state are focusing their attention on the trial, which will represent the finale in a test case. A case to test the Sunday labor law was tried in the Boone County Circuit Court the other day and the verdict was against the exhibitor, George Bromley, manager of two theatres in Moberly, Mo., who was charged specifically with operating his two theatres on Sunday, January 23. He was fined $50 and costs by Judge David H. Harris.

The case was of state-wide interest in as much as the decision of the Kansas City Court of Appeals will effect virtually all other cities in Missouri in which Sunday motion picture shows are operated, with the exception of Kansas City and St. Louis.

Schenck Lists Seventeen Pictures

United Artists Releases During 1927-28 Season; Five Director Productions and Twelve Star Films

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK, President and Chairman of the Board of Directors of the United Artists Corporation, has announced that his organization will release seventeen pictures in 1927.

Five of the seventeen pictures will be based on original screen stories, seven on stage plays and four on novels and short stories. Five are director-productions; twelve are star-productions.

A list of 1927 United Artists releases, with details supplied by Mr. Schenck follows:

"Two Arabian Knights," a Caddo Production with William Boyd, Mary Astor and Louis Wolheim, directed by Lewis Milestone. Personally supervised by John W. Considine, Jr. Based on Donald McGibeny's magazine story.

Circuit Merger Rumor Again to Fore

IT is again rumored that the Steiner and Blinderman, and Mayer & Schneider circuits of New York City, comprising forty-odd theatres devoted for the most part to the presentation of motion pictures, are again well on their way toward a merger. It was understood some time ago that there had been efforts made to effect a combination of these interests but negotiations did not materialize at that time. Those in the know now claim that the merger of these two is practically certain to take place within the next week or so.

Hope to Lessen Damaging of Films

THE committee which was appointed by the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade to handle the matter of damaged films has evolved a plan which it is hoped will eliminate to some extent the damaging of films by exhibitors. When a film is returned to the exchange in damaged condition a full report will be made to the secretary of the Film Board, including the name of the exhibitor, extent of damage, and possible cause of damage. When the same exhibitor is found to have been reported several times, he will be notified to take steps to eliminate whatever seems to be the cause of the injury to prints. If this does not prove effective, further and more drastic action may be taken and the exhibitor may find it difficult to obtain service until he can show that there is no longer any likelihood of this damaging the film.

U. A. Inaugurates Cable News Service

AS the result of a decision reached last week by Arthur W. Kelley, vice-president and general manager of foreign distribution for United Artists and Victor M. Shapiro, advertising and publicity director, a world-wide cable service on all major news stories has been inaugurated by the company. News cables are now being sent from United Artists home office in New York City to London, Buenos Aires, Sydney and Tokio, the day before the stories are released for publication in New York and Los Angeles.

Mr. Kelly declared United Artists is now releasing its pictures simultaneously, insofar as it is physically possible, throughout the world; therefore, it was said, publicity on pictures is being handled in similar fashion; hitherto precluded by conflicting sales policies in various countries.

Four Firms File Papers of Incorporation at Albany

Newly incorporated motion picture companies, and companies allied with the business, filing papers with the department of state at Albany, N.Y., during the past week, and engaging in the business in New York State, included the following: Majestic Screen Productions, Inc., $500,000, with J. C. DeBronsville, Samuel M. Fink and Helen Marsak, of New York city; Vocafilm Corporation of New York, capitalization not stated, Stefan K. dePomierski, Philip J. Philbin and James G. Crespo, of New York city; Congress Operating Corporation, capitalization not stated, Freda Freeman, Jennie Kalish, Joseph Russakow, Brooklyn; Fredwalt Amusement Corporation, $10,000, Esther Abend, Dorothy Gerber, Ralph Elmer, Brooklyn.

Midwest Enterprises Modifies Theatre Rumor

A recent article in the Oklahoma City papers to the effect that Midwest Enterprises was building a million dollar theatre on the property they had secured on West First Street, was modified a bit after an interview with this theatre corporation. Midwest did take a 99-year lease on the property at 130 West First Street, but announced that the proposed theatre would not be built immediately and probably not at all on this location, as their other property they are holding as a future location of a new theatre might be considered as more favorable than this when the building was finally decided on. Midwest own the southwest corner of Main and Hudson, and also 100 feet on West Grand Avenue.

Amusement Tax Issue Again Alive in Ohio

The ten per cent amusement tax introduced into the Ohio Legislature, and supposed to be dead, has been revived. The tax, when last heard of, was shelved by the county court committee. Last week it was learned that it has been removed from its obscurity, and has been placed among the live issues to come up when the legislature convenes in May.

Theatre-Hotel to Cost $6,125,000 for K. C.

PLANS for a 6¼ million-dollar theatre and hotel building on South Main Street, Kansas City, Mo., were confirmed this week by Warren C. Gum, builder and designer. The house, which will be 150x228, will seat 5,000. The balcony will seat 1,500 and the main floor 3,500, according to plans. The interior of the theatre will have an outdoor effect representing an Italian rose garden. There will be an orchestra lift by which the orchestra will be lifted up and down. Free parking space and a free check stand for wraps will be another feature. The cooling and ventilating system will cost more than $225,000. The theatre and hotel will be known as The Warren. Several film companies have been negotiating for a lease on the theatre, but no deal has been closed yet, Mr. Gum said. Construction will start in the near future.

Two-Reel Technicolor Series of Historic Events to be Distributed by M-G-M

A FEATURE two-reel series, in technicolor, which will deal with dramatic incidents from history and which will be produced individually and backed by the resources of the Hearst organization, is announced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as an addition to its schedule of short subjects thus far made up of Hal Roach's product and a bi-weekly newsreel.

Each of the subjects in the new series will be a complete drama in itself and will possess human interest values, the background of history being used only as a canvas or background for the entertainment. Material centering around such figures as Betsy Ross, Napoleon and Buffalo Bill will be utilized.

Educational's New Season Product

Schedule Includes Sixty Two-Reel Comedy Releases and Eighty-Nine Short Subjects; Usual Kinogram Issues

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Pictures, this week announced the line-up of short feature product for release by his organization during the 1927-28 season. It includes seven series of two-reel comedies, a total of sixty releases, and five series of one-reel comedies aggregating eighty-nine productions; one hundred and four issues of the news reel, Kinograms, will also be available. Educational now being the producer of the great majority of pictures released by the company, a great number of those scheduled for release will be produced at the company's studio in Hollywood. Jack White is director in chief at the Educational studios.

Among the two-reel series of comedies will be eight each starring Lupino Lane, Lloyd Hamilton, "Big Boy" and Larry Semon; Dorothy Devore's quota will be six; a like number of Tuxedos and sixteen Mermaid productions are included. The one-reel releases are divided as follows: twenty-six Cameos, twenty-six Felix the Cat Comedies, thirteen outdoor sketches by Robert C. Bruce, twelve Lyman H. Howe Hodge Podge novelties and twelve Curiosities. The Mermaid comedies (Jack White Productions) will feature Clem Beauchamp, Al Thompson, Phil Dunham, George Davis and others supported by the usual number of Beauties; the six two-reel Tuxedo comedies, starring Johnny Arthur, are also listed for release on the new program.

Among the players to be featured in the twenty-six one-reel Cameo comedies are Phil Dunham, Wallace Lupino, George Davis, Anna Styers, "Toy" Gallagher and Muriel Evans. Educational comedies will be directed by four veterans of the comedy field who have worked on this company's releases for some time; they are Norman Tourog who maintains his position as senior director, Charles Lamont, Stephen Roberts and Mark Sandrich. In the past Taurog has directed Lloyd Hamilton and Lupino Lane, Lamont has been guiding "Big Boy" in his featurettes, also handling some of the Lupino Lane comedies. Roberts wielded the megaphone on the Mermaid product and Sandrich has devoted his talents to the Cameo brand of fun films.

E. W. Hammons

The "Felix the Cat" cartoons will be released one every two weeks and, it is said, this series will prove as popular as any cartoon character on the screen because of the publicity through newspapers and the novelties devised for advertising the pen-and-ink cat. The Robert C. Bruce series will number thirteen "Outdoor Sketches" with each reel arranged so that at least two distinct subjects and forms of scenic views will be available in one release, one a straight scenic, and the other a novelty of animal life. Curiosities, the movie side show, produced by Walter Futter, will incorporate an arrangement of from ten to sixteen subjects in each reel with a central theme running throughout; each subject will run about seventy-five feet in length. Mr. Futter has signed Beth Brown to write titles and edit the pictures.

Twelve Lyman H. Howe Hodge Podge releases will show thriving industrial centers, unique scenic spots, strange folks from every part of the globe, with introductions consisting of clever animation and novelty effects.

The coming season will mark the tenth year of Kinograms. The staff has been enlarged both in this country and abroad about thirty-three per cent; exclusive contracts have been signed with the leading news reel companies in England, France and Germany and thus the reel avails itself of the services of seventy-five to eighty cameramen; the English company will cover events in Ireland, Scotland and Wales in addition to England, the French company covers adjacent territory and the German, in addition to its own territory has men stationed in Asia, India and Egypt.

Two special correspondents each will be stationed in China, Japan, Honolulu and Alaska, three in India, one in Trinidad, one in Australia and one in Mexico. Two Kinograms expeditions are now visiting countries not often visited by cameramen. Laboratory facilities have been enlarged with all printing of positives now being done by machine. The editorial staff remains the same with Forrest Izzard as managing editor, H. E. Hancock, news editor, Allyn Butterfield, assistant news editor, and Harvey Day, circulation manager.

Dorothy Devore, who has been appearing in feature productions for several seasons, returns to the short-length comedy field this season to make six two-reel featurettes for Educational to be known as Dorothy Devore Comedies. Larry Semon, too, has deserted the feature-length vehicles in which he was starred to appear in a series of four special comedies for which he will have his own staff and company of supporting players. Mr. Semon plans to start production work at the Coast studio within the next few weeks.

Leading lady roles will be played by Estelle Bradley, who will appear opposite one or more of the starred comedians, Lucille Hutton, Kathryn McGuire, who will again play opposite Lupino Lane, "Toy" Gallagher and Muriel Evans, who until recently had done extra work; another comparative newcomer is Amma Styers, a striking brunette.

E. H. Allen continues as general manager of the Educational studios.

Special Train for First Nat'l Sales Meet in Hollywood, May 19-24

BRANCH managers, salesmen and members of the sales personnel of First National will turn their faces to the West about the second week of May for the convention of the sales force that is scheduled for Los Angeles from May 19 to May 24. The train will arrive in Los Angeles on Thursday morning, May 19. The delegations will be augmented in the west by those of Calgary and Vancouver, who will journey via Seattle, Portland and San Francisco, proceeding as one party to Los Angeles. Returning, the special will leave Los Angeles at 1 A.M., Tuesday morning, May 24, and will be routed over the Union Pacific, arriving in Omaha, Thursday, May 26, at 7:30 P.M., at which point the branches who started from Kansas City will go to their respective exchanges. The special will arrive back in Chicago, at the Northwestern Station, at 10 A.M., Friday, May 27.

Rosenberg's Exchange Is Absorbed by Western

Al Rosenberg's De Luxe Feature Film Exchange, the oldest independent film exchange in the Northwest, last week was absorbed by the Western Film Exchange of Seattle, marking the retirement from the film business of Al and Louis Rosenberg, and the entrance on a big scale of L. F. Lowe, president, and D. C. Millward, general manager, of Western. The absorption gives Western the distribution rights to the Red Seal short subjects, Gotham productions, Sterling-Banner productions, and Phil Goldstone productions, all handled previously by De Luxe, in addition to the Tiffany, Rayart and Preferred productions now distributed by Western.

Large Drop in Film Export Figures

A $300,000 drop in our exports of motion picture film in February, as compared with the preceding month, is shown by figures just compiled by the Department of Commerce, Washington, D.C., placing total shipments for the month at 20,700,094 linear feet valued at $580,096.

Exorts for the month included 2,855,986 feet of raw stock valued at $76 064, as compared with 3,371,864 feet valued at $98,540 in January; 15,597,327 feet of positives with a value of $404,836, as compared with 21,412,477 feet with a value of $603,816; 915,544 feet of negatives worth $80,904, as compared with 952,645 feet worth $153,564; and 1,331,237 feet to non-continguous territories, valued at $18 292, as compared with 1,697,411 feet valued at $26,514.

Despite the $200,000 drop in the exports of positives, Australia during the month took over 2,600,000 feet; Brazil over 1,500,000 feet, and Argentina and Canada each more than 1,000,000 feet.

Robbers Stage Daring Hold-up in Chicago

The most daring robbery among the many suffered by motion picture theatres within the last year, was that of the Piccadilly Theatre, Schoenstadt's magnificent South side house, Chicago, on Sunday night, two armed robbers holding up Henry Schoenstadt, manager, and Louis Lindenthal, the cashier, when they emerged from the box office with the Saturday and Sunday receipts in a box. Mr. Schoenstadt did not accede to the bandits' demand for the box quickly enough to suit the former, who hit him over the head with a gun and jerked the box from his grasp. Hundreds of passersby and patrons in the lobby saw the spectacular hold-up. This was the second robbery experienced by the family within two weeks. Sam Schoenstadt having been held up and robbed of $2,150 in jewelry and money, by a gang of three men who are now under arrest.

Shawnee Theatres Open After Vote Recount

The preliminary counting of the ballots on the Closed Sunday bill at Shawnee, Okla., recently at the general election was incorrect. The report was given out that the Blue Laws had won by a 90 majority, but the official count showed that the Opens had won by 9 ballots. April 17th was the first Sunday in which the shows at Shawnee have been open under this new ruling, and business was reported as fairly good.

Chicago Aiding in Putting Over Columbus Meet

Chicago exchanges are giving their whole-hearted support to the efforts of the M. P. T. O. A. to make the annual national convention, which will be held at Columbus, Ohio, a success and this week are distributing reservation blanks, furnished by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners to exhibitors throughout the Chicago territory.

McCormick First Nat'l Coast Production Chief

Will Continue to Function as Studio Head, Announces Rowland; Burbank Plant Entering Busy Season

WITH May bearing all the signs of the beginning of one of the busiest periods at the Burbank studio of First National Pictures, the present head of production activities at that spot, John McCormick, will continue in his capacity of supervisor of production on the West Coast. This was announced by Richard A. Rowland, general and production manager, following the annual meeting of First National franchise holders at Atlantic City last week, where the election of officers for the coming year was held. Whatever changes become necessary will be due to the resignation of M. C. Levee, executive business manager, which resignation was deeply regretted. Mr. McCormick will announce these changes later.

Twenty-two pictures hold the attention of the production forces at the Burbank studio. Nine of these have been finished or are now in the process of editing. Seven more are now in work. Camera work is scheduled to start during May on an additional six. "Naughty But Nice" is one of the latest films to go into the cutting room. It is a Colleen Moore vehicle which was produced by John McCormick. Additional pictures over which the cutters are working are "Diamonds in the Rough," Milton Sills' new picture; "The Price of Head Waiters," in which Lewis Stone and Priscilla Bonner are the leads; "The Plum Nut," the Jess Smith production of the stage play; "Lost at the Front," a Frank Griffin production, and "The Land Beyond Law," a Ken Maynard vehicle. Just recently out of the cutting room are "The Sunset Derby," a Charles R. Rogers production; "Babe Comes Home," Wid Gunnings' production, and "The Tender Hour," produced by George Fitzmaurice.

The seven pictures now shaping up are "The Patent Leather Kid," starring Richard Barthelmess; "The Stolen Bride," with Billie Dove and Lloyd Hughes; an original story for the screen, as yet untitled, which will feature Harry Langdon; "White Pants Willie," a Johnny Hines comedy; "The Devil's Saddle," a Ken Maynard film; "Lonesome Ladies," another Ray Rockett production, and "Dance Magic," Robert Kane's new production.

The six features that will get under way during May will be "Oh, What a Life," Colleen Moore's next vehicle; "Breakfast Before Sunrise," a new Constance Talmadge picture; "The Drop Kick," adapted from the Katherine Brush novel, "Glitter," to serve for Richard Barthelmess; "Hard Boiled Hogan," to star Milton Sills; "The Rose of Monterey," which George Fitzmaurice will produce with Mary Astor and Lewis Stone featured, and "Hell's Kitchen," next on Robert Kane's schedule.

Pathe Not Involved in Suit

Harris Action Against P.D.C. for $7,500,000 Will Not Affect Merger of Two Companies, States Counsel

THE following statement was issued from the offices of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., concerning the suit brought by Zach M. Harris against the Cinema Corporation of America:

"The action which the newspapers announce has been brought by Zach M. Harris against the Cinema Corporation of America and Producers Distributing Corporation has nothing whatever to do with Pathe Exchange. Pathe is not a party to the suit and is in no way liable for any judgments or other indebtedness of Cinema Corporation of America or of Producers Distributing Corporation. Furthermore, this suit has no bearing or influence whatsoever on the proposed Pathe-Keith-De Mille recapitalization plan, and under this plan the enlarged Pathe Company will not assume any of the debts or liabilities of either of the defendant companies."

Suit for $7,500,000 against Cinema Corp. of America and its subsidiary, P.D.C., has been filed by Zach M. Harris, alleging that amount due him for "originating and introducing to them a plan for the exhibition and booking of their motion pictures in the B. F. Keith, Orpheum and similar circuits through a tie-up with these organizations."

The fifteen-year hook-up, Harris states, involves approximately $75,000,000, and he claims for his services ten per cent of that amount, or $7,500,000.

Zach M. Harris had nothing to do with the P.D.C.-Keith Albee-Orpheum deal, and neither that company or Cinema Finance Corp. of America is indebted to him in any way, states the office of Oscar M. Bate, general counsel of the two defendant companies, in commenting on the Harris suit, which, it is stated, will in no way interfere with the Pathe-P.D.C. deal.

T. B. Groves, Pa. Theatre Manager, Dead

Thomas Bernard Groves, prominent theatre manager in the Comerford Amusement Company circuit, of Scranton, Pa., died at his home in Kingston, Pa., on April 25, following a long illness.

Mr. Groves, who was 45 years old, became affiliated with the Comerford company in 1918. Several years ago he suffered a severe attack of typhoid fever from the effects of which he never fully recovered. He is survived by his widow and one son, and was a member of St. Ignatius Church, Kingston, and the Wilkes-Barre Lodge of Elks. The body was taken April 27 to Rochester, N.Y., the place of his birth, where interment was made in the family plot the following morning.

Fox News Movietone Subject Heralds New Advance in Newsreel Field

FOR the first time in screen history, a newsreel event has had its sounds recorded simultaneously with the photographing of its action—a review of West Point cadets photographed by Fox News and Movietone—and this subject will make its theatre debut on Saturday at the Roxy Theatre in New York.

The subject opens with a bugler sounding a call—a West Point officer speaks a brief introduction, and we go into a snappy manual of arms, executed with typical West Point precision. We hear the commanding officer bark his commands—the slap of hand against rifle as they are carried out. A military band plays in the background—the strains of a march burst forth—the cadets march before it, and for a moment the volume dies down as the West Pointers blanket the sound—they pass and it pours from the loud speakers again. A band, near the horizon, its members mere specks, marches straight toward us—faintly we hear the strains of the official West Point march—on it marches, straight into the camera, the music growing in volume with every step—until the band stops before us and the music booms forth from the screen.

But the real importance of this reel is not in its subject matter alone—it is a striking demonstration of what seems to us by far the greatest field for employment of the sound-film, the picture, not of realism, but of reality; the record, not of speech, but of natural sound effects. Newsreels, and those wider transcripts of life of which "Nanook" and "Chang" are a foretaste, when given an accompaniment of natural sound effects, will be a new and vital form of screen fare. As Truman Talley, editor of Fox News, says: "Here is a means of imparting information as important as any yet developed—as important, for instance, as television." Watch the newsreel field when the sound-film is introduced.—L. C. M.

Schildkraut and Faye in "His Dog"

Forced to cancel her reservations with the De Mille party that departed Eastward to attend "The King of Kings" premiere in New York, because of the necessity of her appearance as the feminine lead in "His Dog," Julia Faye will play with Joseph Schildkraut as the principals in the picture which is now in work at the De Mille studio. Karl Brown will direct with Walter Woods supervising. Albert Payson Terhune wrote the story.

William Wellman to Direct "Beau Sabreur"

William Wellman, Paramount director, who produced "Wings," has been assigned the direction of "Beau Sabreur," P. C. Wren's sequel to "Beau Geste," in the place of James Cruze, who has been named to direct "We're All Gamblers," a Thomas Meighan vehicle.

E. H. Griffith Signs With Columbia Pictures

Edward H. Griffith has signed a long term contract with Columbia Pictures and will direct several of the company's forthcoming "Perfect Thirty," stated Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of production this week. Griffith has been free lancing for the past few years.

Ask "Miracle" Injunction

First National Starts Action Against M-G-M to Determine Who Owns Screen Rights

MOTION for a preliminary injunction to prevent Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer from carrying out its announced intention of filming "The Miracle" has been made in Superior Court in New York by First National, which also claims to own the rights. First National, it is said, intends to produce it on an elaborate scale.

The move is in the nature of an arbitration proceedings, as the two companies purchased supposed screen rights to "The Miracle" from different parties, each claiming to own these rights, and as the legal aspects of the case are somewhat tangled it is necessary to resort to court action to settle the matter.

M-G-M has stated its intention of going ahead with plans for this picture until it is definitely determined, one way or the other, Norma Shearer being under consideration for the principal feminine role, according to Louis B. Mayer.

Tiffany Concludes Deal for South American Distribution

John N. W. Webber, assistant general manager in charge of foreign sales for Tiffany Productions, Inc., states that the Magnus Films Sales Company, through its president Henry Arias, has contracted for the twenty Tiffany pictures for the season of 1927-28 for the territory embracing the Argentine Republic, Uraguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

"Love" First Starring Film for Greta Garbo

The film title for "Anna Karenine," the Tolstoy novel which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will film with Greta Garbo in the title role, will be "Love." The picture has been in production about two weeks under Dimitri Buchowtzwi's direction.

Internat'l News Cameramen Die in Attempt to Film Seattle Blast

A GREAT wave, caused by hundreds of tons of rock falling into the Columbia River last Friday afternoon took the lives of three men, two of them International Newsreel cameramen, when their boat was engulfed by the gigantic blast of Bunker Hill Cliff, on the Ocean Beach Highway, twenty miles below Kelso, Wash. The dead are: T. G. Rudolph, working for International, of Seattle; E. H. Randolph, also employed by International as a cameraman, and Arthur Bassett, an amateur cameraman and a driver for Monticello Hotel bus at Longview, Wash.

The cameramen had engaged a boat with Bassett to obtain a close-up of the explosion; they miscalculated their margin of safety and the great wave quickly swamped their boat. The bodies of the two Randolphs were recovered by grapplers on Sunday. Mrs. E. H. Randolph witnessed the tragedy from the bank. Randolph leaves two children, in addition to his widow.

T. J. Randolph had been in charge for seven years of International's Seattle bureau. William Randolph Hearst, in a telegram to Edgar B. Hatrick, vice-president of International, expressed his sorrow at the deaths and issued instructions that provisions be made for caring for Randolph's widow and children.

Spring Golf Tournament at Great Neck, May 11

FINAL arrangements for the Spring golf tournament were discussed by the Committee Monday of this week. The date, Wednesday, May 11th, was decided upon and the course selected was Sound View at Great Neck.

The Sound View course is a popular one with the golfers in the film industry, a number of the tournaments including last Fall's outing having been held there.

An added number of prizes have been secured for this Spring's competition. These prizes will go to winners in several new events. Definite information as to these prizes with details as to what they will be given for will be announced by the golf committee within a few days.

Registration for the day's outing is brisk, it is announced at the offices of the "Film Daily," sponsors of the tournaments and with good weather it is expected that a record-breaking crowd wil be present.

Legislates Against Sunday Shows in Utah Town

An ordinance specifically forbidding the operation of moving picture theatres on Sunday was passed by the city commission of Provo, Utah, during the past week and this ordinance will go into effect May 15th, it is announced. This seemingly ends a long fight against Sunday movies which has been waged there for several months.

Citizens of Provo have advised the theatre owners that they will prepare a petition asking for a referendum. It is said that this will be the first time in the state of Utah, that a referendum on a city ordinance has been called.

"U" Subsidiary in Atlanta Purchases Theatre Site

Neighborhood Theatres Corporation, Atlanta subsidiary of Universal Chain Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., has purchased a site, 50 x 160 feet at the Southeast corner of Georgia Avenue and Crew Street, Atlanta, Ga., for an 850-seat theatre. Work will start within thirty days and it is expected that the house will be ready to open by September 1st. Oscar S. Oldknow, vice president of National Theatre Supply Company, is a partner with Universal in Neighborhood Theatres Corp. The company already owns three suburban theatres in Atlanta.

Fox Company Negotiating for Property in Albany

According to Attorney William S. Dyer, of Albany, negotiations have progressed between the owners of sites on State Street in Albany, and the Fox Film Corporation of New York, to the extent that the deal will undoubtedly be consummated in the very near future. It is understood that the Fox company will pay about $500,000 for the land on which they will erect a motion picture theatre in competition with the Stanley Company of America, which now operates three first-run houses and one second-run in Albany.

Consolidated's New Devices

Obtains Rights to Laboratory Automatic Machines Which Will Expedite Handling of Prints

THE Consolidated Film Laboratories has taken over the right for the United States, Canada, Mexico and South America to several automatic devices which, it is claimed, will revolutionize laboratory methods and prices. These were brought to New York several weeks ago by agents of Film-Kopier-Werke Rapid of Berlin.

The machines comprise an automatic film titler, which turns out 35,000 ft. in eight hours; a timing machine which saves time and insures greater accuracy than present laboratory methods; an automatic printer, printing five prints at a time, each with different titles if desired; and a complete automatic developing plant, capable of processing 120,000 ft., of film in eight hours, operated by only three workers.

H. J. Yates, president of Consolidated, is emphatic in the opinion that these machines presage a revolution in methods and prices of future laboratory work. He stated: "Not for 15 years has any idea in mechanism loomed up in the making of pictures which parallels the importance of these automatic devices. They are positively revolutionary in their future effect on processing films."

Yates further stated that Consolidated has been asked by the manufacturers to come to Germany to organize a laboratory service, with the machines as a basis, adding:

"Inside of a year there will probably be a Consolidated plant in Germany."

He expects 20 of the titling machines to arrive here in August, with immediate service from the devices starting immediately after. H. R. Kossmann, is looking after the interests of the German concern in this country, with offices at 45 West 45th Street.

Playhouse, Stamford, Conn., Changes Hands

The Stamford Playhouse, Inc., has purchased for a figure said to be $250,000, the property at 564-566 Main Street, Stamford, Conn., and will build a 2,000-seat theatre on the property. It is believed in Stamford that the Marcus Loew interests are back of the deal.

Irwin Wheeler, of New Canaan, Conn., is president of the new corporation which purchases the property and confirmed the fact that a theatre will be built at once on the property, as soon as the present site is cleared. He would make no statement regarding the Loew interests in the transaction.

De Mille Talks on Unity

Producer of "King of Kings" States World Was Ready for Film at A.M.P.A. Weekly Luncheon

IN an address delivered on Thursday of this week to the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers' Association, at that organization's weekly luncheon Cecil B. De Mille, producer of "The King of Kings," told the assembly "a very great change has come over the world in business and in practically everything" leading to "unity and understanding." Mr. De Mille was introduced by John C. Flinn, vice-president of Producers Distributing Corporation, to the advertising and publicity men at the Hofbrau, Broadway and 52nd Street, New York City.

Mr. De Mille declared it as his firm belief that enemies are disappearing and offered as proof of his statement the fact that in the picture business, as one example, "you give help to each other instead of assuming the attitude that a man in another organization is an enemy." Mr. De Mille stated that the co-operative spirit has grown to a point far beyond ten or more years ago and emphasized that it was this that made possible the production of his new picture. "The world was ready for it. The world wanted it," said the director.

Mr. De Mille spoke of the exemplification of this spirit in the many messages he had received while making the picture from executives of other motion picture companies; messages of encouragement, of faith in him and in the picture.

"The unity I speak of," he continued, "must show, gentlemen, in your own organization, in your own work. There is a law that is as well demonstrated as the law of gravity. That is, that what you give, you get. If you give depression, you get it. If you give help, you get help. If you give enmity, you get enmity. One gentleman here said he was hard-boiled. Nobody is hard-boiled."

Harrisburg C. of C. Not to Endorse Daylight Saving

The movement to introduce daylight saving time this summer not only has been defeated in Harrisburg but will fail to receive any great amount of recognition in any part of Pennsylvania, outside of Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, according to a statement issued by the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce in refusing to endorse the plan.

The Chamber has announced it will have nothing to do with the daylight saving proposal and gave the following reasons for declining to endorse the movement:

"1. The inability of the railroads to altar their schedules to conform to advanced time.

"2. Only a few of the luncheon clubs have endorsed the movement.

"3. No general survey has been made to learn the disposition of industrial plants.

"4. Only a portion of the downtown merchants had signed the petition circulated by the sub-committee."

Seven Shorts on Pathe's May 8 Program

"Jewish Prudence," a Hal Roach two-reel comedy which features Max Davidson, Jewish character comedian, is the outstanding number on the Pathe schedule of short subjects for the week of May 8. Leo McCarey directed the subject and Davidson was supported by Gaston Glass, Martha Sleeper and Johnny Fox. Other releases for the week are "The Hidden Harbor," the fifth chapter of the serial, "Melting Millions"; "Bubbling Over," an Aesop fable; Pathe Review No. 19 which presents: "Spinners of Silk," "The Spot God Forgot," "Trapping Wild Game in Africa"; Issue No. 19 of Topics of the Day and Nos. 40 and 41 of the Pathe newsreel.

Work Started on New Portland Paramount House

Ground was broken Saturday, April 23, for the erection of the new Paramount Theatre at Salmon and Broadway, Portland, Ore. The building will be a combination theatre and hotel; the theatre portion estimated to cost approximately $1,000,000 and the hotel portion $700,000. The hotel will sign a lease for 15 years and the theatre for 35, it is reported. C. S. Jensen is owner of the property on which the building is to be erected.

Burr Buys "A Pair of Sixes" for Hines

C. C. Burr, producer of the Johnny Hines comedies for First National, has bought the film rights to "A Pair of Sixes," Edward Peple's stage play which will serve as Hines' next vehicle. It will follow "White Pants Willie" on the Hines production schedule.

Two Feature Pictures From Pathe on May 8

"His First Flame," the Mack Sennett feature which stars Harry Langdon, and "Don Desperado," the latest of the Western productions starring Leo Maloney, are the two pictures of feature length that are offered by Pathe on May 8.

Kinograms Issue Shows Byrd Airplane Mishap

AN outstanding newsreel event of the year is appearing in Educational's newsreel Kinograms, No. 5284, in which is pictured the crash of Commander Byrd's airplane in which he expected to hop off to Paris. Two akeley cameras were focussed on the 'plane when the accident occurred, producing in every detail the turning over and collapse of the giant Fokker machine.

Supplementary pictures show the removal of the wounded men, Byrd, Bennett, his pilot, and Noville, assistant, the police driving away the crowds that swarmed to the spot.

The pictures are exclusive with Kinograms by reason of the fact that twenty-four hours earlier this newsreel had been granted the exclusive right to photograph Byrd's flight and preparations.

Hatrick to Finish M-G-M News Blanketing of Europe

EDGAR B. HATRICK, who has control over all of the motion picture interests of William Randolph Hearst, sailed for Europe Wednesday of this week on the S.S. "Berengaria." He was accompanied by Mrs. Hatrick. His object in taking the trip abroad at this time is for the purpose of completing the plans that have been in progress for the past two months for blanketing the whole of Europe with M-G-M News representatives. The new newsreel is to be produced by Hearst News Service, Inc., and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Mr. Hatrick will be away for about six weeks and will visit London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Madrid, Rome, Copenhagen, Moscow and other capitals. Mr. Hatrick emphasized that the staffs of International Newsreel and M-G-M News will be entirely separate and distinct units, just as the Hearst newspapers and magazines are separate, yet an integral part of the whole.

MacRae to Direct New "U" Chapter-Play

Universal has assigned the direction of "The Trail of the Tiger," a new Universal serial, to Henry MacRae, who has returned to active participation in the production of motion pictures. Jack Dougherty will have the leading role in the new chapter-play which will be ten episodes in length. The story was written by Courtney Riley Cooper. MacRae has just completed the last scenes for "Wild Beauty," the Universal production which stars Rex, the equine actor.

Floyd Weber Officer in Lumas Film Corp.

At a directors' meeting of the Lumas Film Corporation last week, Floyd Weber, auditor and comptroller of Lumas, was promoted to the position of secretary. Mr. Weber had several years of experience with Universal which he supplemented with his work as auditor of Equity Pictures Corporation. The new secretary of Lumas is a brother of John Weber, general manager of Tiffany Productions, Inc.

"Four Aristocrats" Sign New Vitaphone Contract

"The Four Aristocrats," a group of entertainers who were among the first to record for the Vitaphone, have been engaged to make four more presentations through the Vitaphone. They will have a completely new program which will feature the piano, steel guitar, ukelele and Spanish guitar besides song bits.

"Framed" New Title for Milton Sills Picture

"Framed" has been selected by First National officials as the final title for the Milton Sills production which has been tentatively known as "Diamonds in the Rough." The picture is now in the cutting room.

Loos-Emerson to Aid in Producing Book and Play

When "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," the successful novel and play is placed into production by Hector Turnball at the Paramount studio with Malcolm St. Clair directing, the touch of Anita Loos and her husband John Emerson will be discernable in the script and cast. Miss Loos and Mr. Emerson will curtail their trip to Europe in time to arrive in Hollywood, August 1. They have been working on the adaptation of the book and play for some time. Miss Loos will write the titles and will also select a blonde actress to play the role of her Lorelei.

Will Make Final Scenes of "Heidelberg" Abroad

Some of the final sequences in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer special production, "Old Heidelberg," will be made abroad, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has decided. Ernst Lubitsch, who is directing the picture at the Culver City studio, will sail for Germany about the middle of May with several members of his staff and will go direct to Heidelberg University for atmospheric shots.

Larry Kent Featured in Patheserial, "Still Face"

Larry Kent, leading man, has been cast by Pathe for the featured male role in "Still Face," the new serial which will be produced in the East under the production management of E. Oswald Brooks and the direction of Arch Heath. Thomas Holding, Laura Alberta, John F. Hamilton, Gus de Weil and Agnes Dome are other players chosen for important parts in the adventure picture.

Ed Savin Studio Business Manager for Vitaphone

Ed Savin, who has been with the Vitaphone Corporation since its inception as assistant comptroller, has been appointed studio business manager for the Vitaphone. His new duties will bring him in close touch with production activities and in addition he will be assisting S. L. Warner, vice-president and production manager of Vitaphone.

Rod La Rocque Signs New Contract

A STATEMENT emanating from William Sistrom, general manager of the De Mille studio that Rod La Rocque has been signed to a long-term contract definitely sets at rest the various rumors that the star intended leaving the De Mille organization upon the termination of his last year's contract. The Sistrom announcement also reads that Conan Doyle's "Brigadier Gerard" would serve as La Rocque's first vehicle under the new agreement. Donald Crisp has been selected to direct the production, for which C. Gardner Sullivan has been named to a supervisory post.

Eight Units Producing at F. B. O. Studio

F. B. O. is in the midst of the most pretentious spring production drive, according to Edwin King, vice president of F. B. O., who supervises production. Eight companies are at present in work making new pictures and two more are in preparatory stages, and several films which are now in the cutting room being edited for early release. With Fred Thomson's company producing "Arizona Night," returned from Las Turas, where exteriors were shot, the "Clancey's Kosher Wedding" company journeyed to that locale. Headed by Tom Tyler the "Splitting the Breeze" unit is in the high Sierra country of California where two weeks will be spent in filming exterior scenes. Now in its third week of production is "Judgment of the Hills"; J. Leo Meehan is taking outdoor shots in the hills north of Hollywood. "The Lure of the Night Club," a Viola Dana vehicle, is now in its third week of filming while "The Gingham Girl," starring Lois Wilson, is nearing the close of the shooting schedule. "The Great Mail Robbery" is also nearing the finis mark under the direction of George B. Seitz. "Not For Publication" is in the cutting room and "Bulldog Pluck," featuring Bob Custer, is also in the hands of the cutters. The two pictures which will enter work soon are "Shanghaied," with Ralph Ince as star and director, and "Hook and Ladder No. 92," to be directed by F. Harmon Wright.

Realignment in Paramount Studio for New Program

A new realignment in the Paramount executive studio personnel, one of the moves preparatory to the launching of the coming twelve months' schedule, has been instituted by Paramount and under the new arrangement Milton E. Hoffman, formerly executive manager of the studio of Paramount on the West Coast, is made a member of the production cabinet of B. P. Schulberg, Paramount associate producer. Hoffman will join the company of Schulberg's present production staff which now includes B. P. Fineman, executive assistant to Schulberg; E. Lloyd Sheldon, Louis D. Lighton and Ralph Block, the three editors-in-chief of the story department; Julian Johnson, general film and title editor; Hector Turnball and Lucien Hubbard, featured supervisors. Hoffman will handle as his first assignment the production of "Beau Sabreur," a forthcoming special. The duties of Hoffman's previous office will be handled by John J. Gain, newly appointed executive manager of the studio.

M-G-M Building Up Short Subjects Sales Staff

Chicago Branch Manager Mendelsohn of M-G-M, is building up his short subject sales staff and as a nucleus now has Oscar Florine, and Len Ullrich who will cover city territory and Chic Kepler, who has been assigned to country territory. In the feature department Adolph Rosecan and M. E. Maxwell have been temporarily transferred to the Indianapolis office, and their territory will be covered for the present by Charles H. Powell, formerly of Fox's Milwaukee staff, and J. E. Armgardt, formerly connected with First National.

M-G-M's Train's New Trip

Extensive Tour of South America Outlined; Trackless Vehicle Sailed From Italy, April 13

HAVING sailed from Genoa, Italy, on the Principesso Giovani for Buenos Aires, Argentina, on April 13, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Trackless Train has begun another tour—this time in South America. The train began its journey more than two years ago from New York City and has traveled through Mexico, Canada and over the Atlantic through European countries.

The South American trip begins the moment the Principesso Giovani lands at Buenos Aires, where Edward Carrier, conductor of the expedition, has been stationed to prepare for the landing. The tour of the ballyhoo through the South American republics has been arranged by Arthur Loew, head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's foreign department; the details were taken care of during Mr. Loew's visit to South America.

The South American itinerary will include all of the principal cities in Uraguay and after they have been visited the train will cross the border line into Brazil, first stopping at Rio Grande and then proceeding North to Porte Allegre, Florianspolis, Curritiba, Paranagua, Santos, San Paulo, Canipanha, Belo, Horizonta, Dura Prito, Rio de Janeiro, Linhares and Naqua.

The Trackless Special will return by steamer to Buenos Aires, proceeding Southward to La Plata in the Argentine, then to Nardel, Plata, Azu, Tres, Aitoyos and Bam Blanca. It will then proceed North to Chibelcoy, Mehuqus, Rosario, Parna, Santa Fe, Cordoba, Santiego, Tucman and Jujuy. Returning South to Corboda, it will proceed Southwest to San Luis and Aconcaqua. From this point the Trackless will go across the Andes Mountains into Santiego, Chile, then to Valpariso, Quillota, La Ligna, Quiltinara, Cazuta, Illapa, Cocuimbo, La Serna, Iquiqua, Arica and Tacna. Then Northeast across the border into Bolivia, first stopping at Tacora, Calacota, Corcooro, La Paz, Oruro and Cochabamba.

Returning to La Paz and proceeding Northward into Peru, stops will be made at Puno, Requipa, then the Coast city, Islay. From this point, arrangements are being made to ship the Trackless to Lima and Callao.

After the train visits as many cities as possible in Peru, it will move forward to Guayaquil, Ecuador. Other steps will be made in Ecuador, then the train will be shipped to a Panama Canal port and will go on to New York or San Francisco.

Gotham's New Line-Up

Sam Sax Lists Fourteen Productions for Season of 1927-28; Mrs. Wallace Reid to Star in Two

FOURTEEN Gotham productions are offered by Sam Sax for the season of 1927-28, with the possibility of one or two more being added later on. These subjects are definitely promised for the new season and, as Sax says, "Every title announced is a definite story, especially suited for the screen, bought and paid for, and not subject to change." In other words, every Gotham picture is guaranteed by Mr. Sax, its delivery with the title as announced and within the time specified. In comparison with the past three Gotham programs, it is pointed out, the forthcoming releases mark the elimination to a marked degree of a pronounced melodramatic tendency. Twelve of the films will be made under Mr. Sax' supervision and will be called Gotham Productions, while the other two will be known as Mrs. Wallace Reid-Gotham Productions.

The complete list of Gotham titles and authors follows:

"United States Smith" and "Rose of Kildare," both by the late Gerald Beaumont, the first described as an "unusual character study of a fighting marine" and the latter "a romantic drama of old Erin, with an epilogue laid in California."

"The Man Higher Up," based on "The Spider's Web," a political drama, is Reginald Wright Kauffman's contribution to the Gotham schedule. A story by Howard Rockey entitled "The Chorus Kid" and dealing with an angle of the theatrical life is also announced, as is "Through the Breakers," an Owen Davis drama of the Coast line. "The Cheer Leader," a college story by Lee Authmar, "The Girl from Rio," a romance by Norman Kellogg, and "The Fruit of Divorce," a drama dealing with one of the most important social problems of the day and the work of Leon De Costa, are included in Mr. Sax' list.

"Turn Back the Hours," by the American playwright, Edward E. Rose, is a melodrama with an unusual twist, and "Bare Knees," a study by Adele Buffington of the modern flapper, deals with that type not only as she appears on the surface, but goes deep into her elemental emotions. Two feature farces will also play their part in the Gotham line-up. They are "The Head of the Family," by George Randolph Chester, and "Blondes by Choice," a story by Josephine Quirk.

The two special offerings which will feature Mrs. Wallace Reid are "The Satin Woman" and "Hell Ship Bronson," both said to be of "a spectacularly dramatic nature." In the first production are Rockliffe Fellows, Gladys Brockwell, John Miljan, Ruth Stonehouse, Charles "Buddy" Post, Ethel Wales, Alice White, Laska Winters and others.

Jacqueline Logan in "For Ladies Only"

COLUMBIA PICTURES has secured the services of Jacqueline Logan for the leading feminine part in "For Ladies Only," scheduled for early production. The story was adapted by Ernest S. Pagano from "Down With Women," a story by George F. Worth, which appeared in Argosy-All Story Magazine.

Key City Reports

New York City

THE outstanding box office topic of the moment in New York is the business being done at the Gaiety by "King of Kings." Despite criticism of its treatment here and there, no one has seriously questioned that the film would draw heavy patronage by virtue of its many assets, and it is living up to these expectations. Standing room has been the rule at most performances.

"Camille," which opened at the Globe last week, is generally very well liked, and is doing splendid business, although not generally rated as a two-dollar picture. This is expected to be a clean-up when it gets into the regular houses, and probably will be.

All of the two-dollar attractions showed substantial gains last week. "Big Parade," "Glory" and all of them recovered materially from the Lenten slump.

"Beau Geste" leaves the Criterion this week, to be replaced by "Old Ironsides" from the Rivoli. The latter house opened Friday with "Chang," this picture bringing it back to the continuous policy and popular prices. Putting this theatre over on a two-a-day, advanced price basis proved undesirable from several angles, and difficult at best.

The Strand did well with "Orchids and Ermine"; the Capitol showed an increase with "Lovers"; "Children of Divorce" opened well for an extended run at the Rialto.

The Paramount went well over its $70,000 average with "Knockout Reilly," while the Roxy, with "Ankles Preferred," broke the house record, more than 158,000 paid admissions being recorded.

Chicago

SLIGHTLY better business was reported from the majority of Chicago theatres last week, although the after Easter revival was not as marked as expected, probably the unexpected cold snap kept many patrons at home. At McVickers, "Slide, Kelly, Slide" continued to prove itself a good box office attraction, and the other baseball feature, "Casey at the Bat" held up in satisfactory manner at the Roosevelt, where it was in its last week. The Chicago Theatre played to good crowds with "The Love of Sunya" on the screen, H. Leopold Spitalny's orchestral production "Herbertians," and Egypt as the stage offering. Paul Ash, with his gang, and the feature picture "Fashions For Women," accounted for another big week at the Oriental. "The Better 'Ole" in conjunction with Vitaphone, had a second good week at Warner's Orpheum, and "Old Ironsides" continued to hold up well in its third week at the Auditorium.

South side crowds were going to the theatres this week and the Tivoli, featuring Richard Dix in "Knockout Riley" and a very good Bennie Kreuger stage show, held them out; favorable reports also came from the Capitol, where Barrymore in "Don Juan," the Vitaphone and Del and his Capitol merry makers offered fine entertainment.

Spanish Beauty Arrives to Work for Fox Films

SENORITA MARIA CASAJUANA, chosen as the most beautiful girl in Spain from among 1,000 contestants, arrived aboard the French liner "Suffren" this week to start work in Fox Films pictures. She will also enter the International Pageant of Pulchritude as "Miss Spain" when that event gets under way in Galveston in late May. Miss Casajuana will then leave for Hollywood to make her screen debut.

Maria de Pilar Casajuana

Mr. Fox sent Edwin C. Hill, now director of Fox Varieties, to Spain last year to secure beautiful types of Latin femininity. Mr Hill conducted a country-wide beauty contest with the result that 100 screen tests were held at a studio in Barcelona. Mr. Fox and several of his assistants selected Miss Casajuana as the winner among the contestants.

Normal or better than average business was also the consensus of the large de luxe houses on the north side, including the Harding with "The Telephone Girl" on the screen and Art Kahn and his syncopators on the stage; the Senate offering "Flesh and The Devil" and Mark Fisher's music masters, and at Balaban and Katz Uptown, where "Flesh and The Devil" was the screen feature, and Irene Pavloska, civic opera star, being the added attraction.

Philadelphia

BUSINESS showed a decided regeneration after the Holy Week lull.

Richard Dix in "Knockout Reilly" at the Stanley did an almost turnaway business, with Waring's Pennsylvanians as an added attraction. The Stanton with "Children of Divorce" for the second week, did fairly well, although the picture is not taking to the extent that was expected.

The Fox importation "Madame Wants No Children" was the weakest drawing card in the bill at the Fox Theatre, but Nora Bayes in person gave the house one of the best weeks of the season, while Fred Easter and Ruth Hazelton in their latest dance sensation "The Cat and the Canary" proved a great attraction.

The Arcadia with "Heaven on Earth" was fairly well patronized because of the fact that Renee Adoree was played up in all of the advertising and exploitation.

Esther Ralson in "Fashions for Women" at the Karlton succeeded in doing a good matinee business and drawing a large amount of feminine patronage. The evenings were not so heavy. The Palace with the reissue of "Monte Cristo" did a fairly satisfactory week while the Victoria, with a lavish lobby display, did a good business with "Held by the Law." McFadden's Flats," misplaced for its opening in the Stanley, did a landslide business when transferred to the Globe.

Boston

MASSACHUSETTS theatres were especially fortunate this year in having a holiday come in the week immediately following Easter. All in all, probably no week in theatrical history has shown such a gross as the past week. The holiday, which is confined to Massachusetts alone, is April 19, Patriots' Day.

A feature of the week was the twin midnight benefits of the National Vaudeville Artists, held at the Metropolitan and the Keith-Albee Boston Theatres. It started at 11:30 at each theatre and continued until well into the early morning.

While this feature might have resulted in lower grosses at other Boston Theatres on that night, in this instance the reverse was true. Apparently many who attended the late show spent the early part of the evening at some other theatre.

Loew's State Theatre had an unusually heavy week with "The Show."

The Metropolitan inaugurated its Festival Season policy with an augmented program of jazz music and stage talent and with "Special Delivery" as the feature. John Murray Anderson's "Memory's Garden" was the main presentation and in addition Gene Rodemich and his fourteen merrymakers with a special jazz program, the grand orchestra, Harold Ramsey at the organ and added screen numbers proved a program which grossed an amount approximating that of the opening days of this Publix house.

"What Price Glory" wound up its long run at the Majestic Theatre, having played to better than average road show houses for its entire run of a dozen weeks, a run which saw no passes issued throughout.

"Stage Madness" featured the bill at Keith-Albee's Boston with a specially good vaudeville selection while Nazimova was starred at the B. F. Keith Theatre, both theatres grossing larger amounts than for several months.

"White Cargo" started on its third week at the Gaiety with "Arizona Bound" and "The Lunatic" at the twin houses, the Modern and Beacon, together with the ninth episode of "The Collegians."

Equally good reports were made from the legitimate houses.

Cleveland

IT was the week after Easter. The youth of the city was broke after satisfying a Spring Buying complex. The adults of the city were broke after taking advantage of the post-Easter sales in the department stores. And the theatres suffered. "Rookies," which opened a continued engagement at the Cameo, probably came out at the head of the list. It drew consistently, with business growing as the week grew older. But it didn't do the business it would have done at any other time of the year.

"The Night of Love" finished its second week at the Stillman holding its own, and no more. The Allen Theatre attraction was "Lovers," well reviewed, but only fairly well attended. "The Telephone Girl" at the State surrounded by a good vaudeville bill topped by Al Herman did well by comparison. Keith's Palace drew the entire female population for miles around with "Fashions for Women" as the feature attraction. A very strong vaudeville program helped to put the show over. "Don Juan" played second run at the Circle. However, it was the first time the picture was presented with Vitaphone synchronization. And it did remarkably well, inasmuch as it had previously played a three-weeks engagement at the Stillman, and is being held over another week.

"Held by the Law" drew large crowds both at Keith's East 105th Street Theatre, where it played a full week, and at Reade's Hippodrome, where it played the first four days of the week. "Jewels of Desire" completed the week at the Hippodrome satisfactorily. Legitimate competition was not strong. Neighborhood theatres report business dead.

Kansas City

LAST week was one of the most freakish in box office history in Kansas City. With the city surrounded with flooded territory and rain—hard rain—each day, virtually all of the first-run downtown houses did a better business than has been experienced thus far this spring.

At most of the theatres there was a line-up of good pictures, but the programs hardly could be said to exceed in quality those of several weeks previous. At the Newman Gilda Gray in "Cabaret" played to good crowds all week, as did the "Fourth Commandment" and a return engagement of "The Plastic Age" at the Liberty Theatre. At the Royal "Children of Divorce" played to packed houses, a seat for the second show of any night performance being difficult to obtain.

"The Yankee Clipper" at the Mainstreet drew a good attendance, the same applying to "The Broncho Twister" at the Pantages and "Man Bait" at the Globe.

Los Angeles

ALL downtown theatres in Los Angeles played to good business last week.

"Resurrection," at the Criterion, got away to a good start and is continuing to draw better than average business.

"Casey at the Bat," at the Million Dollar, is playing to large attendance, while "Children of Divorce," at the Metropolitan, has chalked up big business.

"Old Ironsides," at Grauman's Egyptian, is doing only fair; however, "Frisco Sally Levy" is pulling them in great shape at Loew's State.

"Mr. Wu," at the Forum Theatre, is doing average business; "The Mona Lisa" on the same program is a hit.

"What Price Glory," at the Carthay Circle, continues to hold up well.

San Francisco

WITH the exception of Good Friday, the week that just closed was a successful one in the motion picture houses, both in the first-run houses downtown and in the residential sections.

T. O. C. C. Holds Meet at Hotel Astor, N. Y.

THE Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce held its eighth annual meeting Tuesday, April 26, at the Hotel Astor in New York City. The most important feature of the convention was the election of officers, Sol Raives being elected to the presidency following the declining of the position by Charles L. O'Reilly, who has presided over this body for the last five years. Other officers who were elected were J. Louis Geller, vice-president; Max Barr, treasurer; James Matthews, secretary. The members of the board of directors are Hy Gainsboro, J. Arthur Hirsch, Hyman Pachmil, Rudolph Sanders and Harry Suchman.

The executive committee of the T.O.C.C. declared that reports circulated that the organization has arranged a golf tourney to take place on May 18 at the Belleclaire Club, were not authoritative and were being circulated without the permission of the executive body.

Many were attracted to the California Theatre, which showed the picture "Ritzy" and all were satisfied. "Fashions For Women," shown at the Granada Theatre did well, it is thought many attended there because of the title and it was a few days before Easter. People also were attracted there by the presentation called "Pianomania."

"Venus of Venice" at Loew's Warfield, the first two days did fair, but generally the people were dissatisfied, expecting something different, from the advertisements. The presentation act was not as entertaining as usual. "Tell It to The Marines" played a second week at the St. Francis Theatre, but not to well filled houses, with the exception of two nights that were fairly filled. The Cameo Theatre did well with the picture "Spangles" during the week and the house was well filled.

"Johnny Get Your Hair Cut," attracted many to the Pantages Theatre. The people also liked the vaudeville acts. "The Overland Stage," was a popular film at the Golden Gate, which together with the regular news notes and six acts of vaudeville caused many to send their friends. "A Woman's Heart" and "Where There's a Will" was part of a popular program at the Union Square that the audience liked with the vaudeville acts.

"The Nervous Wreck," at the Coliseum in the Richmond district proved popular, as did "The Cowboy and the Countess," at the Wigwam Theatre, another residential house. "The Show," shown at the New Mission Theatre, also was popular in the Mission district, as was "The Reckless Lady," at the Majestic Theatre in the same district.

St. Louis

THE end of Lent and slightly more favorable weather enabled the St. Louis first-run theatres to return somewhat to normal conditions, but there could have been many, many more patrons at the various houses during the week.

The lot of the outlying house owners in St. Louis is none too happy these days. Business could be decidedly better. But there are bright days ahead and the city is fortunate in that it doesn't have a daylight saving law to cut into airdrome receipts.

Lon Chaney in "Mr. Wu" was the chief stage attraction at Loew's State Theatre and during the week the house did very nice business, everything considered. Chaney has a large personal following in St. Louis.

The Missouri Theatre with Richard Dix in "Knockout Reilly" on the screen and Brooke Johns and his entertainers on the stage pulled in their share of the business that was to be had, and the total receipts for the week compared very favorably with those of any other week experienced by the Missouri in a long time.

Just over Lucas Avenue at the Grand Central, Douglas MacLean in "Let It Rain" held the screen. The house enjoyed a fair week's business. The St. Louis Theatre with Harry Langdon in "His First Flame" and five acts of vaudeville had an average week for this house.

Clara Bow in "Children of Divorce" was on the screen at Skouras Brothers' Ambassador during the week.

Minneapolis

THE week following Easter was an unusually good one for the picture theatres in Minneapolis. The weather, for the most part, was mild and although there were no especially big pictures in town, attendance held up well. "Children of Divorce," with Clara Bow and Esther Ralston, did an excellent business at the State. The Vitaphone, showing for its second week at this theatre, was again a big attraction. "The Music Master" played to good houses at the Strand, but business was not extraordinary enough to warrant holding it over for a second week. Johnny Hines in "All Aboard" proved a good attraction at the Lyric, while "Women Love Diamonds" pleased the audiences at the Garrick. There was plenty of opposition for the movies this week, with Earl Carroll's "Vanities" at the Metropolitan, Marjorie Rambeau at Pantages, Irene Bordoni at the Hennepin-Orpheum, and Mary Young opening an engagement at the Shubert in "The Outrageous Mrs. Palmer."

Baltimore

BUSINESS for the week beginning Easter Monday, April 18th, started out with a rush but hit a snag on Wednesday and Thursday with the weather hot and rain on the former day and with it rainy and cold on the latter and remaining cold during the latter part of the week.

Leading the list was "The Better 'Ole," with the Vitaphone accompaniment and extra attractions and no other music, which did excellently and was so good on Saturday night that the last performance kept the audience until about 11.45.

Loew's Parkway had Jackie Coogan in "Johnny, Get Your Hair Cut," which went over very good there for its first run in Baltimore. This was a break into the regular policy of the Parkway management to run pictures there after the Century and Valencia.

"The Love of Sunya," starring Gloria Swanson, went very good during its second week at Loew's Valencia and "The Demi-Bride," with Norma Shearer, Pulled them in very good at Loew's Century.

"Stolen Pleasure," a cleverly done farce-comedy of marital life, pulled them in strong and held the attention at Keith's Hippodrome with good business and the Garden did good with "Whispering Sage," starring Buck Jones. Both the Garden and the Hippodrome carry five acts of tanaly vaudeville.

"Blind Alleys," with Thomas Meighan, went over very good at the New Theatre. Harry Langdon's "Long Pants" proved a very good drawing card at the Rivoli.

The two new residential houses which opened on April 16th, the State in the eastern section and the Avalon in the northwestern section, both report good business since they opened.

Milwaukee

DOWNTOWN business this week left managers in a most cheerful mood On alternate days during the entire week the weather provided either rain or snow, yet this did little to keep away patrons from the downtown theatres.

"Mr. Wu," at the Wisconsin, was one of the biggest attractions and played to well-filled houses every day with an unusual overflow on week-end nights. "Let It Rain" drew gratifying crowds to the Garden. "Afraid to Love," playing at the Merrill, and "The Amateur Gentleman" at the Strand were unusually well received. "Resurrection," at the Alhambra, drew good houses and is being held over for a second week. Photoplays at the vaudeville houses were very popular—"A Little Journey" at the Miller, "Mountains of Manhattan" at the Majestic and "Matinee Ladies" at the Orpheum.

The Venetian Theatre, a neighborhood house, was fairly besieged. "The Fourth Commandment" and the fame of the beauty of the new house were the attractions. This exceptionally good business was shared by other "near-home" theatres. "Casey at the Bat" helped to draw patronage to the Tower and Modjeska theatres, and "The Scarlet Letter" was the attraction at the Colonial; "Night of Love" filled the Milwaukee.

Denver

ALL Denver first-run theatres report business was "just fair" for the week ending April 22nd. Following Easter indications were for excellent business but it turned out to be nothing above the average. The only possible reasons are strong counter attractions which continued every night throughout the week without exception.

"Casey at the Bat" at the Victory did the best business among the first runs, although the receipts were not up to expectation. "Cabaret," showing at the Rialto, did a fair business. The Colorado Theatre, showing "Venus of Venice," did an average business only. "Altars of Desire" at the America did a fair business, showing at a new graduated admission price scale, which resulted in exceptionally heavy matinees. "The Blonde Saint" at the State started out on Good Friday in record-breaking style but a final check up showed receipts to be about on the average.

Suburban theatres report business getting better. These theatres seemed to be hit harder than any others during the Lenten period.

Seattle

THE week before Easter witnessed a distinct drop in theatre business in the Pacific Northwest, with a majority of the houses offering only average programs to attract the Lenten theatregoers. The high mark for the week was probably set at the Coliseum Theatre, which did better than average business on a double-feature bill, including "A Little Journey" and Chaplin's revival of "Shoulder Arms." An interesting fact about William Haines in "A Little Journey" was the large share of "flapper" business that he attracted to the box office.

The Fifth Avenue Theatre, usually the large gross house, fell decidedly below normal with "A Kiss in a Taxi" and a mediocre Fanchon and Marco specialty revue.

At the United Artists Theatre, "Resurrection" in its second and final week played to fair houses. George Lipschultz, directing the United Artists Orchestra and playing two of his violin selections recently recorded for Columbia Records, scored a sensational personal triumph, and bids fair to become a strong box office attraction regardless of the picture.

At John Hamrick's Blue Mouse Theatre Vitaphone and "Don Juan" in its fourth week still attracted decidedly favorable business, with a standing line waiting for admission every night in the week. Next week will see the end of the "Don Juan" engagement, after sensational business.

Robert Bender presented "Taxi, Taxi" to audiences at the Columbia Theatre, but the film achieved only a fair share of business, and apparently was disappointing to most houses.

Hamrick's Egyptian continued to monopolize the majority of the suburban business, with "The Taxi Dancer," which played the Fifth Avenue Theatre several weeks ago. At the Winter Garden Theatre, the Dempsey-Tunney fight pictures played as a first-run attraction did not achieve much of a box office success at the 50 cents admission charge.

"The Monkey Talks," in conjunction with a vaudeville program at Pantages, and "One Hour of Love," at the Embassy, were below normal, in spite of good reviews accorded the former named production.

Ottawa

THERE was plenty of excitement in the theatres of Ottawa and Hull during Easter week, big crowds responding to the strong attractions held out by practically all exhibitors.

What was considered the strongest all-age film show of the week was "McFadden's Flats," which held the screen at the Center Theatre. This pleased both old and young, male and female. Following closely behind the Center in current popularity was B. F. Keith's Theatre with its "Johnnie, Get Your Hair Cut," which drew many juveniles for the Easter holiday matinees and good mixed crowds at night. The Regent Theatre was forced to take third place this week with "Casey at the Bat," which proved to be disappointing to quite a few. Added to the program here was a reissue of Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms."

Although comedy reigned at the majority of houses, the Imperial presented a sober feature in "Faust" which registered fair business, attracting adults mainly. Most of the people went to see Jannings.

Suburban houses in Ottawa were thronged during the week of April 18th, particularly by juveniles, except at the Francais, where the adult ratio was large, the French-Canadians flocking back to the theatres after the Lenten observance. Three of the neighborhood houses started off with the first episode of a serial, the Rex opening with "The Fighting Marine," starring Gene Tunney, and the Columbia and Fern starting the "Buffalo Bill" serial. Easter week gave them a great start, the Fern putting on special matinees every day. The Fern also made a hit with "The Flaming Frontier" as the feature.

Over in Hull, the Laurier Theatre did fairly well with "The Scarlet Letter," but it is a question whether the French Canadian patronage liked this one. "Just Another Blonde" proved to be popular at the Eden Theatre, Hull.

Albany

AFTER one of the toughest weeks in the sense of counter attractions in many a month, the first-run theatres in Albany managed to pull out on the right side of the ledger last Saturday night. To begin with, the week started off with an American Legion dance. The next night July weather prevailed. Wednesday the baseball season opened. And that night the police dance at the Armory drew over 10,000 persons. In addition to this, Proctor's vaudeville theatre had personal appearances of two members of "Our Gang." Toward the latter part of the week the weather turned colder and business shot upward.

At the Mark Strand, "Don Juan" and the Vitaphone played to capacity business day in and day out, while at the Leland "The Fire Brigade" ran heavy both afternoon and evening despite other attractions. The Clinton Square did not do any great amount of business with "The Gay Deceiver" and "Oh, Baby!" Business held up well at the Mark Ritz with "Knock Out Reilly." Proctor's Grand used "Heaven on Earth," along with the N.V.A. Frolic. Raymond Hitchcock in person will appear at this theatre in the near future.

In Troy "Don Juan" opened strong on Saturday and Sunday at the Troy Theatre, but business did not hold up any too well throughout the week, due, no doubt, to the fact that many shops are running on part time. "The Taxi Dancer," at the American, and "A Kiss in a Taxi" did only fair, the latter playing at the Lincoln. Daylight saving began in Albany, Troy and Schenec-

First Division Pictures, New Co., Organized

HARRY H. THOMAS, associated with I. E. Chadwick for many years in the capacity of vice-president and general manager of Mr. Chadwick's Merit Film Corporation, is now heading First Division Pictures, Inc., a new organization which came into existence primarily to take over the business and good will of Merit Film Corporation. The new company will retain the entire Merit personnel and has the earnest support of Mr. Chadwick. The only reason for the latter's withdrawal from the field of exchange operation in the New York territory is to permit himself more time for the production of pictures and their national distribution.

Harry Thomas

tady, on Sunday, and business will slump this week.

Oklahoma City

"CHILDREN OF DIVORCE" played to splendid business at the Criterion Theatre all this week. There was some extra advertising done on this in the newspapers. "Convoy" at the Empress Theatre for the week did not do the business that was anticipated. Extra advertising was carried on this picture in teaser ads, billboards and larger space in the daily papers. "Getting Gertie's Garter" stayed the whole week at the Liberty Theatre—this theatre usually changes the program in midweek—in spite of the fact that business was not exceptionally good. "A Kiss in the Taxi" went over well with the audiences the first half of the week at the Capitol Theatre. "Ritzy" finished up the end of the week at the Capitol to a little more than average business.

Central Pennsylvania

A COMBINATION of particularly strong attractions and the passing of the Lenten season brought a marked increase in patronage to the Harrisburg theatres the first week after Easter. Exceptional business was done at the Victoria with "Children of Divorce."

At Loew's Regent the combination of such stars as John Gilbert, Lionel Barrymore and Renee Adoree, in "The Show," was irresistable and the fans were out in unusual numbers. At the Colonial "Orchids and Ermine," starring Colleen Moore, supported by a strong cast, brought big audiences every night.

"Gorilla Hunt" thrilled big crowds at the Broad all week. The Broad, in its newspaper advertisements, emphasized also its comedy attraction, "Her Father Said 'No'," in which the leading roles were played by Mary Brian, Al Cooke and Kit Guard.

On Friday night there was a strong counter-attraction to the movies when Will Rogers appeared in person at the Majestic, under the auspices of the local posts of the American Legion.

New Orleans

HOLY week coupled with torrential rains and the flooding of the New Saenger Theatre resulted in a decided falling off of attendance in New Orleans last week.

The theatregoers who did attend the playhouses went the first three days of the week. At Loew's State Theatre "The Taxi Dancer," starring Joan Crawford, played to fair crowds. Until the flood incapacitated the New Saenger, business was good. "The Show," with John Gilbert and Rene Adoree, was the feature. "The Venus of Venice" was to have started Saturday but did not open until Sunday because of the suspension of the Saturday performance.

The Strand featured "The Masked Woman," starring Anna Q. Nilsson, but the attendance was way below average. "Fashions for Women" fared pretty good at the Liberty Theatre. Esther Ralston is the featured player. "Orchids and Ermine" had its premiere at the New Saenger and the Globe did not do much business. John Barrymore in "The Beloved Rogue" was the attraction at the Trianon and did a fairly good business, despite conditions.

Reginald Denny in "Take It from Me" drew quite a bit of patronage for the Tudor Theatre. "The Sheriff's Girl," with Fangs, the wonder dog, and Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, played to good houses but it was the vaudeville bill that was responsible for the business of this playhouse.

Neighborhood theatres fared better than the downtown houses. The Tivoli, Rivoli, New Prytania, which only recently opened its doors; Gaiety, Capitol, Mecca and others reported good business.

Fox Films to Release Five Productions

FIVE features will be released by Fox Film Corporation during May. Outstanding in the group is "Is Zat So?" which will be shipped to exhibitors on May 15. "Outlaws of Red River" and "Hills of Peril," the first a Tom Mix vehicle and the latter a Buck Jones feature, are dated for May 8 and 1 respectively. The other Fox films are "The Heart of Salome," and "Rich But Honest," the former is released along with the Mix picture and the latter winds up the Fox features for the month.

Portland, Ore.

THE People's Theatre, playing a split week with returns of "It" and "The Scarlet Letter," did extraordinary business throughout last week. "It" played the week-end and the "Letter" played four days in the middle of the week. This policy of playing second run with split week seems to be a plausible answer to the demand for more business.

The Rivoli, showing "Three Hours," got fair returns with many expressions of disappointment at the sadness of the picture.

The Liberty put on an Easter fashion show in conjunction with the showing of "Fashions for Women." Patrons who came late liked the picture, but not enough of them investigated via the box office.

The Broadway broke records with "Slide, Kelly, Slide" and satisfied all comers. Fanchon and Marco's "Musical Comedy" idea was well received.

The Columbia, playing "Parisian Love," did nice business until the last two days, when it slumped. This might be due to adverse criticisms from the newspapers. Patrons accepted the picture as fair entertainment.

The Blue Mouse still continues to do good business with "Don Juan" and Vitaphone. Picture goes into its fifth week tomorrow, thereby establishing a new endurance record for this house. Management delighted with the way the new policy is getting over.

Memphis

FLOOD conditions and disturbance of the public mind apparently have affected show business in Memphis the past fortnight. During the past week generally attendance has fallen off in most theatres.

Lon Chaney in "Tell It to the Marines," backed with a vigorous publicity campaign and attractive ballyhoos, gave the Colonial Theatre the lion's share of the business last week.

Loew's Palace-Publix, with Richard Dix in "Knockout Reilly" enjoyed good business also.

Tampa

EASTER Sunday brought out somewhat better attendance at all Tampa theatres, starting the week very nicely, but the following six days failed to keep up the pace and the week went over just a little under the average.

The Tampa, with "Knockout Reilly" the first four days, sent the customers away boosting, but the title hadn't the appeal for the Tampa clientele and it failed to prove a big draw. "Cabaret" held the feature spot for the last three days. It was well liked and did fairly good.

The Strand opened the week with "Too Many Crooks," which pulled fairly good for two days. "Michael Strogoff" failed to increase patronage above the average for its three days showing and "The Notorious Lady" closed the week to just about average business.

The Victory had a second run of "McFadden's Flats" the first three days to fair business. "Jewels of Desire" and "Pleasure Before Business" divided the last four days and did about average.

The Franklin's three changes were "Hey, Hey, Cowboy," "Ain't Love Funny?" and "Tentacles of the North." Business just about average with all three.

Jacksonville

THE opening of the Florida and the showing of the health picture, "The Naked Truth," knocked the spots out of the show business in Jacksonville last week, with practically every house except the Palace and Rialto going into the red. The Florida lost $1,000, according to reliable information, the Arcade about $200, the Imperial slightly less. "The Naked Truth" got right around $900 a day at the Temple, alternating "men" and "women" only shows.

Indianapolis

"BEAU GESTE," shown at the opening of the Colonial Theatre, under management of the Frank J. Rembusch Enterprises, drew a large share of business in Indianapolis, due to the unusual type picture for the house, but failed to bring entirely satisfactory box office results, due to the price.

However, the Colonial attracted considerable business from the Vitaphone at Circle, showing "The Better 'Ole."

Business generally was normal, rain and cold weather cutting down receipts two days. The Berkell stock company at English's has failed to make any mentionable dent in movie returns, it is said.

Salt Lake City

VERY good weather and very good theatre business was experienced in Salt Lake City for the past week.

A fashion show staged with "Fashions for Women," interspersed with specialty dancing numbers, gave Esther Ralston's picture capacity business all week at the Paramount.

The American continues to pack them in with the new double feature policy. "A Lunatic at Large" and "Sweet Rosy O'Grady" were the double bill.

At the Victory Theatre, "Cabaret" enjoyed good business, and at the Gem, Marie Prevost and Harrison Ford in "The Night Bride" proved a pleasing attraction.

The Kinema, with Buck Jones in "Desert Valley" drew a good crowd of Jones' following.

The Pantages, offering "Heaven on Earth," with their usual vaudeville bill and one of the "Collegian" series, was also a good draw.

At the Orpheum, "Ain't Love Funny" was well received.

According to managers of the second-run and neighborhood houses, business was in the way of picking up.

"McFadden's Flats" Drive in Canada City Uses 8 Lines of Approach

"McFADDEN'S FLATS" had quite a boom during the last few weeks in Toronto, Canada, but the box-office of the Regent Theatre, not the local real estate offices, got the exclusive benefit of the increased business.

The boom was occasioned by the exploitation campaign conducted for the Regent's presentation of the production. The campaign, handled by First National Exploiteer Louis Brager in co-operation with Manager McKnight of the Regent was representative of the exploitation methods being applied to the picture in its key city showings throughout the country. Eight different lines of approach to the public were developed in addition to the regular line-up of newspaper and billboard advertising.

During the week preceding the opening the Toronto "Evening Telegram" carried the "McFadden's Flats" Construction Contest as a daily feature.

Concurrent with the three weeks' engagement of the picture at the Regent the Toronto "Daily Star" ran a Scotch-Irish story contest. Readers were invited to send in funny stories involving an Irishman and a Scotchman. Originality was not insisted upon, the time honored Scotch-Irish jokes being as acceptable as any other. The funniest story each day was awarded the first prize of $5.00; pairs of passes were awarded for the ten next best stories.

A mailing list was made up comprising all the "Mc's" and "Mac's" found in the city directory. To this list of addresses were sent 8,700 one-cent government postcards. The card congratulated the recipient upon possessing a name that started with so celebrated a prefix and urged a visit to the Regent during the run of "McFadden's Flats."

An effective tie-up was arranged with the Canadian National News Service, which controls 25 outdoor newsstands located at important business intersections of the city. Wooden blocks cut from two-by-fours were painted red to resemble bricks and each "brick" carried appropriate billing. These were used as paper weights on all the outdoor newsstands and were also distributed to hotels, cigar stores and shops for use on their counters.

Another tie-up was arranged with the regional distributor of the Life Saver confection. Twenty thousand sample packages were distributed. Imprinted in green on each packags was the line: "It's a life saver against gloom—See 'McFadden's Flats.'"

A form of "insurance policy" was drafted providing for the payment of $50 "to the heirs of any patron who succumbs from laughter while witnessing any performance. At the bottom of the "policy" a place was provided for the name and address of the "insured." These records proved of considerable value to the theatre in making up-to-date mailing lists for future use.

A profitable tie-up was also effected with the Toronto Street Railway Company whereby display cards announcing the showing were carried on the "dashes" of all street cars.

Adopts "Watch this Column" Style for "Strogoff" Ads

Advance newspaper advertising for the showing of "Michael Strogoff," at the Imperial Theatre in San Francisco, was based on the same lines of the "Watch This Column" ads which Universal is carrying in the "Saturday Evening Post." The same slogan to the ads signed by Carl Laemmle in the "Post" was used at the top of the single-column notices which advanced the showing of "Michael Strogoff." The San Francisco campaign was handled by Jeff Lazarus, publicity director for the Publix Theatres in that city.

The department of the Universal Home Office which handles the correspondence resulting from the Laemmle "Post" Column prepared a list of all correspondents in the Imperial's drawing territory and to them was sent a multigraphed letter telling about the local showing of "Strogoff."

College Ball Team Works for "Slide, Kelly"

The college team played a scheduled game the afternoon the picture opened at the theatre so Holliday did considerable exploiting at the ball park.

One thousand heralds were given to persons at the entrance gate of the ball park and 50 window cards were tacked both inside and outside the grandstand. Also, a ten-foot cross banner was planted over the score board which could be easily seen by everybody in the ball park.

Joins Opposition's Parade With Picture Ballyhoo

The Manatee County Fair was opposition to the Palace Theatre, Bradenton, Fla., the days "Les Miserables" was showing there but that didn't keep Harry F. Botto, manager of the house, from joining the parade which preceded the opening of the fair. He covered an automobile with advertising matter on the Universal Film de France production and had it join the procession.

Studio Briefs

Richard Tucker was this week signed for a role in Florence Vidor's new starring vehicle for Paramount, "The World at Her Feet." His last work for Paramount was in Bebe Daniels' picture, "A Kiss in a Taxi." Immediately prior to that he appeared in "Wings."

Camera work was started this week on fire sequences which end Columbia's drama, "The Romantic Age," in which Eugene O'Brien and Alberta Vaughn are the featured players. To guarantee realism for the production the cooperation of the fire department was secured by Harry Cohn, Columbia executive. Robert Florey is directing from the story by Dorothy Howell.

Phillip Strange, English stage actor, who has appeared as a sophisticated character in several American-made productions, was this week placed under a long term contract by Paramount. He had a minor role in "The Sorrows of Satan." He has since then played in several Paramount films among them, "The Ace of Cads."

The last portion of the Warner Bros. program of releases is now in production and three productions on which preparatory work has been in progress will shortly get under way in the near future. "The Heart of Maryland" will be started on May 2. Among supporting players will be Warner Richmond, Helene Costello (her sister, Dolores, is the starring player) and Carrol Nye. "What Happened to Father" will be placed in work on April 28. Selected for parts in "Dearie," Irene Rich's next picture, are William Collier, Jr., Edna Murphy, Anders Randolph, Douglas Gerrard, Richard Tucker, and Arthur Rankin. Archie Mayo will direct "Dearie" from a story by Carolyn Wells.

Having completed camera work on "Poor Girls," a Columbia production which was written by Sophie Bogen, the picture is now being cut and edited by Director William J. Craft and Viola Lawrence, film editor for Columbia Pictures. This is Craft's third picture for Columbia.

The Costello sisters, Dolores and Helene, will be seen together in the screen transcription by Warner Brothers of the Belasco stage play, "The Heart of Maryland," when that production is placed into work by Lloyd Bacon in the near future. The Costello girls have appeared together on the stage but have never before been cast for the same picture.

William Powell will be one of the featured actors in Richard Dix' next picture, tentatively titled "Who's Your Friend?" as soon as he finishes his work in "True to Love," a Paramount feature length comedy which will star Raymond Griffith.

The Warner Brothers have engaged Paul Schofield to prepare the scenario for "The College Widow," a Dolores Costello starring vehicle which will be started on the Coast soon and which will round out Miss Costello's contribution to the current schedule of Warner Bros. pictures following which she will begin her program of stellar roles for the new season.

Virginia Bradford, of Memphis, Tenn., originally entered upon a career in the motion picture industry as a writer about the movies. But now she assumes a more important or definite part with regard to them for she has been signed by Cecil B. De Mille to a five-year contract and assigned the featured feminine role in "The Country Doctor," which is being directed by Rupert Julian at the De Mille studio. Miss Bradford has the ingenue lead in "Stage Madness" starring Virginia Valli.

Fourteen ex-college oarsmen, the majority of whom hail from the University of California, make up the rival crews in Buster Keaton's newest comedy for United Artists, "College," scenes for which are now being shot at Balboa, Cal. Among the supporting cast which James W. Horne is directing are Ann Cornwall, Grant Withers, Florence Turner, Harold Goodwin, Snitz Edwards, James Mack, Buddy Mason and Flora Bramley.

Jack Richardson, Frank Coleman and William Irving have been added to the cast in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," now being made by Director Erle Kenton for Metropolitan.

Besides Dorothy Arzner, Paramount's new woman director, another woman has been raised to an executive post in the production department. She is Henrietta Cohn and she has been appointed executive assistant to Sam Jaffe, production manager. Miss Cohn was secretary to Adolph Zukor twelve years ago.

Raymond Cannon, scenarist, has signed a long term contract with the Metropolitan Pictures. Under the terms of the arrangement he began work this week. It is said that the contract is the result of Cannon's work on the scenario of "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary."

Roy Del Ruth has affixed his signature on a new contract with the Warner Brothers under the terms of which he will direct for the Warners for a long period of years. Del Ruth has been directing Warner features for three seasons now, his latest work included "Wolf's Clothing," "Across the Pacific" and "Footloose Widows."

Clara Bow, Paramount's starring player in "Children of Divorce," will next appear in "Hula," a romance of the Hawaiian tropics by Armine Van Tempski. Frederica Sagor, former newspaper writer, is now working on the adaptation and continuity.

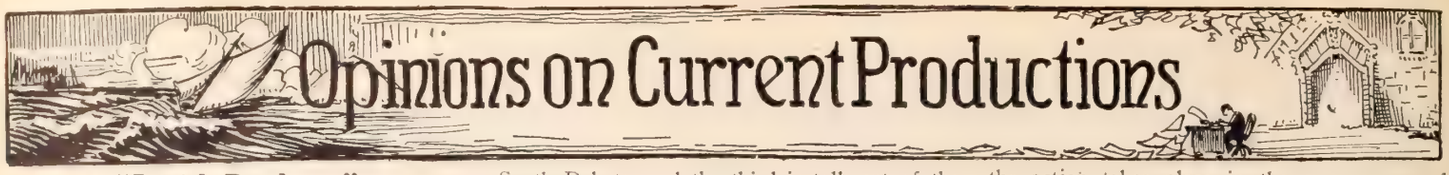
Marie Prevost, Metropolitan star, will shortly launch her new vehicle for which no title has as yet been chosen and for which no featured players have been mentioned. Zelda Sears is writing the story.

For the fifth of the Aviation Series which Al Wilson is making at Universal City, Carl Laemmle himself has decided to have him make an airplane version of "Won in the Clouds." This picture was made by Universal in 1913, with balloons instead of airplanes. Roy Knabenshue, the celebrated balloonist, was the star and Frank Lloyd played the heavy. Otis Turner directed it. Bruce Mitchell will direct the modern version.

F. Harmon Wright has been chosen to direct the Broadway play, "We Americans" for Universal. Al Cohn has been working for months on the continuity of "We Americans" and has it in such complete form that it is possible to put it in production within the next three weeks.

The signing of Gretchen Young to a long term contract has just been announced by John McCormick, West Coast production chief for First National Pictures. Miss Young appeared in Colleen Moore's "Naughty But Nice."

The latest addition to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer staff of title writers is Thomas N. Miranda, who was last week placed under contract to write exclusively for M-G-M.



Actual work on the new series of two-reel comedies which Octavus Roy Cohen wrote for Universal was this week started by Universal with Charles Puffy, the featured player, working under the direction of Harry Sweet. Frances Hyland has been engaged to do the adaptations and continuities on the Cohen stories.

Part of the production company assisting Clarence Brown in the making of "The Trail of '98" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will travel to Alaska soon to spend several weeks on the shores and waters of Lake Linderman and Lake Bennet, two of the locales in the Robert W. Service story from which Brown is making the picture. The group of technicians and photographers will go to Skagway, Alaska, within a few days under the leadership of Harry Schenck.

Olive Borden, after a trip to New York is back again at the Fox Films West Coast studio and has just started work on "The Secret Studio" under the direction of Victor Schertzinger. Clifford Holland, who had a bit in "Summer Bachelors," has the leading role opposite Miss Borden. In the cast will be Margaret Livingston, Joseph Cawthorn, Walter McGrail, Ben Bard, Nereen Phillips, Doris Lloyd and Ned Sparks.

"Twelve Miles Out," John Gilbert's new starring picture, was placed into production last week at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio under the direction of Jack Conway and with Joan Crawford in the leading feminine role and one of the chief supporting roles in the hands of Betty Compson. Ernest Torrence, Bert Roach, Edward Earle and Mike Donlin in the cast.

Marian Nixon, Universal feminine player, will play opposite Reginald Denny in that star's "Out All Night." The picture will be one of Denny's new Universal productions. It is being adapted from "Completely at Sea," an original story by Gladys Lehman. William A. Seiger will direct the production. Denny has just completed "Fast and Furious," an auto story which he wrote himself.

"Jewish Prudence"
(Roach-Pathe Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THE latest Roach comedy is built on the old gag of the business-like Hebrew's attempt to collect damages for an alleged injury received in an accident to which he was merely a spectator; trite but good for a laugh owing to the good work of the cast. And then there is an ironically humorous touch. The Hebrew, defeated in his fraudulent attempt at trial in court, starts home in his flivver and is smashed up by a big truck. Visions of damage collections are dispersed when he discovers his son is the chauffeur of the vehicle:

Max Davidson is featured, and the supporting cast includes Martha Sleeper, Johnny Fox and Gaston Glass. Leo McCarey directed.

Pathe Review No. 19
(Pathe—One Reel)

EDUCATION, beauty and adventure are contained in this number, which first shows the breeding of silkworms in Russian Turkestan, next Pathecolor views of the Bad Lands of South Dakota, and the third installment of the authorized motion picture record of the Smithsonian-Chrysler expedition to Tanganyika, which last furnishes a mild thrill when the African natives and American hunters capture a giraffe.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Bubbling Over"
(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

THE ingenuity of these Æsop's Fables! Here's another one that keeps you chuckling at the absurdities of the action. "Bubbling Over," in action, is the tale of what happens, or what can happen, when several mice get together with soapy water and clay pipes. Very amusing and highly ingenious.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Not The Type"
(Fox Van Bibber—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

BESIDES being a good slapstick comedy there's some interesting shots in this Van Bibber two reeler of how a tabloid newspaper acts when it goes to press. In fact, most of the action takes place in the press room of "The Fearless Blade," edited by Earle Fox, the Reginald Van Bibber of Richard Harding Davis' story. Running a fearless newspaper is no easy job and the Mayor's wrath is incurred. Matters are further complicated by the editor falling in love with the Mayor's daughter. A couple of gangsters are hired to wreck the plant but succeed only in mixing up the type for the lead story, which has already been changed for the better. Daughter hands her father the first copy and things look dark for the editor. However, he hastily remakes the page and gains his prospective father-in-law's good graces.

"Around Old Heidelberg"

STUDENT life is "so different" in Old Heidelberg University as compared with the colleges in our own country that most everyone will want to see the way they do it over in Germany. Follow "Hans" through play and study and you will see him initiated into a fraternity, fight a duel and be finally placed in the student jail to sleep off the effects of a too wet and boisterous party.—E. G. JOHNSTON.

Special Delivery

Not Up To Cantor's First One

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY haven't done so well by Eddie Cantor in his access to "Kid Boots," though there's no denying the piece has its share of laughs. But instead of developing spontaneously they come along intermittently—which is doubtless due to the poor arrangement of scenes, there being practically no continuity at all. Again the agile Eddie has not employed many original gags, nor has he gotten into any real characterization. The caddy of "Kid Boots" was colorful compared to his study of a postman. The comedian has some sort of a tie-up with the secret service, but he spends most of his time in covering the ground as a letter carrier and doing some comedy flops. He also goes in for the pastime of losing the mail and then telling the recipients what the postcards contained.

It is all pretty mild, but peps up here and there—what with the exploits of a villain who is eventually captured by the postman—and the inevitable chase. For relief the mailmen's ball is reproduced—and this affords the busy Cantor all kinds of opportunity to release his gags, most of which have to do with contortions on the floor.

"Special Delivery" is well titled with bright quips and it never becomes serious.

THEME: Comedy of postman who must make good and get rich before father will recognize him.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Cantor's comedy. The ballroom scene. The elevator episode. The delivery of the letters. The subtitles.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tie-up with mail carriers. Put on special showings for them. Play up Cantor and what he is doing on the screen. Feature Jobyna Ralston, who was formerly Harold Lloyd's leading woman.

DRAWING POWER: Title and personality of comedian should draw the crowds. O.K. for any type of house.

Produced and distributed by Paramount.
Length, six reels. Released April, 1927.

Don Desperado

Not "Great" But Worth While

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

ANOTHER "Don" title. Perhaps that is about the only fault that can be found with this latest Western production to come from Leo Maloney's picture ranch in the San Bernardino Mountain range not far from Los Angeles. The number of films bearing the Spanish title of courtesy have been many, but then again, are not our picture makers only playing safe when they use the term in view of its monetary value? Disregarding such trifles, however, "Don Desperado" can be said to be a good Western as it has many favorable points—an entertaining and "different" story, a natural and human central figure and sufficient vitality throughout its length. The producers of this Pathe picture did a fairly good job that betokens co-operation.

Maloney is a deputy sheriff in a Western town and his office is a dangerous one because of that queer trait or tendency of the Western pioneers, who inclined towards hanging a man first and determining his guilt or innocence afterwards. He has to match his wits against this mob spirit to save a character named Frenchy, suspected as the Black Bandit, a robber and killer. The real sheriff could not face the crowd of belligerents, so Maloney was compelled to play a lone hand in spiriting Frenchy away and exposing the crooked lawyer who prompted Frenchy's movements. Interest is not centered heavily on the love element. The fireworks have their fling—they ought to please the ardent fan.

The Cast: Leo Maloney, Eugenia Gilbert, Frederick Dana, Charles Bartlett, Bud Osborne, Morgan Davis, Allen Watt, Harry W. Ramsey, Whitehorse.

THEME: Western melodrama. Difficulties besetting deputy in his endeavors to keep the law in primitive Western town.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: How Maloney and his captive escape the "lynching party." Fight at the mine.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up Western star, who has a following. Arouse interest in early West and its pioneers.

DRAWING POWER: Holds appeal for fans frequenting houses which offer Western.

Produced by Leo Maloney. Distributed by Pathe.
Length, 5,804 feet. Released May, 1927.

Rookies

First Rate Comedy Seasoned With War Sauce

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AND still they come—these pictures flavored with men in khaki. Some of them are created semi-humorously, and among those which cater to the chuckle more than the sigh none have proved more provokingly amusing than "Rookies." It is a yarn of the doings at a citizens' military training camp—that annual excursion which takes the peace-time pistoleers and places them on a war footing. Naturally, to get it over it frolics around a pair of young rookies—one a diamond in the rough, the other a playful go-getter. There's your plot. Make the most of it.

Let it be said that it never sags in its array of gags and incident. The raw-boned chap, prior to the camp days, has attempted to steal a dancing man's girl away from him. But in the camp Mr. Raw-Bone, as the sergeant, finds himself in one tight jam after another—and it's the more polished youth who comes out ahead, even though he is a buck private.

The piece is crammed with a deal of practical jokes—such as the hazing of the rookies by the regulars. And a stray thrill slips in here and there, such as the episode with the balloon. It is all pleasant slapstick and sure to please. George K. Arthur, Tom O'Brien, Karl Dane and Marceline Day keep it spiced with humor—especially Dane.

The Cast: Karl Dane, George K. Arthur, Marceline Day, Louise Lorraine, Frank Currier, E. H. Calvert, Tom O'Brien, Charles Sullivan, Lincoln Steadman, Gene Stone.

THEME: Romantic comedy of rookies who go to training camp and encounter all kinds of playful adventures, etc.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The feud between the central characters. The effort of sergeant to embarrass the private. The hazing sequence. The balloon episode. The good acting by Arthur, Dane, Currier and O'Brien. The atmosphere.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Title is a winner. Play it up and tie up with citizens' training camps, etc. Bill as a comedy of peace-time soldiers.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for any type of house, anywhere.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
Length, six reels. Released April, 1927.

The Fighting Three

Mediocre Western; Change in Plot Formula

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THE absence in this latest Blue Streak Western of cattle, villainous ranch foremen, mortgaged farms, etc., saves it from classification among the average of its type, though the usual amount of fist fighting, hard riding and shooting is in evidence. The author deserves credit for getting away from the cut and dried formula, as a certain amount of manifest interest will be aroused in the spectator as to how the villain is to be trapped. The story provides a little back-stage comedy in a honky-tonk show in addition to the usual thrills, so if you don't promise too much the audience will leave the theatre satisfied. It is quite a novelty to see a cowpuncher star posing as a mind reader in a vaudeville act, and this is one of the unexpected twists introduced in the latest Jack Hoxie effort.

Jack becomes enamored of a prima donna in a group of strolling players and follows her to the town in which they are billed to play. On the way to the theatre he comes in contact with the villain, who is trying to rid himself of an uncle, but Jack intervenes. An outcry is made, shorts are fired, and the villain temporarily fastens the crime on Jack but, as per the usual saccharine finale, everything turns out all right.

Hoxie contributes the usual amount of athletic stunts. Olive Hasbrouck is a pleasing heroine and Marin Sais, through the alchemy of celluloid, is a chorus girl instead of the usual Indian squaw. Al Rogell turns them out inexpensively and entertaining. Camera work bad.

The Cast: Jack Hoxie, Olive Hasbrouck, Marin Sais, Wm. Malan, Fanny Warren, Buck Connors, Wm. Dyer, Henry Roquemore, Wm. Norton Bailey. Directed by Albert Rogell from story by William Lester.

THEME: Western. Cowboy's love for show girl leads him into trouble and near death because of crime committed but villain is exposed.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The honky-tonk show. Hoxie's riding and fighting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: These productions have an audience of their own.

DRAWING POWER: Good for neighborhood houses.

Produced and distributed by Universal.
Length, 4,108 feet. Released June 3, 1927.

Knockout Reilly

Fight Story Carries a Punch

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

TALK about the li'l ol' punch this picture has it straight from the shoulder. Keyed to a high pitch by Mal St. Clair, he doesn't allow it to take the count for a split second. The result is one never notices that the plot is an old-timer. That's how well it is done. Mister Mal can send home a haymaker here as well as he can with one of his well-dressed stories.

The piece is right up Richard Dix' alley, too. And what a fast hour he entertains in his role of a prize fighter who, after being down in his luck, comes back and sends the champ into a horizontal position. The heart interest helps it along. When the hero is framed by a bad bunch of boys he is sent to jail—which accounts for his mother taking up the job of scrubbing floors.

The climax is the fight and it's the humdingerest that's ever been staged for sheer give and take. Jack Renault gives Dix an awful beating and nearly has him out. But the young man's sweetheart bobs up in his corner and tips him about the frame-up. So it's curtains for the champ. It's well staged, the fight scene being especially picturesque and suspensive in its appeal. Dix, of course, is as realistic as usual and Renault is one fighter who shows evidence of getting somewhere as an actor. Mary Brian is pleasing as the girl. Jack Conway's titles add pep to the picture.

The Cast: Richard Dix, Jack Renault, Mary Brian, Harry Gribbon, Osgood Perkins, Larry McGrath, Myrtland La Varre. Director, Mal St. Clair.

THEME: Romantic melodrama of prize fighter who, after being down in his luck, knocks out the champ and wins the girl.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The frame-up. The human interest. The fight scenes. The atmosphere of the ring. The near knock-out of the hero. The subtitles.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up as one of Dix's best. Get out the fight fans and tease it with snappy catchlines, etc.

DRAWING POWER: Should go big on title and star's popularity.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, six reels. Released April, 1927.

Orchids and Ermine

Not So Weighty, But It Will Do

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE'S one that's made to order for Colleen Moore—which has considerable in common with hokum. It's the type of story that has been done countless times before and will continue to grace the screen in some guise or other for countless times to come. This time the star, whose previous essays have led her to keep unduly animated, has quieted down to play a sensitive, introspective telephone girl. She it is who longs to put on the dog and be somebody.

The plot gets under way with Jack Mulhall as a millionaire who shuns publicity. So he masquerades as his valet. This, of course, lends the romantic twist. Such an arrangement makes it easy for both to fall in love. The story is not so single-track as this outline indicates. There's a sub-plot having to do with a flower-girl becoming interested in the real valet because she believes him to be the millionaire.

The characters are developed well enough and played with seasonable dash by the Moore and Mulhall combination. Each has enough individuality and a flair for human situations to capitalize their roles to full advantage. Sam Hardy as the valet lends a colorful sketch and no small amount of merriment. It's not so weighty, but it will do.

The Cast: Colleen Moore, Jack Mulhall, Sam Hardy, Gwen Lee, Alma Bennett, Kate Price, Hedda Hopper. Director, Al Santell.

THEME: Romantic comedy of phone girl who longs to belong to the upper strata. She succeeds after various adventures.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The flirtation incident. Miss Moore's acting. Sam Hardy's comedy relief. The masquerade episode. The atmosphere and settings.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Bill as typical of Colleen Moore's stories. Play up Jack Mulhall, who is a comer. Also feature Sam Hardy. Put over a tie up with telephone operators.

DRAWING POWER: Should go with the Moore fans. All right for a summer attraction.

Produced and distributed by First National. Length, six reels. Released, April, 1927.

Somewhere in Sonora

One of the Better Westerns

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THOUGH following the usual formula, Ken Maynard's latest starring vehicle attains to the superior type of Western because of the fast action, production values and the better type of players in the cast. It should prove acceptable to the patrons of any but the Broadway class of theatres, as it is a more dressy production than the average Western containing, in addition to the stereotyped riding and shooting business, a number of pretty exterior scenes and better detail throughout the footage. The titles, too, aid in the general effect.

Maynard continues to exhibit the wonderful horsemanship, masterful fist-fighting, crack shooting, etc., seen in his previous pictures and, as usual, the handsome cowboy is eager to help the afflicted and succor those in distress. This time it is a pretty girl whom he saves from death by stopping a runaway horse and reclaiming from a life of evil the son of the rancher for whom Maynard rides herd. There is a fair amount of suspense built up, not that we don't know he will rescue the girl and retrieve the boy, for that is inevitable, but in the manner in which these feats are accomplished. The supporting cast gives a fair performance; Kathleen Collins is pretty, but gives a somewhat colorless portrayal and the comedy relief is just fair. Tarzan, Maynard's horse, does his bit of acting in addition to supplying the motive power. Direction and photography excellent.

The Cast: Ken Maynard, Kathleen Collins, Frank Leigh, Joe Bennett, Charles Hill Mailes, Carl Stockdale, Yvonne Howell, Richard Neill, Ben Corbert, Monte Montague, Tarzan. Directed by Albert Rogell.

THEME: Western cowpuncher, searching for son of ranch-owner, rescues girl from death. Falls in love. Resumes quest for boy and succeeds in finding him and taking him home.

LIGHTS: Maynard's riding and fighting. Good production.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Maynard has built up a following, so play him up in the billing.

The Sea Tiger

A Fight in Every Foot, or Almost

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

IF your patrons like action a view of the latest Milton Sills starring production will send them away happy, as there is some variety of fighting going on throughout the greater portion of the footage—there is a battle between Sills and his film brother, a verbal set-to with the heroine as Sills' opponent, another fistic affair with a professional wrestler and, to top it off, the star does a sparring act with the elements—there are several minor scraps but we can't recall them. It's good film food, both for the he-man and his weaker brother, who may get a vicarious thrill out of the display of muscular skill on exhibition in this drama of the clash between fraternal and passionate love. The locale of the story is in the Canary Islands, where it rains as much, or so it appears, as in "sunny" France.

It seems Justin Ramos had a younger brother possessed of immoral propensities toward women and, having designs on his big brother's girl, he put Justin in a quandary, for our hero had sworn to protect his brother. Then war waged between brotherly love and the variety that has its consummation in marriage with Justin steering a middle course which brought about a happy ending. Milton Sills gives a good performance as the great-hearted brother; Mary Astor has a new type of role, and Alice White, a new comer looking somewhat like Clara Bow and playing the same kind of part, deserves a big hand for her work. Direction and photography excellent plus good atmosphere.

The Cast: Milton Sills, Mary Astor, Larry Kent, Alice White, Kate Price, Arthur Stone, Emily Fitzroy, Joe Bonomo. Directed by John Francis Dillon.

THEME: Drama. Hero, sworn to protect brother, faces test when brother declares intention of seducing hero's sweetheart. Considerable fighting ensues with difficulty finally straightened out.

LIGHTS: The numerous combats, both verbal and pugilistic. The work of the cast.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up name of star in billing.

DRAWING POWER: Good for any house where they like action.

PRODUCTION HIGH-

Grinning Guns

Picture for Daily Change Houses

THIS story could have been told in two reels and as such it would have furnished a fair amount of entertainment but, as a feature length production the plot is dragged out and forced to such an extent that it proves boresome and, for that reason, rates bookings only in the daily change and "opry" houses. The story started out well but, along about the third reel the horseplay commenced with a number of interminable chases, a very low order of comedy and a dragged out finish. The title is banal.

There is an unusual twist in that there are no cattle stolen nor other of the stereotyped themes in evidence as this tale concerns the efforts of a publisher of a weekly newspaper in a small and disorderly town to get out his sheet in the face of the town boss' wrath, engendered through the publishers' scathing denunciation of the boss' system of running the town. If they had continued along those lines without resorting to hokum, the picture would have made a neat addition to the program of houses of the better class.

Hoxie and the rest of the cast give a fair performance but, in the effort to pad out the footage, they are called on to go through many ridiculous actions. There is too much footage devoted to the fight at the finish of the story which starts on the top of a high embankment, the fighters roll down to a ledge above a waterfall, more fight and another drop into the water with the battle still raging until the villain is finally carried off.

The Cast: Jack Hoxie, Ena Gregory, Bob Milasch, Arthur Morrison, George B. French, Dudley Hendricks, Alphonse Martell. Directed by Albert Rogell.

THEME: Western. Hero aids publisher of weekly in small town to get out his paper despite opposition of town boss. There is romance between publisher's daughter and hero.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The fighting, riding and shooting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Hoxie's popularity.

DRAWING POWER: For small theatres. Family picture.

Produced and distributed by Universal.
Length, 5,777 feet. Released, June 19, 1927.

Ankles Preferred

Neat Little Comedy-Drama Should Please 'Em

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

DASHING along on its own momentum with a motive power generated more by incident than by plot, this picture succeeds in capturing the interest and holding it uncommonly well. Which is good evidence that the director is acquainted with "good business" when he sees it.

Madge Bellamy is the girl of the ankles. She's also the girl with the eyes. And she can't make the four of them behave in her role of a model in a specialty shop. Consequently the firm does a healthy business with the visiting buyers.

The story develops quite a plot before it finishes. While the partners scheme to interest moneyed interests through destroying the girl's charms, a particular bounder spoils it all at a subsequent party with an insincere gesture to do right by her. This upsets the partners as well as the rich man, and she's happy to trust her future in the care of a poor but deserving youth.

Miss Bellamy lends color and vivacity to the heroine—with Lawrence Gray and J. Farrell MacDonald rendering first-rate support. The film is neatly mounted.

The Cast: Madge Bellamy, Lawrence Gray, Barry Norton, Allen Forrest, Marjorie Beebe, J. Farrell MacDonald, Mary Foy, William Strauss, Lillian Elliot, Joyce Compton. Director, J. G. Blystone.

THEME: Romantic drama of model who is used as pawn by scheming employers to increase their business. She is rescued by deserving youth.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The incident. The star's personality. The party sequence. The captions. The mounting. The romantic appeal.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tease the title. Tie up with modiste shops on sale of women's stockings, etc. Mention Barry Norton and Farrell MacDonald in cast.

DRAWING POWER: Title has drawing possibilities. With good exploitation should succeed. O. K. for average houses everywhere.

Length, six reels. Released, April, 1927

Children of Divorce

Good Performances Aid In Putting It Over

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

NOT so much can be said for the story of this picture, which, as its title indicates, concerns the result of domestic unhappiness. It details the growth to maturity of two youngsters who have been left in a convent by their divorced mothers. That the days of childhood are exceedingly plastic is proved in the adaptability of the young charges to their surroundings. They soon develop drab spirits, governed as they are by their colorless background.

After maturity is reached by the girls the plot picks up and solves a way out for them through the channels of romance. It's a picture which is easy to guess the denouement. And for purposes of contrast the heroines must needs be represented as serious and spirited. Naturally, the latter has more opportunity to provide color and adventure. And Clara Bow sees to that in a very capable manner. Esther Ralston as the unspoiled girl makes a capable foil.

Frank Lloyd, the director, has overcome much of the plot shortcomings with his lighting and other technical effects. He has provided some charming settings and gotten every ounce of dramatic flavoring from the story. The supporting players, consisting of Einar Hanson, Gary Cooper and Edward Martindel, catch the spirit of the picture and render good assistance.

The Cast: Clara Bow, Esther Ralston, Einar Hanson, Gary Cooper, Norman Trevor, Edward Martindel, Julia Swayne Gordon, Tom Ricketts. Director, Frank Lloyd.

THEME: Romantic drama of two convent-bred girls—one unspoiled, the other flighty, who work out their romantic destinies and happiness.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The charming sets. The appeal of the romance. The contrast. The pathos. The lighting. The acting by principals.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Bill as adaptation of Owen Johnson novel. Play up cast featuring Bow, Ralston, Hanson and Cooper. Feature the director.

DRAWING POWER: Cast should invite attention. O.K. for average houses everywhere.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, seven reels. Released April, 1927.

Beware of Widows

Farce Comedy Makes Good Entertainment

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THE best thing about this production is the unexpected twist encountered every time you believe the climax has arrived; not that the ultimate denouement causes any conjecture, for it's a thousand to one shot that the hero will marry the heroine, but, despite the pre-nuptial wrenches thrown into the marital machinery by the heroine on several occasions, it seems she will be defeated in her aspiration towards marriage with the hero. It is a compact little farce with good direction and an excellent performance by the star and supporting cast which numbers some well-known troupers—Bryant Washburn, Walter Hiers, Tully Marshall and Paulette Duval, who handled the second lead in a very capable manner. A new set of subtitles would help, as those adorning the production at present are devoid of any real humor, being of the type employed in slapstick comedies.

Though there are widows, grass widows, bachelors and jealous husbands in the story, there is nothing risque in any of the scenes, making it a safe bet for any member of the family to view. The plot revolves around the efforts of the heroine to win back the hero after jilting him on their wedding day. Being a young, handsome doctor, she has her troubles in regaining his affection as many of his female patients seek to marry him. Of course, being a moving picture, the heroine wins out.

The Cast: Laura La Plante, Bryant Washburn, Paulette Duval, Walter Hiers, Tully Marshall, Catherine Carver, Heinie Conklin, Otto Hoffman. Story by Owen Davis.

THEME: Farce-comedy of girl who jilts fiance and her trouble in regaining him as he is sought by other women.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The acting of the cast, particularly the star. The scenes at the doctor's office, the hotel and on the houseboat.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up names of cast. Use marriage angle in advertising.

DRAWING POWER: Good bet for second-run houses.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Length, 4,689 feet. Released, May 22, 1927.

Bitter Apples

The Stuff of Which Audience Pictures Are Made

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

IF, after reading the title of this production, patrons can be drawn in to see the picture, they will not be disappointed in its contents, but it is rather doubtful whether the allegorical title will be appreciated. The probable reason for its retention on the picture version of Harold MacGrath's novel is the popularity of the author, but whether this particular story was a best seller or not we don't know. The story has some unusual twists, is well directed and the cast is uniformly good, though Myrna Loy appears to better advantage in native girl roles; she is not the type for the part called for in this production.

It is a human, if somewhat exaggerated, story of a girl who marries a man she hates in order to secure revenge on him for a wrong to her family of which he is innocent, a fact she discovers before "Finis" is flashed, needless to say. The two are marooned on a wrecked ship and it is there the drama is played out, the girl discovering it is not in her to hate the man. Though pirate ships have not been in evidence for nearly a hundred years and though this is a supposedly modern story, one of the "skull and cross-bones" vessels is dragged into the action. Why not call it rum runner? Outside of this there is little fault to be found with the current Monte Blue starring vehicle.

The Cast: Monte Blue, Myrna Loy, Paul Ellis, Chas. Hill Mailes, Sydney de Grey, Ruby Blaine, Patricia Grey. Scenario and direction by Harry Hoyt. Cameraman, Hal Mohr.

THEME: Melodrama. Girl marries banker's son for revenge because failure of bank caused her father to commit suicide. Love interferes with her plan.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The wreck of the ship. Monte's fight with the pirates. The good work of the cast.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Title suggests grocery tie-up Play up cast.

DRAWING POWER: Good attraction for any house.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Length, 5,463 feet. Released April 23, 1927.

Cyclone of the Range

Comedy and the Usual Ingredients of a Western

IT has been pretty well established by this time that pictures in which appear children and animals are bound to find favor with the vast majority of movie-goers; likewise that action and a touch of romance are more essential for the success of productions of this type than departure from the orthodox in story detail. A little boy and a dog furnish the comedy for this picture. Tom Tyler provides the riding and fighting elements, Elsie Tarron portrays the beauteous heroine, and Harry Woods, as the mysterious Black Rider, lends the necessary touch of evil without which we would have nothing to gnash our teeth over; therefore it is a fairly confident prediction that this picture will get over with your patrons.

The interest of the spectator is captured right in the first hundred feet when a murder is committed and the culprit escapes; the murdered man is the brother of our hero who swears vengeance and gets it after many set-backs and just as he is about to be lynched for the crime. That's the story, but it's the incidents that count. Tyler has a nice personality in addition to his athletic ability, Frankie Darro supplies the amusing kid stuff and Harry Woods makes a good, if somewhat theatrical villain. The footage is just long enough, direction okay and photography somewhat better than that of the average Western.

THEME: Western. Cowpuncher's brother is murdered and culprit gets away. Cowpuncher sets out to get him and does so after many trials and tribulations.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Tyler's riding and shooting. The comedy of Frankie Darro. The fist fight at the end of the story.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tyler has following. Play up kid angle.

DRAWING POWER: Neighborhood houses. Family picture.

Produced and distributed by F. B. O. Length, 4,800 feet. Released April 24, 1927.

Outlaws of Red River

Well Up to Tom Mix Standard

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

SO much has been written in the past of the exploits of Tom Mix and his wonder horse "Tony" that there isn't much more to write about unless it is to let you know that Tom rides and fights as well as ever; that Tony is not in immediate danger of being uncrowned as the king of all motion picture horses, or that Tom has uncovered a brand new gag for use in this particular picture. Now, you know what to expect—plenty of action and an entirely new method of exterminating a crew of desperadoes.

As Fighting Ace of the Texas Rangers, Tom is engaged in the interestting task of breaking up a band of outlaws whose weekly diversion is the robbing of the stage coach. As a special incentive for this work, he nurses the pet grievance of having lost his parents at the hands of the bandit leader. The latest robbery is foiled by Tom holding up the stage himself, during which he meets one of the occupants—a girl who later is identified as the bandit's daughter. Of course, this serves to complicate matters. But anyway, Tom gains access to the bandit's lair where their chief lies dying and eventually finds that the girl is an orphan by the same circumstances which deprived him of his parents. A successful raid by Tom, in conjunction with other Rangers, is made. It is here that the new gag is used. See it yourself, it's a good one.

The Cast: Tom Mix, Marjorie Daw, Arthur Clayton, William Conklin, Duke Lee and Francis McDonald. Prologue: Lee Shumway, Ellen Woonston, Jimmy Downs and Virginia Marshall. Directed by Lew Weiler.

THEME: Western melodrama dealing with Ranger's expedition against bandits.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Mix's riding, true Western atmosphere and capable cast, not forgetting Tony.

Camille

Neatly Produced, Acted, But Story Is Not in Character

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

EVERYTHING possible has been done toward making this an outstanding achievement. It has been lavishly produced with settings rich in tone and quality; it has been intrusted to a star and cast that get every ounce of dramatic feeling from the characters. And yet it cannot be called an exceptional film because too many liberties have been taken with the text. Those who are not in the know concerning the Lady of the Camellias will accept it as a fine celluloid treat. But to the old-timers it could just as well be called some other name.

It fails to serve up any real characterization of the tragic Camille, probably because the sponsors feared the censors' scissors. Consequently it doesn't provide much plot material. The result is the director gives his attention to the production—seeing to it that the heroine is presented with artistic poses—and what not. No fault can be found with the picture in its mounting. But the story has been modernized so much that it is hardly recognizable.

Yet it has big moments—moments in which it sweeps forward with fine dramatic power. The picture has been done in good tempo—with restraint marking Niblo's work throughout. The star's company is excellent—with Gilbert Roland and Alec Francis standing out conspicuously.

The Cast: Norma Talmadge, Gilbert Roland, Alec Francis, Lilyan Tashman, Maurice Costello, Rose Dione, Harvey Clark, Helen Jerome Eddy, Albert Conti, Evelyn Selbie, Etta Lee. Director, Fred Niblo.

THEME: Drama of tragic love with youth being saved by his father from throwing himself away.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The settings. The fine mounting. The lighting. The subdued direction. The poise and bearing of star and her fine performance. The meeting of Camille and Armand. The opera sequence. The climax.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up as one of star's best. Feature the cast. Enlist patronage of best clientile, etc.

DRAWING POWER: Star's name and title should draw them. For first-run houses.

Produced and distributed by United Artists. Length, ten reels. Released.

Regional News from Correspondents

Salt Lake City

WITH the arrival here of Fred Dahnkin, owner of the American Theatre, the largest theatre in Salt Lake City, a new policy has been put into operation. The program and prices have been cut, and each purchaser of a ticket is also now handed another ticket good for the following week's show, provided still another is purchased to accompany it. Two feature pictures are also being offered under this new arrangement.

C. F. Montgomery, former manager of the American, left a few days ago to take up his new duties as manager of the new Egyptian Theatre, at Boise, Idaho. Dave Schayer, publicity man at the American, will return this week after having supervised the opening of the Egyptian at Boise.

Dave Farquhar, manager of the local exchange for Warner Bros., is leaving with Sales Representatives Ed. C. Mix and George Cloward, for the State of Montana. Farquhar is expected to return after about one week in that territory.

Louis Marcus, District Manager for Paramount, is spending a few days in the Denver territory. Branch Manager L. J. McGinley is making a trip throughout the Northern territory at present.

Hal Elias, exploitation manager for M.-G.-M., returned from a trip to Rock Springs, Wyoming, where he spent about a week. He leaves this city next week for Butte and Great Falls, Montana.

George Wassell, traveling auditor for M.-G.-M., is spending some time checking over the accounts of the local exchange.

New salesmen are being put on in the short subject department of the local M.-G.-M. Exchange, according to Manager L. C. Wingham. They will be announced shortly. There also have been several cameramen appointed in this territory for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer News, within the past few days, and their names also will be given out right away. Manager Wingham is going into Montana this week, after having just returned from Idaho, where he spent the past two weeks with Salesman A. A. Bruce. Bruce is now in Southern Utah and the other salesmen out of this office are out in their respective territories.

Paul De Mordaunt, exhibitor, of Blackfoot and Rexburg, Idaho, has been lining up new business along the Row here within the past few days.

J. A. Epperson, Pathe branch manager here, returned from Idaho a few days ago and is leaving to work the Cache Valley section of Utah. Epperson states that the results on the April and May sales and billings drive have proven very successful.

J. T. Sheffield, owner of the Columbia Exchanges, is visiting the local office here, and has been supervising the moving of the exchange into the new building, which move took place a few days ago.

The Columbia Exchange, United Artists Corporation, and Film Booking Offices, Inc., have taken up their new quarters this week and Warner Brothers will be installed by May 1st. This new building, which is directly east of the new exchange building built last year, on East First South Street, is strictly modern and up-to-date, with all of the necessary fire prevention equipment and safeguards installed, as well as all other modern devices.

Local Manager Fidler, of the Columbia office here, is out in the territory for about ten days or two weeks.

The new Gem Theatre, of Provo, Utah, operated by L. N. Strike, opened on April 15th. Sheffield and Fidler were in attendance, the opening program consisting of Columbia releases. Sheffield expects to return to Denver about April 25th.

John Rugar, exhibitor visitor from Park City, Utah, is spending several days in this city in the interest of his houses there.

A. J. O'Keefe is now managing the Iris Theatre, at Murray, Utah, in the place of Paul Shelmerdine who has taken up other interests. This house is owned by George Homrig.

Hugh Brennan of the Rex Theatre at Rexburg, Idaho, is also among exhibitor visitors here.

D. J. McNerney, manager of the local United Artists Exchange, left here with Kenneth Hodkinson, division manager, for Montana, where they visited the principal cities there. Hodkinson went on to Denver and McNerney will return to this city within a few days.

Milton Cohn, United Artists salesman, left for the Nevada section a few days ago.

Fred Lind, F. B. O. Exchange manager here, is expecting to make a week's trip into Idaho right away, since having become settled in the new building this week is still in Southern Utah.

H. Bradley Fish, former Fox [illegible] for his new branch in Kansas City. The position of booker here has been filled by Carl Hallstrom, former shipper, since Clyde H. Walker has been advanced to manager of the local exchange. Robert T. Danquin is the new shipper.

Clyde H. Messinger is leaving his managerial desk at the Educational Exchange for a brief visit to Twin Falls, the latter part of this week.

Manager W. F. Gordon is expected to return to his managerial duties at the Associated First National office in this city, the latter part of the week, after having been in Idaho for several days. Gordon has also been in attendance at the opening of the new Egyptian Theatre at Boise, Idaho. Sales Mgr. Vete Stewart is still in Montana and Claude Hawkes is in Boise, Idaho.

Jim Merian, P. D. C. traveling auditor, is still in this city. Lon E. Hoss, former publisher of The Exhibitor's News, a local publication, is now occupied in the capacity of booker for Producers here, in the place of Dave Barnholtz, who has left for Denver.

W. J. Heineman, local Universal Exchange manager, conferred with Division Manager Don T. Mitchell in Ogden, Utah, a few days ago, as Mitchell was en route to San Francisco from Denver. Salesman James R. Keitz is now in the Wyoming country, and Tony Hartford is in the coal camps of Southern Utah.

E. D. Smith, Manager of the Utah branch of the National Theatre Supply Company, and O. J. Hazen, representative, just returned from the Idaho territory, where [illegible]

Atlanta

C. D. HAUG, for many years in charge of exploitation for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in the Southeast, has left that connection to join the staff of Charles G. Branham, head of Universal's theatre interests in the Kansas City-Omaha division. During Mr. Haug's years in the Southeast he has made many friends who will wish him success in his new connection—an association, by the way, which puts him on the staff of Charles G. Branham, formerly of Atlanta, but more recently of Sarasota, Florida, and now division manager of Universal's Kansas City-Omaha Theatre Circuit.

William G. Minder, head of Tiffany's Exchange in Atlanta, returned last week from a trip in Florida and South Georgia.

G. R. Beacham, manager of First National's Atlanta office, visited Birmingham last week.

Walter Brackin, who operates the Callahan Theatre, at Bainbridge, Ga., was a visitor on Film Row last week.

Arthur C. Bromberg, president of Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, with headquarters in Atlanta, has been on a visit to Charlotte, New Orleans, and other cities in the South, this week.

Miss Francis Colley, in the cashier's department of the M.-G.-M. Atlanta Exchange, was called to Washington, Ga., this week by the death of her uncle, Mr. John Colley.

John W. Mangham, Jr., manager of the Atlanta branch of Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, has returned to the city after a visit to the Charlotte office.

Miss Velma Wynn last week joined the local force of M.-G.-M., being assistant to Floyd Evans, cashier.

Willard C. Patterson left last Tuesday night for a swing around Universal's theatre circuit in Florida.

Earle E. Griggs, director of exploitation for Universal in this territory, is now in Birmingham, putting over an exploitation campaign. He will next go from Birmingham to Huntsville.

Dixie Graham, of the Atlanta branch of F.B.O. visited Birmingham on business last week.

George Allison, head of the Fox Atlanta branch, was in New York last week.

J. H. Butner, manager of Educational's Atlanta branch, returned to his desk Monday last, after a trip through South Georgia.

Miss Fannie Groodzinsky, secretary to Ben Y. Cammack, manager of Universal's Atlanta exchange, is reported seriously ill at her home here. During her absence, Miss Lillian Wade is acting as Mr. Cammack's secretary.

Paul A. Strachan, well-known salesman for First National, working out of the Atlanta office, was operated upon last Thursday for appendicitis at the Georgia Baptist Hospital, in Atlanta. Mr. Strachan has been ill for several weeks at his home here, and for a time it was thought an operation would not be necessary.

However, his condition became such in the last few days that it was deemed best to operate and he went to the hospital Wednesday for that purpose. Mr. Strachan has been in the film business for years and has many friends all over the Southeast.

Kings and princes of the motion picture industry who felt their thrones trembling Wednesday may be relieved to know that there is no immediate danger of collapse. True, a most promising young heir to a major executive office has arrived on the scene, but we have it from reliable information that he will concentrate his energies upon other and more important considerations for some years to come.

The newly-arrived heir is Edwin Michalove, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Michalove, who arrived last Wednesday morning.

Milwaukee

L. H. SLINN, assistant to the General Council of the Film Board of Trade of New York, addressed a special meeting of members of the Arbitration Board in Milwaukee on Thursday. Mr. Slinn left shortly after the meeting to go to Chicago.

The chief topic of conversation along Film Row these days is the impending baseball game. The Saxe managers have challenged the exchange managers and bookers to a game to be held in the near future, exact date as yet undecided. In the corner of the Saxe office lean several bats, never been used to all appearances, but the Saxe managers expect to get in some good, stiff practice before the big game. The exchange league is planning to get out on Saturday for a little practice and to pick out the outstanding stars for the official team. Both teams seem to be evenly matched, so far as material is concerned.

Charles Guelson, manager of the Badger Theatre, at Stoughton, was visiting around the exchanges for a day or two this last week.

C. C. Brown opens his new theatre, the Opera House, at Chatham, Mich., on May 1st. The old Opera House was burned last winter, and Mr. Brown has since been engaged in building a new theatre.

The scarcity of visiting exhibitors in the city last week may be attributed to the fact that they are all busy at home getting fishing gear in readiness for May 1st. Otto Bell, of the Bell Theatre at Sparta, we have heard, has a new fly rod and has been boasting that he can whip the fly over fifty feet.

Roy Stewart, of the Unique Theatre, at Tomah, is planning to build a new theatre in that city if he is unable to regain the lease on his present house, which was given to Charles Seeger, of La Crosse.

J. Cuddihy, of the Calumet Theatre, Calumet, has returned from a vacation in Florida.

"Doc" Golly, of the Delft Theatre chain of Marquette, Mich., came to Milwaukee this week to meet his wife, who has been spending the winter in the South.

Sol Levitan, genial state treasurer, visited one of the local exchanges this week, accompanied by A. O. Pawnack, a Madison banker.

George Levine, assistant sales director for Universal, has returned from his first trip through the territory in his new capacity.

Carl Beglinger, of the Majestic Theatre, at Appleton, was a recent visitor along Film Row.

Sam Miller, of the Fischer Theatre circuit, was in the city last week.

Art Roberts is leaving his position as assistant manager of F. B. O., to travel the Southern territory for that exchange. Art Schmitz, who was formerly in the Southern territory, will be city salesman. Walter A. Blaney is now booker in the F. B. O. Exchange. He was until recently with the Mid-West Film Exchange, where he was salesman and office manager.

R. B. Riggs, of the Purtell Theatre, at Rio, visited Film Row this week, his first visit in a good many months.

George Herzog, of the Strand and Rialto theatres, at Manitowoc, made brief visits to several of the exchanges.

Mrs. Harry Hart, wife of the office manager of Celebrated Exchange, is recuperating from a recent illness.

The Lincoln Theatre, which has undergone extensive remodelling, was opened on the 16th. B. K. Fisher is manager. He also manages the Mozart and Park theatres. Negotiations are under consideration at the present time by the Universal Circuit to take over Mr. Fisher's new Lincoln and the Mozart. Nothing definite has been settled upon, however.

Baltimore

THE Brodie Theatre, 1118 Light Street, recently badly damaged by fire, has been rebuilt and has been reopened under the management of Ruben Soltz, of Pittsburgh, Pa., who leased the playhouse from Joseph Brodie, the owner.

Frank Hamerman, President of the American Theatres Corporation, operating the Embassy Theatre, Baltimore, Md., visited Baltimore Monday and Tuesday, April 25 and 26.

William M. Whitehurst has been confined to his home off and on during the past several weeks, due to illness and it is feared that an operation may have to be performed in the near future. He is assistant to Dr. J. Herbert Whitehurst, President of the Whitehurst Theatrical Interests, operating the New and Garden theatres.

Charles Forrester, manager of the Boulevard Theatre, Baltimore, Md., has been suffering from stomach trouble recently and fears are entertained that it may become serious.

Arthur B. Price, President of the Avalon Theatres Corporation and manager of that, the Aurora, the New Preston and other Baltimore theatres, is recovering from an operation on his right hand, but the other day he had his left hand cut accidentally when helping one of his children to cut something.

Keith's Hippodrome, Baltimore and Eutaw streets, managed by E. A. Lake, has had its front entirely cleaned by the sand method and now presents a brand new appearance. Mr. Lake is back of the project to build the Tuxedo Theatre, in Towson.

Harry Van Hoven, publicity representative of the Whitehurst Theatrical Interests, left Baltimore for an unknown destination Friday, April 22. He was expected back the following Tuesday.

Laurence Shead, formerly manager of Loew's Century here and then manager of the Tivoli, Brooklyn, N.Y., has gone to Chicago to manage a playhouse there.

John R. Stewart has been promoted from chief usher at Loew's Century to assistant manager of Loew's Valencia.

Everett Watson, formerly treasurer at Loew's Century, Baltimore, has been appointed assistant manager of that playhouse.

Extensive improvements and alterations have been made on the Capitol Theatre, Cumberland, Md., which is managed by Mrs. Frank Fischer, who also manages the Belvedere. The Capitol is now showing first-run pictures.

William Garst, of Roanoke, Va., has bought the Century Theatre Building, Petersburg, Va., for $56,000. It was sold at a trustee's sale.

The Philipi Theatre, Elkins, W. Va., which was destroyed by fire last spring, is to be rebuilt by Mrs. Charles Teter. The seating capacity will be about 800. It will measure 57 by 145 feet and the cost will be about $20,000.

The annual convention of the American Federation of Musicians will be held in Baltimore at the Hotel Southern during the week beginning Monday, May 9, under the auspices of Baltimore Local No. 40, Henry Mayers, president.

Arrangements are being made by a committee of 25 persons of which the chairman is Shepherd S. Pearson. It is expected that over 500 delegates will attend from this country and Canada and that 700 locals will be represented.

The convention will be in session for five days.

Minneapolis

THE Heywood-Wakefield Seating Company has transferred L. H. Francis from Minneapolis to New York. Francis was formerly manager of the Minneapolis branch and is now to be stationed at the New York warehouses in complete charge of selling to the theatre circuits throughout the country. Louis Kopman, who has been connected with the film industry in this territory for several years, will succeed Francis in Minneapolis.

Last week's visitors to the Minneapolis exchanges included Irene Cahill, owner of the Princess Theatre, at Janesville, Minn.; Al Peterson, owner of the Grand Theatre, at International Falls, Minn., and Al Picker who is building the new theatre at Ironwood, Mich.

Sam Goldlam, formerly in the film industry in Nebraska, has been added to the sales force of the Minneapolis branch of F. B. O.

S. M. Harris and Wilbur White have purchased the Loeb Arcade in Minneapolis, where several film exchanges and the offices of F. & R. are located.

J. S. Cohan, formerly with the Northwest M. P. T. O. Film Exchange, has joined the sales force of the Minneapolis Pathe branch.

The State Theatre, which is being constructed in Fairmont, Minn., by Harry Gilbert is expected to be ready for opening early in May.

Mrs. Katherine Sobota has purchased the Nickey Building, in Browerville, Minn., and is remodeling it into a theatre.

The Lyric Theatre, at Cavalier, N.D., has been sold by J. B. McCormick to Mr. and Mrs. A. B. O'Toole, of Crystal. This makes the fourth theatre which the O'Tooles operate in the state, the others being at Walhalla, Lakota and Crystal.

The New Community Theatre, at Towner, N.D., was opened about the middle of April with capacity houses.

Des Moines

GRACE VEENSTRA, for seven or eight years office secretary of Paramount Exchange, of Des Moines, won a well deserved promotion last week when she became secretary for A. W. Nichols, district manager. Succeeding Miss Veenstra as secretary for R. M. Copeland, manager of the Des Moines office, is Daisy Tibbets, who has served for the past year as booker's stenographer. Miss Tibbetts' successor in the booking department is Ella Garness, an addition to the staff of Paramount.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Shuneman have rebuilt their Isis Theatre, at Webster City, which about Christmastime was completely burned out as well as their home over the theatre. In building the new Isis they have built bigger and better, having purchased the lot adjoining the old site and erected a 750-seat house. The theatre will be opened on June 1.

The theatre at Carlyle, which was owned by Donald West, shipper, of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer office, has been sold to Harry Yarowsky, better known as Ted, who is the head of the poster department at Tiffany Productions. Mr. Yarowsky's partner is Herman Garnow. They will drive to Carlyle on Wednesday and Saturday to operate the theatre.

Mrs. Rasley, who has been known as showing the best and highest priced pictures in Northeastern Iowa, is operating the Royal Theatre at O'Neill. The theatre was reopened last week, after having been remodeled and redecorated.

Towns in which free shows are reported to be planned are at the Orpheum Theatre, at Alden, Iowa; the Empress, at Malvern; the Community Theatre, at Glenville, and the theatre at Elkhorn, Iowa.

Edward Awe, an exhibitor in the Kansas City territory, has taken the management of the Palace Theatre, at Sioux City, which was previously owned by L. E. Carnes. Mr. Awe sold the Princess Theatre, at Dexter, to C. G. Ragan. Mrs. Wentland sold her Strand Theatre, at Victor, Iowa, to Louis N. Sosua.

Another woman in the theatre business is Leona Conner, who has bought the Columbia Theatre, at Milton, Iowa. The theatre was owned by J. I. Sell.

J. J. Eastman purchased the theatre at Lyon, Iowa, the Parkside, from J. J. Eastman. Mr. Mattock, who has bought the Opera House, at Garwin, purchased the house from E. H. Dickson.

Change of ownership, at Clutier, Iowa, noted the transfer of the Grand Theatre from J. J. Kopecky to William Kopecky.

The Opera House, at Batavia, has just been bought from Mr. Swenson by Mr. Copeland.

J. Yacocks, coming from the New York office, has been auditing the books of Universal.

There has been a change of ownership at Dows, Iowa. The Dows Theatre, which is known as the Amuzu, has been taken over by A. L. Drury. The previous owners were Brooks and Son.

Margaret Broad is succeeding Helen Sorenson as stenographer at the office of Tiffany Productions. She is succeeded by Ethel Aronowich, who is just new to the film business.

Changes of ownership recorded are the Rialto Theatre, at Cedar Rapids, bought by Mr. Weaver from Mr. Dasterly; the Owl Theatre, at Hornick, bought by Clyde Barber from William Barrett; the Family Theatre, at Keswick, bought by Thomas Taylor from R. Irwin; the Gem Theatre, at Webb, bought by J. W. Wilson from Glen H. Campbell, and the Princess Theatre, at Dexter, bought by C. G. Ragan from Edward Awe. Mr. Awe has just opened up the Palace Theatre, at Sioux City, which he bought from L. E. Carnes.

A new theatre is under construction at Newman Grove, Iowa, where the Strand Theatre, owned by W. L. Douglas, was completely destroyed by fire. The new theatre is a modern, fireproof construction and will be completed by June 1.

Universal salesmen who are attending the national convention at the Drake Hotel in Chicago, are J. Jacobson, J. C. Osserman, Herbert C. Cass, Cral Reese, and D. L. Longtin. Mr. Nalor, exchange manager, also.

M. Lee, short subjects booker for Universal, came out in Easter array at the office last week. Visitors in Film Row were F. R. Bandy, of Britt, Mr. Puffer, of Webster City, Mr. Morris, of Eagle Grove, and Mr. Wolcott, of Eldora.

C. J. Latta became internationally known and heralded when he advertised a poor show at his theatre as such and advised the patrons to stay away, has just bought a half interest in the Grand Theatre Building, at Perry, his partner being William Youngclass. They also bought the other theatre at Perry, the Rex.

THE Magnet Theatre, Roslindale, has been purchased by M. Rosenburg from K. Faulke. Harry Martin, formerly of the Yolo Theatre, Boston, will do the booking.

James Grecco, owner of the Rialto Theatre, Worcester, Mass., is able to be about again after his recent experience with yeggs, which landed him in the hospital for a week.

Kenneth G. Robinson, former city salesman for the Paramount at Boston, has been advanced to sales manager, succeeding J. Frank Shea, who resigned to go with Film Booking Office as sales manager. Edward Ruff, who has been covering the Providence and Cape Cod territory for Paramount, succeeds Mr. Robinson as city salesman and Jack Gubbins, who has recently recovered from an auto accident which took place in Hartford some weeks ago, is transferred from the New Haven office to the Boston exchange and succeeds Mr. Ruff in the Providence and Cape territory.

Frank Ross, city salesman for Pathe at Boston, leads in the sales drive of that exchange, which is now in full swing.

The Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, has added a new feature to its program, consisting of a musical presentation in addition to the customary stage presentation. The first of these, given last week, is a jazz band of fourteen members, under the leadership of Gene Rodemich, formerly of St. Louis. These musical acts are added as a permanent addition to the former program.

Benjamin Green's Melrose Theatre, at Melrose, Mass., last week observed its third anniversary with a special bill.

It is understood in Boston that the E. M. Loew interests are negotiating for the purchase of Shea's Theatre in Fitchburg, Mass., which has just closed. It is also understood that if acquired, it will be made a first-run house.

Walter Foster has joined the United Artists Exchange at Boston. He was formerly associated with distributors in Boston and left the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Exchange to enter the field in Washington, from which city he now returns to Boston.

The new Paramount News laboratory has been established at 36 Melrose Street, Boston, the quarters formerly occupied by Pathe before removal to larger quarters on Stanhope Street.

Louis Weir, organist at the new Warren Theatre, Roxbury, which opened last week, is well known to radio fans, having broadcast the Boston Chamber of Commerce organ recitals twice weekly from Station WEEI, the Edison Company, Boston.

A. C. Chadwick, who operates the Conniston Theatre at Newport, N.H., was a visitor to Boston during the week, making many bookings for the summer season.

The safe in the Central Theatre, Somerville, Mass., was broken open recently by robbers, who secured about $200 in cash. Most of the receipts of the day were in another safe, which was not discovered by the intruders. The safe in an adjoining store was also opened the same night and another $100 stolen.

The safe in the Dudley Theatre in Roxbury, Mass., was forced and a considerable amount stolen. The exact amount is uncertain, awaiting an inventory. In connection with this break, Boston police arrested two men. One of these men was wearing a coat from which the price tags had not been removed. Examination showed the fellow had on three coats, all with price tags. The store adjoining the Dudley Theatre had been broken open the same night and the coats were found to be from that store. This is the third time the Dudley Theatre has been robbed within a year. The burglars had an electric drill, which they attached to a light socket and with which the safe was drilled.

Robbers who broke into the Milford Opera House Wednesday, failed in their attempt to open the office safe, which contained over $1,100 in cash, part of the receipts from the preceding holiday. Patrolman James J. Birmingham found the rear door of the theatre open and probably, in entering the theatre, frightened the safe breakers, who fled. The combination and handle of the safe had been broken off, but the door had not been opened.

The Scenic Theatre at Keene, N.H., was badly damaged by two fires, one which broke out Monday, followed by a second serious fire the following morning, caused by the rekindling of the first fire. Damage from the first fire is placed at $15,000, and from the second at about $25,000. Repairs to the theatre are being rushed.

The State Theatre, at Hartford, changed its policy last week. Two features and a stage presentation will be used hereafter.

Robert E. Hall, New York theatre architect, was the speaker before the Engineers Club, at Hartford, Monday, on the subject, "Twenty-Five Years with the Motion Picture Theatre." Mr. Hall is a graduate of Worcester Polytechnic Institute and during his course there was stage manager of the Worcester Theatre.

William D. Ascough has been appointed manager of the new Allyn Theatre, in Hartford.

Sam Messing is manager of the Strand Theatre, South Boston, which has just been opened.

The Wollaston Theatre, an Abe Spitz house, in Quincy, Mass., will inaugurate a summer policy of stock presentations, starting May 2.

R. E. Morris, former manager of the Capitol Theatre, at Somerville, Mass., has been appointed manager of the Strand Theatre at Malden, one of the Publix-Gray Circuit houses. The theatre is presenting a double feature program the first half and a feature and vaudeville program the last half of the week.

Frank Scully, former salesman with United Artists, has resigned to become salesman for First National and will cover the Maine territory.

The Scenic Theatre, at Rochester, N.H., has reopened after undergoing extensive remodelling.

John J. Scully, manager of the Boston Exchange for Educational, and H. F. Noble, manager of the New Haven Exchange for the same distributors, left Boston, April 28, for the West Coast, to attend the convention of Educational, at Hotel Ambassador, Hollywood.

W. T. Weed, of the Town Hall, Freedom, N.H., was a visitor to Boston's Film Row during the week.

Sam Berg, booker at the Fox Exchange, Boston, has returned after being confined to his home for ten days with a septic sore throat.

Officials and members of Producers' Exchange, Boston, tendered a dinner to Harry Kirschgessner, former manager of the Boston exchange, on the eve of his departure to become manager of the New Haven exchange of the same company. The dinner was held at the Moulin Rouge, Boston.

Seattle

LOUIS AMACHER, branch manager of the M.-G.-M. organization in Portland, spent a few days here last week, conferring with Manager Ben Fish, of the Seattle office.

Another visitor on Film Row was Ned Edris, manager of the Pacific Northwest Theatres Company houses in Centralia and Chehalis, who came up to arrange bookings for the coming few weeks, and talk business with the P. N. W. heads in this territory.

The Vogue Theatre, in Kelso, Washington, last week fell victim to thugs, and the Vogue safe was rifled of almost $500. Velvet curtains, torn from the foyer, were used to deaden the sound of the explosion when the safe was blown.

Carl Wallen, cameraman for Paramount News, arrived in Seattle last week and has been working with Manager George P. Endert, of the Paramount Exchange, in establishing local quarters. He will cover the Northwest territory for Paramount.

Ed Hallberg, of the Mack Theatre, in Port Angeles, spent a few days here last week buying new furnishings and equipment for the house, which he plans to remodel and rename the Olympian Theatre. The renovations include a new front, new interior decorating, new drapes and all new projection and stage equipment.

Charles E. Feldman, recently appointed manager of the National Theatre Supply Company's office in Denver, spent several days here last week with Ben F. Shearer, head of the National Company's Interior Decorating Division in the twelve Northwestern States. Western Nebraska has recently been added to Mr. Shearer's territory.

Howard Sheehan, Western district manager for the Fox organization, arrived in Seattle this week and spent a few days with Manager M. Ballantine.

H. E. Ulsh, former owner of the Mission Theatre in Georgetown, who disposed of his interests in that house a few weeks ago, last week announced that he has acquired the control of the Ellensberg Theatre, at Ellensberg, Washington. He was scheduled to take possession of the house before the latter part of April.

Harry C. Arthur, Jr., president and general manager of the Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., was expected to return to his office in this city about the first of May, according to advice received here this week. His return was being looked forward to with interest by local exhibitors, as his Eastern trip has been for the purpose of discussing the proposed West Coast - North American - Pacific Northwest combine.

Word received on Film Row last week indicated that T. C. McElroy, of the Rex Theatre, in Vale, Oregon, well known by many of the local sales representatives, has been confined to his bed recently, following a serious operation, performed a few weeks ago.

Albany

OSCAR PERRIN, manager of the Capitol Theatre, in Albany, N.Y., and one of the old-time showmen of the state, had twelve men, constituting the jury in a murder trial, as his guests at the theatre one night last week. A section of the theatre was set apart for the jury and no one else was allowed to sit within two rows of the men, who were accompanied by deputies.

Mrs. H. C. Bissell, wife of a former manager of the Universal Exchange in Albany, has her pet canary as the result of heroism on the part of one of Albany's firemen. A fire originated at 4:30 o'clock one morning last week in the building in which the Bissell apartment is located. Mrs. Bissell reached the street in safety and then remembered that her canary had been left behind. A fireman made his way to the apartment and brought out the bird.

The Belmore Theatre, 112th Street and Third Avenue, has been closed for an indefinite period.

Sympathy is extended to Will Francis, of the Pathe booking department. His mother died April 25.

Henry Siegel, manager of Federated Theatres, Inc., is reported as having taken over from Rosenzweig & Katz, the Culver, Beverly and Leader theatres, all three located in Brooklyn.

Herman Gordon, owner of the Hub Theatre, Bronx, has added the Echo Theatre, Bushwick Avenue, Brooklyn, to his holdings. Mr. Gordon recently disposed of his house at Roselle, N.J.

H. Black, former independent exchange owner in the days of '14 and '15, has recently acquired the Auditorium Theatre at Highland, N.J., according to report.

It is said that Westwood, N.J., will soon have a new 1,200-seat theatre, although at the present time those in back of the project are not named.

Ben Schwartz is now with the Merit Film Corporation.

The Clifton Theatre held its opening April 18.

It is reported that Messrs. Bratter & Pollack are contemplating construction of the theatres in Hillside, N.J., Nyack, N. Y., and Lyndhurst, N.J.

Lou Ganz, general manager of the Julius Joelson Circuit, has resigned that position and will in the future assist Lawrence Bolognino with the management of the Consolidated Amusement Company of New York.

It is rumored that Julius Joelson will take over the new theatre being built by Charles O'Reilly at University and Tremont avenues, New York City.

Lee Ochs will close his Costello Theatre on May 1 in order to allow for extensive alterations and improved equipment. New seats and a new organ are among the items of equipment.

Joe Hornstein, of National Supply, has recently returned from a Sunday visit to Atlantic City. Sales reported recently from National Supply include a new screen for Grove & Knoble's Valentine; twenty Simplex machines for the General Electric, Schenectady, and a Kilgen organ for Jack Steinman's new house, at 183rd Street and Webster Avenue.

Archie Adlman, a resident of Brooklyn, N.Y., was recently appointed Relief Manager for the Loew Circuit in Greater New York.

[illegible] Adlman has been connected with various theatrical productions for over twenty years.

During his managership in Brooklyn he became one of the outstanding men on the circuit.

Mr. Adlman was transferred as manager of Loew's Kameo to the managership of the Bedford Theatre. The theatre, run-down, had to be entirely reconditioned. Finally, after many months of untiring efforts, the theatre was finished and under the management of Archie Adlman, the house again became prosperous.

It is said that Adlman will be transferred to one of Loew's new million-dollar theatres in Greater New York or vicinity as soon as it is completed.

As the result of the recent "Get-Together" movement on the part of the salesmen and their sales executives, it has gone so far that their cordial relations have even extended to sharing quarters in the same garage—the Admiral, in 50th Street.

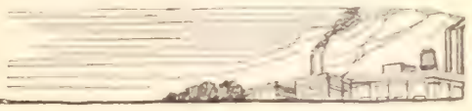
Following his usual custom at Easter time, Edward Carroll, well-known to all Jerseyites, has acquired his brown chapeau.

New theatre projects are said to be under way at Four Corners and West New Brighton, Staten Island.

Henry Huber, formerly with the Yoost Theatre Circuit, is now booking for the Steiner & Blinderman Circuit.

The new theatre building at 57th Street and First Avenue is owned by Max Kramer, according to report.

It is reported that the Seventy-second Street Playhouse is about to change ownership. The prospective buyer is unnamed at present.



It is reported that the Fifty-fifth Street Art Cinema will open on May 1. The seating capacity will be about 300.

The Duncan Theatre, Montgomery Street, Jersey City, opened last week.

A new house, called the Mutual Benefit Theatre, located on Bloomfield Avenue, Newark, will open May 1.

Indianapolis

THE meeting of the Indiana Endorsers of Photoplays here last week was the outstanding event in Indianapolis movie circles. Miss Bertha Smith, Terre Haute, was elected president of the association, succeeding Mrs. Ferd Lucas, of Greencastle.

Mrs. David Ross, of Indianapolis, long active in the educational and civic field, was re-elected president of the National Endorsers. The national and state conventions were held jointly. Mrs. Ross is president of the Indianapolis body and founded the organization.

Other national officers are: Mrs. Charles A. Carlisle, of South Bend, Ind.; Mrs. Jennie Crabb, Salt Lake City, Utah; Mrs. Edna Hatfield Edmonson, Bloomington, Ind; vice-presidents; Miss Anna Reade, Indianapolis, recording; Mrs. Mabel M. Dietz, Indianapolis, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. J. H. Orndorff, Indianapolis, treasurer.

"The Truth about Hollywood" was the topic of Carl Milliken, secretary of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. The question of pictures as an educational and religious factor in church and school was discussed by the convention.

Other State officers are: Mrs. H. T. Stephenson, Bloomington, and Mrs. Earl Peters, Fort Wayne, vice-presidents; Mrs. Leon Sterne, Terre Haute, recording secretary; Mrs. Bloomfield Moore, corresponding secretary and Mrs. O. C. Lukenbill, Indianapolis, treasurer.

Pat Heavy, of Terre Haute, manager of the Hippodrome and Liberty houses there, left this week for Saginaw, Michigan, to become manager of the Regent Theatre, one of the largest houses in that city.

Some Practical Considerations of the High Intensity Arc

Part I

IN looking back at the progress that has been made in the matter of screen illumination, the writer is often led to wonder what the final outcome will be if the race for still higher intensities of illumination goes on as it has in the past decade; assuming, indeed, that the outcome will even be final in any sense of the word.

The remarkable numerical growth of the so-called "super-house" with its proportionately long projection distance has provided still another incentive for the searchers of methods for obtaining higher levels of film illumination, since the comparatively high intensities so easily obtained in smaller houses employing the reflector arc system makes the "super-house" men scratch their heads to find ways and means for obtaining a comparable screen illumination on their greater throws.

The largest size of light source now used in motion picture projection is of 150 amperes capacity, a 16 mm. carbon being used for the positive. Now the crater of a 16 mm. high intensity electrode by no means represents the maximum size which can be employed—considered from the standpoint of maximum illumination with this type of source.

Some projectionists, in the absence of a larger positive, are attempting to obtain greater screen intensities by forcing the carbons at still greater current densities, thinking, thereby, to obtain an even greater "high intensity effect" and, consequently, more screen light. Where this practice of overleading the carbons is carried too far the result invariably is a "dark" screen, in spite of the ease with which this type of lamp reestablishes its arc.

In view of the wide difference in brightness between the old style of arc and the high intensity type, it is surprising to learn that quite a few projectionists are confusing the capabilities and limits of these two radically different sources of light.

The satisfactory operation of the mirror arc, under certain favorable conditions, on projection distances which ordinarily are considered to lie within the field covered by the high intensity lamp naturally leads to the belief that the two projectors are really on a competitive basis with each other.

Nothing could be farther from the truth.

Comparison of Brightness

The sources of light, now used for projection purposes, represent the survival of the fittest in a race for brightness, which has been run since the time when pine knots were first used as illuminants.

The entire history of illumination centers around this factor of brightness and in the case of projection where it is desired to illuminate objects at great distances from the source, scientists and inventors have constantly striven to devise sources of higher and yet higher brightness, for it was early recognized that upon this factor rested the ultimate success of their efforts to evolve powerful projectors.

The importance of raising the brightness of the light source is recognized when it is known that the intensity of illumination on a motion picture screen varies directly as the brightness of the source so that with any given system if one source is twice as bright as another, it will, other things being equal, provide twice the illumination.

It seems as though this simple fact was being overlooked by some people.

It is rather commonly known that the crater brightness of an ordinary low intensity arc is in the general neighborhood of 100,000 candlepower per square inch and it has been recently established that the brightness of the incandescent ball of gas which constitutes the source of light in the high intensity arc ranges from roughly, 193,000 candlepower per square inch for that portion of the gas ball near the crater rim to more than 580,000 candlepower per square inch for that portion of the gas ball at the centre of the crater.

A fair average for the brightness of the entire gas ball is accepted as being about 300,000 candlepower per square inch so that we find the high intensity are to be three times as bright as the old style low intensity arc.

Substituting One Source for Another

Now, if it were possible, with any given optic system, to make a simple substitution of the high intensity arc for the old type of arc, we would find—providing the crater size were the same in each case—that the screen illumination would be increased to approximately three times its former value, due to the difference in brightness between the two types of sources.

This one item of brightness alone should be enough to dispel any hope concerning the ability of the reflector arc to cope with the high intensity, since a handicap of three to one is not to be lightly considered in this matter of projection.

In case there is some doubt on this point, however, we would like to give comparative test figures on the total maximum lumen output for the reflector arc and the various sizes of high intensity lamp.

Source	Approx. total Lumens
25 ampere reflector arc	2500
75 ampere high intensity arc	2700
150 ampere high intensity arc	6000

A casual inspection of the above table would lead one to think that the reflector are was practically as effective as the 75 ampere H. I. lamp for purposes of screen illumination as the difference between the two is only 200 lumens, a difference of less than 10 per cent. But it should be remembered that the light from the reflector arc appears yellow when compared with the light from a properly operated high intensity lamp and for this reason the visual difference between half sections of the same screen when illuminated by both sources is quite marked so that the last named source would have the double advantage of higher screen illumination and higher apparent brightness.

If this is true of the 75 ampere size of lamp, it is even more so in the case of the 125 ampere lamp where the output is double that of the reflector arc and the visual difference in color brightness would be proportionately greater.

Result of Improper Operation

In the light of this any claims for the reflector arc's equality with any of the commonly used sizes of high intensity lamp are de trop and are not to be seriously considered except under very special conditions where one lamp has a marked advantage over the other.

It is quite true that reflector arcs have been placed alongside a high intensity lamp and, no doubt, have provided as good, if not better, screen illumination, but wherever the outcomes of such tests favored the reflector arc, you can safely wager that the person in charge of operating the high intensity lamp had considerable to learn concerning its proper operation.

High Intensity Lamp Critical

The high intensity lamp is not exactly an easy thing to operate if maximum results are to be obtained, although many projectionists look upon it as being a relatively simple device to handle, since the lamp is made as fool-proof as is possible to do so.

Thus, the axis of the positive carbon is fixed so as to obtain favorable positioning of the crater toward the condenser, the negative carbon is locked in position as regards its angle with the axis of the positive carbon so as to depress the negative at an angle of 60 degrees from the positive axis. An automatic feed is an essential part of each lamp to insure proper feeding and rotation of the positive carbon.

It all comes back to screen quality

The impression your theatre conveys, the reputation it enjoys, the day-to-day patronage it attracts —whatever phase of the business you consider, it all comes back in large measure to the screening quality of the pictures you show.

Specify prints on Eastman film —the medium that first made movies practical, that has been known from the infancy of the industry for its never-failing screen superiority.

In spite of these precautions it is possible for a careless or ignorant projectionist to "gum up the works" by careless trimming of the carbons or by running them under the current required for that particular size.

It is essential to proper operation of the lamp that the intersection of the negative axis with the plane of the crater be carefully watched as a difference of four millimeters one way or the other, from the correct position, will mean a loss of approximately 30 per cent in screen illumination. Tests have shown the correct intersection point to be exactly six millimeters above the center of the crater.

As regards the operation of the positive carbon at the proper current density, we would like to point out that a 13.6 mm. positive, which normally will deliver 5,000 lumens to the screen when operated at 125 amperes, will only deliver 4,000 lumens if run at 110 amperes, 3,000 lumens if run at 75 amperes, and only 1,800 lumens if run at 50 amperes.

This shows the sensitiveness of the electrode to variations in current density.

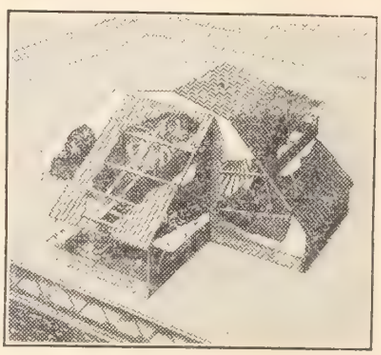
Equipment Field Active, Reports Typhoon Fan

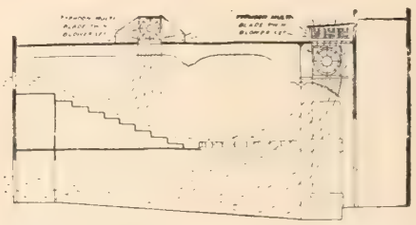
Reports recently received from the Typhoon Fan Company state that an increased volume of business is enjoyed thus far in 1927. This company ascribes this better business condition to the employment of sound engineering and economical principles in the manufacture of their product. The reputation that their product has and the continued prosperous condition of the theatre equipment field.

Starting in business nearly twenty years ago, the Typhoon Company can be considered a pioneer in this field, keeping in close touch with cooling and ventilating problems and steadily improving their product year by year.

The Adams Theatre, Newark, N. Y., is a recent house to place an order for a Typhoon ventilating system in preparation for the coming summer business.



Can't Pass Phony Tickets With This Register



The Automatic Ticket Register Corp. has announced the adoption of a new invention for their Gold Seal ticket registers which is of interest to the entire industry.

This invention—the "Cancellograph"—perforates each ticket as it is issued with a ribbed line of raised dots. This mark is scarcely visible on the face, but is instantly "feelable" on the back. The doorman can tell instantly whether a ticket has been properly issued through the register; for the ribbed line appears only on valid tickets.

The "Cancellograph" was developed by the engineering department of the Automatic Ticket Register Corp. to supply this final safeguard. It has met with wide approval. The Capitol Theatre, New York City, is among the many large houses now using the new model.

The "Cancellograph" attachment is obtainable only with Model 28 Gold Seal registers. Full information concerning the "Cancellographed" tickets may be obtained from the Automatic Ticket Register Corp., 723 Seventh Ave., New York City.

Granada One of Buffalo's Most Attractive Suburban Houses

THE new Granada Theatre, the latest link in the Schine Theatrical Corporation chain, opened on Washington's birthday. This new house, with a seating capacity of 1,700, is in Spanish design and decidedly attractive to the eye from every angle. Elmer C. Winegar is the manager of the house. Mr. Winegar is a veteran Buffalo exhibitor who has had experience in both the exchange and exhibitor end of the business and who for several years was engaged in industrial film making. He recently opened the new Riverside for the Schine Corporation where business now is reported good.

Attractive Entrance

The Ganada is located at Main Street and West Northrup Place. The theatre was erected by the Hager-Askey Construction Company. There is a spacious porte cochere surmounted by a large upright sign, bearing the name Granada. Electric attraction signs are on the sides and front of the marquee. There is a lobby of spacious dimensions, with beautiful carved frames placed in the gold sidewalls. There is a beautiful, colored, inlaid flooring in the lobby, resembling an Oriental rug. The box office is at the right going in. Massive oak doors swing from the lobby into the promenade, which is decorated with Spanish hangings, rugs, furniture and lighting effects.

The seats of red leather are wide and comfortable and they are all on one floor. The sidewalls of gold and tan with small Spanish balconies built in, with bright colored hangings over the windows illuminated from behind. The walls are finished in the rough, giving a stucco-like appearance that is very artistic. There is a good sized stage and the orchestra pit accommodates 18 musicians. John Gunderman, Jr., will play the Wurlitzer organ. The booth, which is located at the rear of the house over the promenade, will have two of the latest type Simplex machines and other up-to-date equipment. Bacon & Lurkey, 997 Main Street, were the architects. Mitchell & Parker, 280 Delaware Avenue, did the remarkable plaster effects and the rest of the interior decoration.

Many Conveniences

There are men's and women's retiring rooms, smoking lounges and other conveniences for patrons. The Granada is one of Buffalo's most attractive community houses. Mr. Winegar announces that the Schine Company has acquired a new theatre now being erected in Lackawanna, N.Y., and that this corporation soon will open other theatres in Buffalo.

St. Paul Operator Brings Suit Against Union

Frank St. John, motion picture operator, is suing the St. Paul, Minn., motion picture theatre operators union for $5,175. He charges conspiracy to withold a union card from him. St. John has been working under a temporary permit at the Hamline Theatre in St. Paul, and was replaced by a union member with a regular card. The union claimed that it has refused a card to St. John because he has failed to pass the necessary examinations, and St. John contends that he has been consistently refused membership although fully qualified. As a result of the union's action in replacing him at the Hamline Theatre, he says that it will be hard for him to get a job in any other unionized town, and especially hard for him to make a living because he is handicapped by the loss of one leg. A good deal of interest is being shown in the case in the Twin Cities.

Minusa Issues Descriptive Folder of Factory

Believing that most exhibitors are keenly interested in the qualities of their screens and that a folder descriptive of the interior of a cine screen plant would do much to explain the workings of a modern factory devoted to the manufacture of such product, The Minusa Screen Company, of St. Louis, has produced a four-page booklet illustrating its various departments. Those who may wish to obtain a copy can do so by writing the Minusa Cine Screen Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"White Gold"—Producers Distributing Corporation, Roxy Theatre, New York City

American: "Undoubtedly will find itself on list of ten best pictures for 1927, so don't miss it. It is, in its gripping realism, a slice from life itself, a picture whose directing, acting and photography all contribute highly to its recommendation. Jetta Goudal gives the best performance of her career. Director Howard has invested tale with colorful, gripping romanticism which must be seen to be appreciated."

Times: "In simplicity there is strength, at least, so far as photo-dramas are concerned. This assertion gains weight in 'White Gold.' But for some repetitions, a few accentuated actions and instances of forced comedy, would be one of really great productions."

Mirror: "Is profound, pulsating drama animated from life through emotions and not through lavishness of background. Simplicity personified, humanly climaxing from emotional sympathy to emotional distrust and hatred. It is one of finest pictures ever turned out by American director. You will thoroughly enjoy 'White Gold.'"

Herald-Tribune: "Opens with honestly dramatic situation and moves austerely to conclusion with all sincerity, all logic of first-rate tragedy. Result is that it is moving, honest and completely absorbing photoplay. Director Howard has been resolutely honest in his theme. So admirable is this director's feeling for honesty that 'White Gold' becomes one of absorbing pictures of year."

Morning Telegraph: "Superfine. Well-nigh perfect short story. Sort of thing DeMaupassant would have done had he been familiar with possible locale. It is the sort of thing Eugene O'Neill has done. In short, tense sentences, one syllable words and deadly calm of everyday language, Howard tells tragic, gripping tale that builds bit by bit to inevitable and inexorable climax. Picture is masterly in originality of thought, treatment and interpretation."

Morning World: "Howard has done some good directing. An interesting use of shadows is noteworthy, reflecting some dramatic phase for an instant in the vague, grotesque exaggeration that shadows make for. Acting exceptionally fine; Jetta Goudal bringing restrained and intelligent rendering of misplaced dancer."

Journal: "Howard joins this column's list of outstanding megaphone manipulators. Has done some wonderful work in this picture. Understands characterization."

Eve. World: "Best picture Roxy has given since opening of his cathedral, and one of best that has come to New York at popular prices for many months. A good picture, with well-drawn plot, with exceptional acting.

Sun: "Moments of dramatic power are attained; realistic depiction of impossible triangular situation on lonely Arizona sheep ranch. Is worth attending. Heat, frayed nerves, monotony, and sheep, endless flocks of sheep, are motifs."

Eve. Post: "Mr. Howard, with aid of Miss Goudal, few sheep and sundry backdrops with clouds painted on them, has turned out a picture far more real, more intelligent, more interesting than most of those staggering outdoor epics filmed at great expense amid authentic scenery."

Evening American: "'White Gold,' a poignant bit of good drama. When the year is over and summary of pictures is made, this film will rank almost as high as 'Hell Bent fer Heaven.'"

"White Gold"—Producers Distributing Corporation, Hollywood

N. Y. Mirror: "A marvelous picture, splendidly acted by every principal and grippingly narrated by Director William Howard. Aside from the beautifully developed story, we were swept to admiration by Jetta Goudal's performance. She is superb. 'White Gold' overrides standardized box-office requirements to the very end, closing, as it does, logically but unhappily. Our advice is: Don't miss it."

Screenland: "To William K. Howard belongs the credit for this masterly piece of direction, worthy of the most superlative language. Jetta Goudal's performance ranks among the finest of the year. This is one of the best pictures of the month."

Photoplay: "So grippingly has William K. Howard directed his players that you feel they are concerned in a story with as much suspense as a serial and with the cumulative effect of a finely-wrought novel. The ending is grimly honest. It leaves you gasping, because it is truth, not hokum. Superb as the acting is, you feel that the director is the real star of 'White Gold.'"

"Slide, Kelly, Slide"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, State Theatre, Chicago

Examiner: "Passed the censorial eye of five hundred of America's severest critics last night with flying colors. Sports writers, baseball experts, sitting side by side with the Chicago Cubs, responded to every big moment with sympathy and interested appreciation. These veterans of the pen and heroes of the baseball diamond are not the only ones who will throw their new spring bonnets in the ring for 'Slide, Kelly, Slide.' It is everybody's picture."

Record: "If you are fond of your baseball don't miss the State. A home-run with the bases full in the last inning. That is the way 'Slide, Kelly, Slide' will hit you. If you don't know Babe Ruth from Bill Tilden you can enjoy the picture every minute of the route. It is good, all-around movie entertainment. Director Edward Sedgwick knew his racket when they gave him a baseball picture to direct. He stepped out and got 'smart help.'"

Herald: "'Slide, Kelly, Slide' is made to play straight into the grandstand of the great American public's favor."

'Wolf's Clothing," Warner Bros., Roxy Theatre, New York City

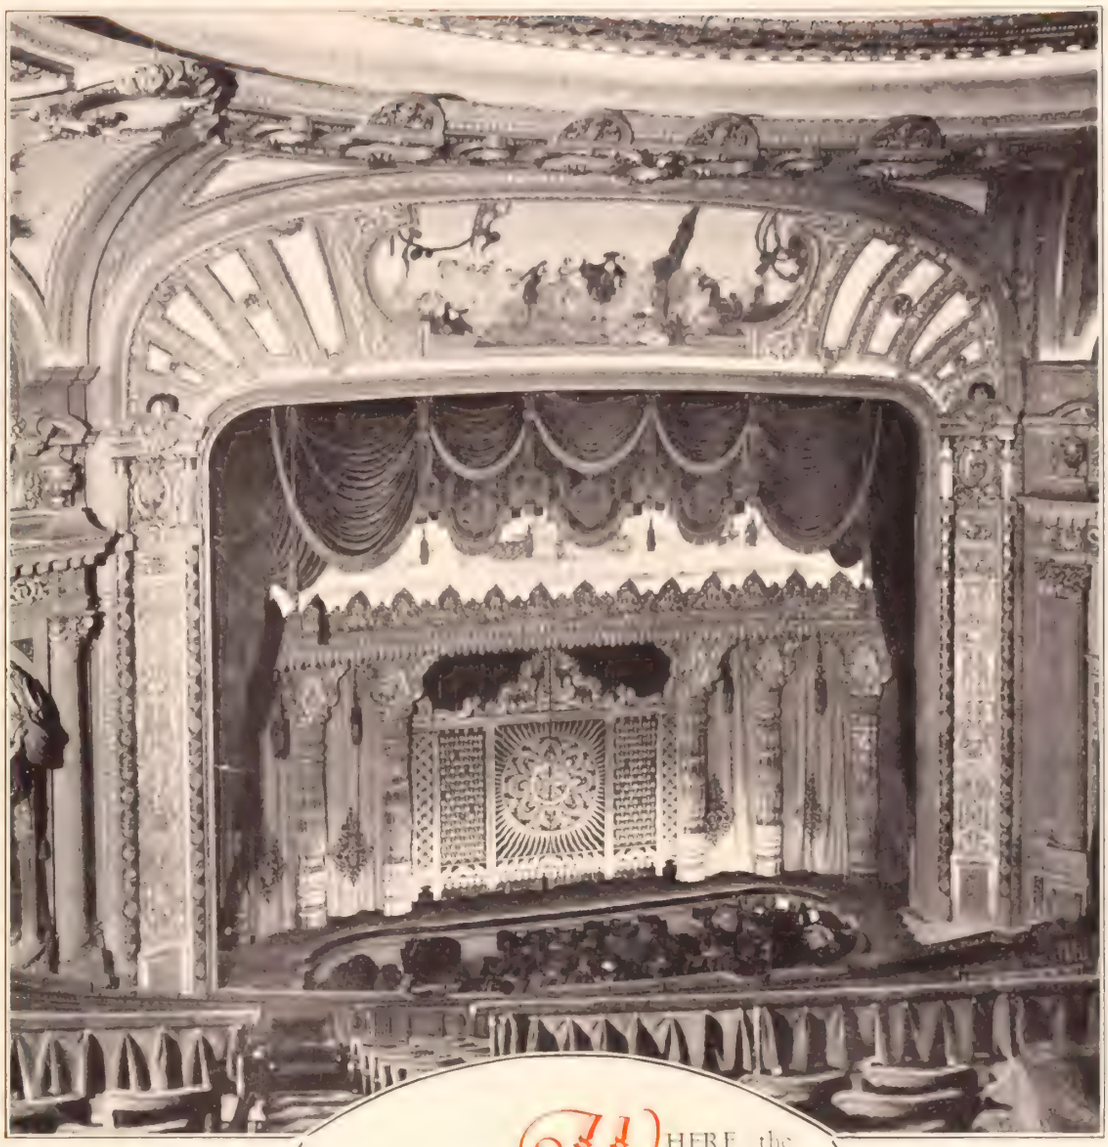
Daily News: "As happy a choice in cinema fare as Roxy could have made for his magnificent new theatre's second screen presentation. Not only is this in itself a remarkable movie. Everybody who has a sense of humor should see it."

Times: "Rollicking comedy. Expertly filmed, the director having taken full advantage of the flexibility of the camera. Mr. Blue does some very clever work in this farcical affair."

Telegraph: "Enough action crammed into the whirling story to keep a couple of three ring circuses busy. Is all wool and a yard broad entertainment."

Graphic: "Crowded with gorgeous hokum, exciting incongruities and several long laughs. Best picture Monte Blue has ever made."

Telegram: "It is unusual. Whole thing is admirably contrived and well acted throughout."



Sun: "An entertaining burlesque melodrama. There are gorgeous touches of satirical slapstick comedy."

Morning World: "This picture comes the closest to giving the actual mood of feverish mental chaos of any we have seen since 'The Last Laugh.' It was all a dream but whatever your prejudices against this particular form of solution may be, you'll probably admit that this dream was a pretty good one."

Mirror: "What could be more stimulating than a good old-fashioned thriller with plenty of suspense? Mr. Blue proves highly satisfactory. The rest of this numerous cast do all necessary to make success which it would appear 'Wolf's Clothing' is to enjoy."

Post: "Good old-fashioned thrills. Camera manipulations are well done throughout."

PARAMOUNT'S 100% PROGRAM

AGAIN this season exhibitors have awarded the verdict of leadership to Paramount.

Consistent supply of quality product that clicked at the box office week after week won the crown.

Successes like "It," "We're in the Navy Now," "Quarterback," "Campus Flirt," "Variety," "Knockout Reilly," "Children of Divorce," "Kid Boots," "Aloma," "Padlocked," "Tin Gods," "Stranded in Paris"—to name a few.

Stars like Harold Lloyd (releasing through Paramount) Clara Bow, Richard Dix, Beery and Hatton, Bebe Daniels, Cantor, Menjou, Meighan, Ralston, Negri, Vidor, Griffith and the rest.

New ideas, smart showmanship, a policy of fair dealing with exhibitors, national advertising reaching 17,000,000 people weekly—as always, big points in Paramount's supremacy.

Not a leadership built for a year, but for always. Not just a brand name for product, but a great institution known and respected throughout the world.

NOW, embarking on the 1927-8 season, Paramount offers new proofs of leadership. Inexhaustible supply of the best pictures for the new year—78 of them! The pages following tell the story.

And more! Now Paramount offers The Whole Show! Not only features, but Paramount News, bound to be second to none in the news reel field; Christie Comedies and comedies from other producers that assure you the same quantity and quality in shorts that you get in Paramount features. 208 short feature releases!

The mammoth Paramount studios, comprising 50 buildings and 26 acres, are teeming with activity. 100 stars, featured and stock company artists, 40 production chiefs and directors, 50 writers enrolled under the Paramount banner.

This vast strength of resources and personnel will make new screen history.

In 1927-8, more than ever PARAMOUNT—THE BACKBONE OF THE BUSINESS!

That's the thing to keep in mind in buying new product.

This announcement, being made in part in advance of production of the photoplays announced, is necessarily based upon present plans and must not be considered part of any written contract licensing the exhibition of the photoplays.

Clarence Badger production

BOX office, get set for a stampede! Clara's on her way with another load of dimpled dynamite by the author and director of "It." Yes, Clara's hair is really red and she acts in this picture like only teasing, tantalizing, tempestuous, red headed gals can! You'd sooner miss a week of meals than this one.

"Her Cardboard Lover"

AFTER "The Quarterback" and "Knockout Reilly," Richard Dix stands at the very top as a drawing attraction. His is the handsome, aggressive he-man type of personality that all classes admire. For the 100% Group, Dix will make four pictures, including the release listed below. They will be up to the standard of the biggest Dix pictures of the past.

JESSE JAMES

THE greatest Western star of them all, together with his famous horse Silver King, is to release through Paramount.

Now Fred Thomson will make the big, lavish special he has always wanted to film—a mighty action melodrama based upon the life of the most romantic outlaw in history. The real Jesse James—a handsome, daring, attractive young man forced into banditry by wrongs and treachery, and astounding a nation by his deeds. Directed by Lloyd Ingraham. Story by Frank Emmett Clifton.

To be followed by Another Special

"DAVY CROCKETT"

BASED upon the inspiring career of the brave pioneer and soldier of fortune who, almost single handed, brought Texas her freedom. "Remember the Alamo!"

The splendid Fred Thomson organization that has made his name resound at box offices everywhere will be kept intact for these great specials.

And Two Smashing ACTION THRILLERS

WORLD'S BEST SELLING BOOK — A STAGE HIT — NOW A PICTURE!

"GENTLEMEN PREFER BLONDES"

FROM the novel by Anita Loos and the play by Miss Loos and John Emerson. The fame of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" has swept all over the world. In every language they've read by the millions of lovely Lorelei, the lady with the innocent eyes and the heart of ice, and her brunette pal, Dorothy, and her "educator," Mr. Eisman, the Button King. Now they're coming to the screen!

THE real story of the gangsters and their warfare on society told at last! By Ben Hecht, famous novelist. Hector Turnbull production. Directed by Josef von Sternberg. It's finished. B. P. Schulberg, Associate Producer.

WALLACE BEERY

"IN" "THE BIG SNEEZE"

WITH Ford Sterling and ZaSu Pitts. James Cruze Production. Based upon Florenz Ziegfeld's comedy smash, "Louis XIV." Adapted by Tom Geraghty and Frank Condon. As big and funny as "Behind the Front!" Beery as Army K. P. and Alpine Guide.

A SMASHING SPECIAL

Written by 500,000 Motion Picture Fans

THE Big Exploitation Picture for 1927-8. Backed by million dollar publicity and advertising. The winning idea in the Photoplay Magazine Idea Contest produced as a Paramount Special. Title soon.

THEY'LL LEARN ABOUT "IT" FROM HER!

Elinor Glyn's "MAKE THEM LOVE YOU"

THE author of "It" will tell women how to make themselves irresistible in this intimate exposé of the secrets of love and beauty. Hollywood's most captivating girls will glorify the cast. A famous director will be announced, along with a nation wide advertising stunt.

BEBE breezes in with another WINNER!

BEBE DANIELS

in "Miss Jockey"

YOU know Bebe. She's the one comedienne on the screen with "it." In "Miss Jockey" she's a madcap miss whose cradle was a saddle. How she takes the men and horses over the jumps! And wins the big race to save the lad she loves—and how! Gowns? Sure. From the famous play by Rene Fauchois.

A Paramount Picture

Coming:

"SWIM, GIRL, SWIM!"

(tentative title)

WHEN Bebe in her nifty one-piece swims the Channel, they'll all be there to see! This one is in the box before the camera starts to turn. It will be Bebe's first for the 1927-8 group. Destined to set new Daniels' highs, topping even "The Campus Flirt."

And 3 more to be announced

"CHANG"
PRODUCED BY MERIAN COOPER
AND
ERNEST SCHOEDSACK
GIANT melodrama of the wild. The picture many famous critics have proclaimed the supreme achievement of the screen! Now starting long run at the Rivoli, Broadway, at advanced prices. A mighty drama of love, fun and thrills beyond imagination, with man's eternal battle against the wilderness as the central theme. "Chang" is cyclonic!

in

"SERVICE FOR LADIES"

Waiter by day, wooer of heiresses by night—and a joy to watch at either! Story by Ernest Vajda. Screen play by Benjamin Glazer. Directed by H. D'Abbabie D'Arrast.

"WITH THEIR EYES OPEN"

From I.A.R. Wylie's poignant Saturday Evening Post serial. The drama of a bold gentleman-trickster who conquers everything but the daring woman who marries him.

"THE BEAUTY DOCTOR"

Menjou as society's favorite professor of pulchritude! See Dr. Menjou, girls!

BEAU SABREUR

THE SEQUEL TO "BEAU GESTE"

A William Wellman production

THE man who made the mighty "Wings" will produce the companion piece to "Beau Geste." A rousing, colorful melodrama of the French Foreign Legion—but flavored with a flaming love story between a beautiful American girl and a dashing Legion officer. Roaring comedy from a pair of American roughnecks masquerading as real Arab sheiks. Cast now includes George Bancroft, Gary Cooper, with important additions coming.

A Paramount Picture

AT LAST tempestuous Pola comes into her own! All previous Negri dramas pale beside "Barbed Wire", by the author of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" and "The Christian". The piercing story of a woman who hated a man so fiercely that she gave up father, home and country to love him!

NOW this GREAT CLASSIC is available again!

"THE COVERED WAGON"

GREAT pictures are not made for a day or for a year; they live for all times. "The Covered Wagon" remains one of the two or three outstanding classics of the screen, if not THE outstanding classic. It is as strong a box-office attraction today as it was the week it was released.

For nearly two years the picture has been withdrawn from circulation. New audiences have been created for it. Thousands who never saw this mighty epic of America's making are eager to see it; thousands more will welcome the opportunity to see it again.

IN answer to a real demand from exhibitors and the public, Paramount will make "The Covered Wagon" available again in the 1927-8 season. Fresh prints and advertising material will be on hand.

The past year has shown what happens when truly great pictures are judiciously re-issued. Box-office records topple! There isn't a theatre anywhere, large or small, that can't make a handsome profit out of an engagement of "The Covered Wagon," whether they've played it before or not.

Smart showmen are getting ready for a clean-up!

From the novel by Emerson Hough. Screen play by Jack Cunningham.

"STARK LOVE"

Straight from its New York run!

THREE weeks on Broadway to packed, spell-bound audiences. Produced by Karl Brown in America's sole remaining wilderness—the great Smoky Mountains of Carolina. Where man, the master, holds woman a slave. Every foot of it TRUE. Stark, astounding realism.

Out of the Chinese Storm Center shrieks this Mighty Melodrama!

"Shanghai Bound"

TIMELY as tomorrow's screaming newspaper headlines. A story laid amid the turmoil and terrorism of the present titanic conflict in the Orient.

The hero is the uncrowned white king of the Chinese river pirates. Gambler, derelict, daring, ruthless, he leads his cutthroats into the fray. Only to have the past he strives to forget hurled back at him by the lovely American girl who falls his prey.

A tremendous super-production for which a well known director and cast of stars will be announced soon.

"THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM"
HIGGINS

The program of Short Features herewith offered to showmen for the season 1927-1928 is a program from which all guess work has been eliminated. It is a group of pictures without an element of gamble — backed by seven years of specialized experience — a product of proven value.

Educational Pictures are not merely a promise. Their merit is already an established asset for the exhibitors who play them and exploit them. Through their consistent highest quality and the service that backs them up, they have always made money for these exhibitors. This alone could explain the unprecedented growth in the number of theatres playing them, which has steadily increased year by year until Educational Pictures are now being shown in 13,000 theatres.

Educational Pictures have been the only Short Features supported by consistent national advertising. They'll continue to have this advertising support. They'll continue to have every other possible backing to make them more valuable to you. They'll continue to make money for you. And they'll continue to dominate the Short Features field.

Has the Day of Miracles Returned?

You are being given considerable advice on news reels.

You are promised that product yet to be made, and still to be tried, will be better than anything the world has yet seen.

You are told that you will "be stung" if you renew your contracts for the pioneer news reel, the one that is the best known motion picture in the world, that has the most box office value, that is the best liked, and that today represents the unremitting toil of sixteen years, and the expenditure of vast sums of money.

Do you agree with this? If so, then the day of miracles has returned.

It is much easier to make rash claims than it is to make the world's best news reel.

Pathe assures exhibitors that its just pride in the record and prestige of the Pathe News is a guarantee that it will continue to be the best made, and even better than ever.

"Creatures of Celluloid"

Observations on High Hats and High Production Costs

By William A. Johnston

Hollywood, April 27

I certainly didn't come out here to add more bromides to the well worn subject of "what's wrong with the movies?"

Nevertheless here are a few thoughts that won't stay bottled up.

One fault is Hollywood itself. If a more provincial place than this exists anywhere in the wide world, it should be written about as a social curiosity. Of course, I refer to the Hollywood picture colony.

The sun rises and sets upon this small domain.

If a picture has a first run here each player in it goes peacefully to rest that night, supinely happy in the belief that all the world has gazed upon it. If the picture doesn't open here the producing company responsible for it is rated very low in the film catalogue. Actually, it is imperative that any company must, somehow or other, have Los Angeles first runs if the respect of the professional is to be had and held.

Just so with publicity. If the Los Angeles newspapers give it then this publicity covers the world. And that's that!

ONE recalls vaguely, after a while, the balance of the forty-eight states of the Union and such towns here and there as New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, even St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, New Orleans, Boston, Baltimore—why, to be sure, there are one hundred and twenty millions of people in the U. S. besides the lone million here, inclusive of the Iowans.

Oh, yes, and there's Europe, and Australia; Japan; Canada; South Africa—the American motion picture covers the world.

"Don't they know," I asked, "that the foreign sales make forty percent of the picture's gross income? Their salaries, of course, are paid out of this gross."

"Don't be ridiculous." was the answer.

For the benefit of the stray Easterner who goes to a Hollywood party I give this advice: when the picture folks calmly turn their backs to you or talk over your head for hours, don't put it down as ill-breeding.

They are simply acting for your benefit. You are the audience. Everybody is an audience. You are surely a picture fan, or a writer for the fans. Otherwise, why should you be there?

Don't feel small on these occasions. The President of the country would get quite the same treatment. Possibly the Prince of Wales would attract momentary attention—only momentary. All the world, high and low, is an audience only.

HOLLYWOOD'S attitude toward the small outside world is altogether too naive to worry about. In a way, it is good for pictures. If people are so immersed in their work and in themselves as to be mentally astigmatic—to an extraordinary degree—it augurs,—well, that they are deeply immersed in their work. As they should be.

When an intelligent person goes in for creative work and keeps furiously at it there is developed a one lunged, high geared species of emotionalism which is leniently styled temperament and more harshly called egomania. I say this in all truth and kindness. The ability to make people laugh and cry has a reactionary influence; mostly it takes the form of crying.

The less intelligent creative workers observe how the more intelligent act and copy their didoes.

Summary of Next Week's Article

THE concluding article in William A. Johnston's production survey, written from Hollywood, will appear in next week's issue, and will discuss these topics:

¶ At the Warner Studios an important innovation in production is under way.

¶ "The Jazz Singer" to be made throughout with Vitaphone accompaniment, instrumental melodies, vocal and other sound effects.

¶ The possibilities are very great; and the whole industry will watch with intense interest.

¶ Paramount, too, is experimenting with sound effects. The droning of the airplanes in "Wings" will be heard.

¶ The motion picture is in its great inventive age. Showing again, that it won't stay in a fixed groove or under the brain control of a few.

¶ Joseph P. Kennedy going right ahead with expansion plans for F.B.O., corraling very fine talent. The whole slate of seventy pictures is being made by F. B. O. itself.

¶ Pictures founded upon exploitable ideas is the F.B.O. Slogan—and they must have action.

¶ Columbia Pictures Corp., under the wise guidance of Joe Brandt and the Brothers Cohn, has reached the full estate of a national organization.

¶ Tiffany has also arrived at national proportions; and Gotham and Excellent are coming along as important contenders in the independent group.

Then there's the adulation of that very large portion of the populace, which is simply the world old worship of heroes. The newspapers have to cater to these good, if not discriminating souls, so they deal out oodles of slush. And the constant outpouring of this makes the silk hats silkier and taller, and wider.

"All right! All right!" replies the exasperated executive in New York who signs the huge checks each week which permit the Hollywood studios to be the wonder of the world.

"All right! Let 'em rave! But the salaries! What about the salaries? And where's all the money coming from to pay them. And the waste! They don't give a damn about it—out there. But it's ruinous, ruinous, I tell you!"

YES, it would seem to be ruinous. But New York ought to start housecleaning first; shaving down those executive salaries back there and out here, which in recent years have rolled up to such an extent that the pre-production cost of a picture these days is more than the production cost of a few years ago.

And the next thing to do is to bring forth new talent out here so fast and successfully that competition will put exorbitant salaries down and energy up.

Not a simple job; but it can be done better than it is being done.

What Hollywood needs today is some Bush League Scouts as keen and experienced as those who keep the baseball business alive! And also, better showmen all along the line—directors, salesmen, exhibitors, etc., to bring these new people forth.

What is a star worth? How big a salary?

The astute Mr. Cohan answered that question for the stage folk.

A star, said he, is worth what said star brings in at the box-office.

And, mostly, that's true of the picture business.

No matter how exorbitant a salary may seem it will be paid to any star, and any star will get it, just so long as the star makes money at the box-office.

You, or I, or anyone else, who knows how to make shrewd box-office figures, will pay it.

BUT there's a big difference between the stage and the picture business.

It takes a long time to make a stage star; and then the stardom may be limited to Broadway. Stage stars are few and precious.

Picture stars are made overnight and over the world. For instance, Dolores Del Rio will be appearing this fall in half a dozen big pictures reaching millions of people.

So in the picture business we can more easily produce stars; and we should produce more of them than we do.

Once they are made they should, and inevitably they will, go their own way—into their own producing companies. By so doing they leave new room at the top of the program producing concerns for the embryo star to come forth in the best stories the concern owns.

Just such an instance was pointed out to me the other day. I spoke of the success of Clara Bow in "It."

"Yes," was the reply. "But if Gloria Swanson had been with Paramount, she should have had that story."

A concern like United Artists is inevitable in this business. There is talk right along of merging this company with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. How desirable such a move would be is the business of those concerned. But this much, I believe, is certain: if such a merger ever is effected, another United Artists would spring up over night.

The big star, as I say, is worth all the income the box-office will yield. But the one sure way of finding out just what that income is is for said star (1) to produce on his own, (2) have distinct and specialized distribution and (3) play percentage with the exhibitor.

SO much for the stars. But—A lot of salaried players here are getting what appears offhand to be exorbitant money—highly exorbitant.

I have gone over lists of names with several independent producers and to my astonishment find that very few dip below the mark of a thousand dollars a week. Mostly they run from $1500 to $3000.

Some of these people are excellent actors. Some would command, on the stage, steady salaries of one to three hundred dollars a week. And anyone who sets out to make a good picture wants good talent throughout;

Wm. A. Johnston Completing Production Survey As Convention Season Opens

CONVENTIONS of the distributing companies are now in full swing. They will continue through May and bring with them the all-important announcements of product for the 1927-1928 season.

The convention schedule is as follows: Educational, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, May 2-6; F. B. O., Ambassador Hotel, Atlantic City, May 2-3 and New Stevens Hotel, Chicago, May 5; Paramount, Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, May 2-5, Drake Hotel, Chicago, May 7-10, Whitcomb Hotel, San Francisco, May 14-17; Fox, Ambassador Hotel, Atlantic City, May 12-13-14; First National, Burbank Studio, May 19-23; M-G-M, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, May 19-24.

When the sales drives get under way, after the conclusion of the convention, exhibitors will be given a great variety of pictures to choose from, both features and short subjects, and the scramble for bookings will be livelier than ever before.

The industry is in a highly competitive condition, and this is wholesome and good for everybody.

Company by company and studio by studio, Motion Picture News for the past five weeks has surveyed the production situation in special articles written from Hollywood by William A. Johnston. The final article will appear next week.

His Hollywood production articles are, of course, based on first-hand information gained at the point where pictures are made. Complete announcements are now being made by distributors and these deserve careful study by exhibitors.

In addition, we are printing all that is news about the new season's product—and only what is news.

So far so good. I don't begrudge anyone's salary; I wish they were larger still.

But to anyone who knows approximate picture grosses and selling costs it will remain a mystery as to how on earth a picture can bear this salary expense and ever pay it.

Certainly it puts a large crimp in production—one way or another. Either it robs production of other essential values; or makes it too hasty; or makes it altogether impossible. And that's a mighty serious situation.

BUT they don't know anything about picture grosses and distributors out here; and furthermore they don't give a rip.

It would be laughable—if these same maters were not so serious; if the whole matter were not so serious to the whole industry.

A few years ago Motion Picture News gave a prize for the best new and improved scheme of distribution; and in this connection we tried to get from Hollywood some expressions of opinion.

We didn't get to first base.

"Distribution?" queried each prominent person interviewed. "What the dickens is it?"

One director gave forth a reply, after a serious mental battle.

"The trouble with distribution," said he, "is the distributor."

YOU wouldn't, of course, expect a good director to be a good sales manager; he would not be either. Just the same it would make greatly for better pictures if the producing folk here had some knowledge of and sympathy with the bird that lays these golden egg salaries.

If they don't wake up I'm not at all sure about the future of pictures—at least about the program type of picture.

If the names that draw these several-thousand-a-week salaries drew also at the box-office there could be no criticism.

But the actual truth is, that in many instances the names are not famous outside of Hollywood.

And who, may I ask, is to make them famous, and at whose expense?

Which brings me to another thing that's wrong with Hollywood—and that is money.

The golden stream that flows so largely and easily here makes Coal Oil Johnnies of a good many.

And the outbreaks are pretty bad all round.

You would think that a man or woman who became a public idol the world over would have the intelligence to sit down, sooner or later, and analyze so astounding a situation.

First, and at least, they would consider their miraculous position a sacred trust and so order their lives, at whatever sacrifice, that the public illusion be kept inviolate.

Many years ago Augustin Daly made his stage favorites live in almost cloistered seclusion and that was merely to preserve them for sophisticated New York.

How great and solemn the problem is today when the picture star is a family name in millions of homes high and low in cities and hamlets, and is inspiration to the youth of the whole world.

And surely it isn't too much to expect that the train of thought might go farther still and expose the truth that the idol of the screen is, after all, not a creature of fact, not a living, breathing, talking person, but only a creature of celluloid.

And the creature of celluloid is a result, first, of a great invention, the motion picture; then of someone's risk in dollars; then of the skilled imagination of a story writer; then of the organized effort of directors, technicians, other actors, editors, title writers, publicity experts, etc., etc.,—not to mention showmen's brains and great producing plants; then, and finally, an investment in show palaces and show places that are the marvel of the modern world.

There are screen celebrities in Hollywood who realize these simple facts; so do many more not so celebrated men and women of varying ranks in the catalogue of names. They work hard, tremendously hard, for themselves and those who employ them. They are cheerful, sane, and devoted to their tasks.

And to them—all credit. To have fame

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

Cecil B. DeMille congratulates his chief cinematographer, Peverell Marley, on the pictorial effects achieved in "The King of Kings" (P.D.C.)

Madge Bellamy, featured player in "Ankles Preferred," the Fox picture which established what is believed to be a world's record at the Roxy

Derlys Perdue, Universal featured player, is widely known as a dancer, but in "The Empty Saddle" she shows she can ride with the best of them

"Len" Fields Appointed

CARL LAEMMLE, head of Universal, has shown himself in step with the trend of the times to put young men from within the organization at the head of departments, by appointing Leonard H. Fields as eastern scenario editor. More and more of the scenario editors are coming from the ranks of young men, who not only know stories but know practical picture production as well. Fields is typical of this class, having had several years of actual studio experience before joining the "U" scenario department.

M. T. A. Made Sports Editor

MAURICE T. ANDREWS, former staff reviewer of THE NEWS, has just been advanced to the post of sports editor of The Staten Islander. He was a former all-around athlete at Notre Dame; was a half-back on the team under Rockne's training; was second baseman and relief pitcher on the nine, and captained the 1917 baseball quintet and track team. He saw action in France with the Lafayette Escadrille, and following the armistice captured a medal in the Interallied Games in Paris.

"Glory" Department Moves

THE roadshow department handling "What Price Glory" has moved from the Longacre building in New York to the Fox home office at 850 Tenth avenue, where H. Wayne Pierson and G. S. Yorke are now to be reached.

Avonne Taylor, former Ziegfield Follies beauty and now a new member of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stock company, for whom a brilliant screen career is being predicted by Louis B. Mayer

Larry Kent, First National contract player, and his mother, arriving in New York on the 20th Century, Kent having been loaned to Pathe for a serial

Edward J. Montagne, chief supervising scenario editor of Universal, whose contract has been renewed; he also is writing the story for "The Big Gun"

Laura La Plante, Universal star, waves to the cameraman before taking a dip in the attractive swimming pool at the Garden of Alla, Hollywood

Crime wave invades Paramount West Coast studios! Under the guidance of famous authorities of underworld life, Mildred Davis, Lloyd Hughes, George Bancroft and El Brendel are receiving daily instructions in the gentle arts of painless wallet extraction, opening safes without disturbing the night watchman's slumbers, and the like—all for their roles in "Too Many Crooks," which Fred Newmeyer is directing. The group tried it out on Eddie Cantor the other day, and when he discovered that his wallet was missing and demanded its return, Bancroft refused on the grounds that he had once paid to see Cantor perform on the stage and an even exchange was no robbery. Left to right—Hughes, Bancroft, Miss Davis, Brendel, Newmeyer

Executives Meet Ray Hall

GOVERNOR ALVIN T. FULLER, of Massachusetts, and Mayor Malcolm Nichols, of the city of Boston, were hosts recently to Editor Ray Hall, of Pathe News, when he made a survey of the New England territory with his newly-appointed territorial representative, Richard Sears.

At the State House, the Governor and Editor Hall discussed the importance of the film presentation of news events, and the Editor promised the Massachusetts executive that he and his company could co-operate in every way with the State in photographing all important events. The Governor presented the Pathe News editor with a gold scarf pin with the seal of the State.

At the Boston City Hall, Editor Hall discussed local news possibilities with Mayor Nichols, who presented him with a Boston Blue Book.

While in Boston, Editor Hall also visited General Foote, who has complete supervision over all amusement activities in the State of Massachusetts.

Schaefer's Third Reader

FRED SCHAEFER, head of United Artists' exploitation department, is the author of "The Third Reader," just published by the Longacre Press, New York. Those who may have read McGuffey's reader in the days when the "three R's" were being hammered home will be interested in the "Advanced or Adult Edition" of "The Third Reader," with illustrations by A. D. Condo.

Mr. Schaefer, a former managing editor of Louisville and Kansas City newspapers, makes due acknowledgment to the Newspaper Enterprise Association, who originally printed the articles which comprise the forty-eight pages of "The Third Reader." According to the publisher's notice, the book is "procurable at booksellers, stationers, pharmacists and curio shops."

Mr. Schaefer alleges he has been offered $350,000 for the screen rights, but, of course, no other press agent will believe him.

Stranger Than Fiction

MRS. EVA WILLING, of St. Paul, sat in the Capitol Theatre in that city several nights ago and watched an International Newsreel film of current events. Suddenly there appeared upon the screen, under a Los Angeles date, pictures of a man deftly throwing knives to outline the figure of a girl standing against a well. Mrs. Willing clutched her husband's hand.

"That's Dad!" she cried.

At the conclusion of the showing of the Inernational Newsreel, Mrs. Willing sought out E. W. Olson, of the Capitol Theatre staff, and secured from him the address of International Newsreel in New York, whose officials communicated with their Los Angeles manager who had made the pictures of the "Knife Throwing King." And so R. C. Clemans, of Los Angeles, has received a letter from the daughter he lost all trace of five years ago.

Almost at the same time Clemans received a telegram from St. Paul informing him that Michael Clemans, 176 University Avenue, St. Paul, had also recognized the knife thrower of the films as his long lost father.

A Prophet With Honor

SWEDEN, home land of many an important player, including Greta Garbo, recently promoted to stardom by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has, by a popular voting contest sponsored by the Filmjournalen, elected Lars Hanson, a promising Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer importation, as its most popular actor. He was presented by the Swedish fan magazine with a large, handsome silver loving cup.

Before coming to this country Hanson was a matinee and moving picture idol in Sweden. He was trained at the Royal Dramatic Theatre in Stockholm. On the stage his most popular performance was as "Hamlet," and he was known on the Continent as "the Swedish Barrymore." Among the best of the foreign films in which he appeared was "The Story of Gosta Berling," one of the most important pictures made abroad, and which also brought Greta Garbo into prominence as an actress of great possibilities.

D. W. Griffith Off for Coast

D. W. GRIFFITH, accompanied by Jack Lloyd, his personal representative, and Raymond A. Klune, his business manager, left New York Saturday afternoon, April 30th, for Hollywood. There he will make his first independent production under his resumed arrangement with United Artists.

Mr. Griffith said he would make this picture at the United Artists Studio, beginning production in June. No announcement of story selected was made, the only indication as to subject matter being that the next film will be the first of a series which Mr. Griffith calls "Romantic Studies of Humanity."

Harry Wilson Back

HARRY D. WILSON, formerly director of publicity for First National Productions, Inc., and later for Inspiration Pictures, Inc., and Edwin Carewe, has returned to Hollywood from the Orient and Far East.

Wilson's visit carried him as far from Hollywood and clicking cameras as Singaporo, Straits Settlements, Asia.

S. Barrett McCormick, the new editor of Pathe Review, assigned Earl Rossman to the MacCreagh Abyssinian expedition, and is here seen bidding bon voyage and a successful trip just before sailing. The men, left to right, are Editor McCormick, Rossman and "Bill" Park of the Review staff, while the more decorative portion of the photo is the Carter-Waddell dancers

With him was Lincoln Quarberg, bureau manager for the United Press at Los Angeles. The trip consumed practically four months, during which time Wilson and Quarberg penetrated China, Japan, Hawaii, the Straits Settlements and other foreign lands.

Director Clarence Brown and Harry Carey broadcast from the location atop the Continental Divide where scenes for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Trail of '98" were filmed. This was rebroadcast from a more powerful station, making a unique radio stunt

The pair of Hollywood writers were in Shanghai when the Cantonese captured that city, and came home with many thrilling tales of the present unsettled and war conditions in that part of the world.

Wilson will return to his desk with Inspiration Pictures, Inc., and Carewe, in addition to this capacity, will render publicity and exploitation service to John W. Considine, Jr., of the Caddo productions, releasing through United Artists Corporation, as do the Inspiration Carewe products. Quarberg has joined his staff and will resume his wire service at present.

Vogel Host at Luncheon

WILLIAM M. VOGEL, general manager of Producers International Corporation, the foreign division of Producers Distributing Corporation, was host at a luncheon given by P. I. C. in a private dining room at the Roosevelt Hotel, Wednesday, April 27th.

The guests of honor were J. J. Murdock, Cecil B. DeMille and A. George Smith.

The table was laid for eighteen, and among those present were: F. C. Munroe, Elmer Pearson, John C. Flinn, Raymond Pawley, William M. Vogel, Charles Christie, William Sistrom, Arthur Whyte, Arthur Rousseau, J. J. Rein, A. K. Greenland, S. H. Howells, G. R. O'Neill, W. J. Morgan, Frank Pope and Haydn O. Duke.

The director and three principal members of the cast selected for Columbia's "Birds of Prey," one of this company's most recent productions. Left to right: William James Craft, the director; the stern-faced Gustav van Seyffertitz; Priscilla Dean, who returns to the sort of crook role which made her famous, and Hugh Allan, the male lead

For 14 years Robert C. Bruce has been making scenics, and making them mighty well. Now he has made his home in the Pacific Northwest, where he says he can find anything he desires in the scenic line. Here are two shots at random from the series of "Outdoor Sketches" which he will release through Educational the coming year, illustrating the pictorial beauties of this region

Christie Comedians in N. Y.

BILLY DOOLEY, star of his own series of comedies for Educational, and Frances Lee, his former vaudeville partner, and now leading lady for Bobby Vernon, were visitors in New York City this week, during the stay of the United States fleet. Miss Lee, it will be recalled, was named one of the Wampas Baby Stars for 1927.

Dooley, who plays a "dippy sailor" rôle in his two-reel Christie-produced comedies, came to New York to get additional "information" and story material during the visit of the naval men. His most recent Educational-Billy Dooley Comedy, "Dumb Belles," played a week's engagement only a short time ago at the Paramount Theatre, being the first two-reel comedy to be shown in this show house since it opened.

Babe's Film Shown

FIRST NATIONAL'S "Babe Comes Home," starring "Babe" Ruth, was shown to an audience of 200 newspaper men at the Friar's Club Wednesday night last week while the American Newspaper Publishers' Association was holding its annual convention in New York City. The picture received wide publicity as a result of the showing, newspapers throughout the country giving it space.

Among the 200 guests at the special showing were members of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, of the Newspaper Club of New York, and the sport writers on the daily metropolitan press. The mighty home runner was the guest of honor.

Before the picture was screened, various of the notable guests were introduced by Christy Walsh, Ruth's representative, who acted as Master of Ceremonies. Among those presented to the audience were Marshall Hunt, of the New York Daily News, who accompanied Ruth during his stay in the West; Artie McGovern of the McGovern gymnasium, who acted as trainer for the ball player; Hendrik Van Loon, famous author; Howard Reynolds, sports editor of the New York Evening Post; William Farnsworth, of the New York Evening Journal, and Ned E. Depinet, general sales manager for First National Pictures.

Emanuel Cohen Decorated

THE decoration of Commander of the Crown of Italy was conferred upon Emanuel Cohen, director of the short feature production department of the Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, and editor of Paramount News, yesterday afternoon at the Ritz-Carleton Hotel.

The decoration was presented by Ambassador Giacomo De Martino on behalf of the King of Italy. Ambassador De Martino came from Washington especially for the presentation, which was made in recognition of Mr. Cohen's service to the Italian Government and the manner in which he has disseminated official news of Italy throughout the world.

The ceremony was witnessed by members of the Italian Embassy and friends of Mr. Cohen. Emilio Axerio, Italian Consul in New York, attended the ceremony. Arrangements were in charge of Leonard Vitetti, first secretary of the embassy. A motion picture record of the ceremony will be sent to the King of Italy.

Scenes on location with "The Joy Girl" company filming scenes at Palm Beach under the direction of Allan Dawn for Fox Films. Dwan, Olive Borden and Neil Hamilton may be seen among those in the camera's eye

Not all the handsome youths and charming maidens of the film world are acting before the camera. Here are nine of the writers at the Metro Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Culver City, who amply demonstrate that fact: Agnes Christine Johnson, Dorothy Farnum, Harry Behn, Madeline Ruthe-ruin, Marion Ainslee, Hayden Talbot, Florence Ryerson, Alice D. G. Miller and Al Lewin

Fleet Aids "Convoy"

OFFICIAL co-operation of the Fleet has been won for the New York opening of "Convoy," which begins a week's engagement at the Strand Theatre, Saturday, May 7th. Ned Marin, assistant general production manager of First National Pictures, Thursday, went aboard the U. S. S. Seattle, flagship of the fleet, and presented to Admiral Charles Hughes, commander of the fleet, a copy of the war picture. Admiral Hughes was especially interested in seeing a print of the completed film, since he and his staff had aided in the production of the picture last December, when several scenes of the film were shot aboard the flagship when she was tied up at the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

While aboard the Seattle, Mr. Marin, representing Robert Kane, the producer of the picture and First National Pictures, which is releasing it, invited Admiral Hughes, his staff and the flag officers of the fleet, to be present at the Strand opening as guests of honor. Negotiations are also under way to have Secretary of Navy Wilbur present that night.

"Chang" Commended

THE only feature to receive a merit asterisk this week from the National Board of Review was "Chang," which, if we had our way, would have three asterisks. Three issues of Pathe Review were likewise commended, issues 20, 22 and 23. No pictures were found worthy of an asterisk last week.

Where They Come From

WITH few exceptions celebrities of the screen come from other than theatrical families, if a census of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios is any criterion.

Only a very few of the stars and players at the M-G-M studios are the children of theatrical parents. Lionel Barrymore, of course, comes from a long line of stage folk, with Maurice and Georgia Drew Barrymore as his father and mother. John Gilbert's parents were in the "show business," and Renee Adoree's father was a famous circus clown, while her mother was a member of his troupe.

Although Ralph Forbes' father was a business man, his mother, Mary Forbes, achieved success on the English stage. Aileen Pringle is the daughter of a wealthy man, the president of a San Francisco merchandise assoeiation. Marion Davies and Sally O'Neil were brought up in a legal atmosphere, their fathers both being judges.

Lew Cody is the son of a wealthy New England merchant, while Joan Crawford's father is a theatre owner. Tim McCoy, M-G-M's Western star, followed in his father's footsteps for several years, both being army men, but the son has branched out into the cinema world.

A pianist-composer is the father of Conrad Nagel while Gertrude Olmsted was the daughter of a Chicago dentist.

Cecil Holland, character man for M-G-M, is the son of an English sea captain, while Maurice Kains' father is a college professor.

and money showered upon one with so lavish a hand as the hand of the motion picture is indeed a strain upon any human's poise and sense of humor.

Another thing; Hollywood has many parasites to prey upon the favored folk of the movies—an alarming number. Some of these are just the fawning kind, the yessir people of all degrees of servitude. But some are vicious—downright and criminally vicious. It is necessary to police the studios and it wouldn't be a bad idea, it seems to me, to have some clever plain clothes men constantly at work.

TO revert to the salaries—a prime cause of the excessive cost of production I can only give a warning to the players—and that will do no good whatever—that pictures do not, cannot, and will not, continue to pay what the box-office doesn't pay. And when the box-office pinches the jobs will be pinched.

As to any regulation of salaries I see no way except the regular way of intelligent and unrestrained competition upon the part of the producers— and that is to bring new talent constantly forward.

Important Developments Pending in Sound-Film Field; Movietone Abroad

WITH the world's first newsreel subject on which sound was recorded simultaneously with filming showing this week at the Roxy theatre in New York, a review of West Point cadets by Fox News and Movietone, developments which will be of far reaching effect in the newsreel and talking picture fields are in the offing.

It is believed that Fox is not yet fully decided as to the extent to which Movietone will be applied to Fox News, and it may range from special events to an entire reel. Wide use, of course, will have to await manufacture of the Movietone apparatus for recording and the outfit for theatre reproduction on a considerable scale.

A recording of Premier Mussolini was made in Italy recently during the presence in Rome of C. C. Pettijohn, of the Hays organization, which lent official color to the proceedings. Meanwhile Fox-Case is going ahead steadily with tests and recordings of vocal and instrumental numbers, in which about $250,000 is understood to have been invested to date, including the Raquel Meller, "Chic" Sale and Ben Bernie numbers.

De Forest is likely to resume activity shortly, following a deal with the Crosley radio interests by which that firm will manufacture the De Forest apparatus. A Broadway showing is promised shortly.

Wood Outlines Columbus Convention Plans

Feature of Meeting Will be Exposition of Wares by Accessory Equipment Dealers

SPENDING the whole of Friday in conference with R. F. Woodhull and Mike O'Toole at the offices of the M. P. T. O. A., P. J. Wood, business manager of the Ohio unit of theatre owners and secretary of the convention committee, has completed the final arrangements for the eighth annual get-together of theatre men which will take place at Columbus, Ohio, on June 7, 8 and 9.

Special emphasis was placed by Mr. Woods on the fact that exhibitors should take advantage of the certificate offered for the fare and one-half rate at their point of departure. Certificates must be presented to Sam Sonin at the headquarters of the convention; Mr. Sonin will authenicate them. The certificates will allow one-half rate on the return trip and must be procured at the points of departure between June 3-9. Where no certificates can be secured at the smaller stations the agents will inform the travelers as to the first city where such certificates will be obtainable. Mr. Sonin is the endorsing officer and will be stationed at the Neil House, the headquarters for the convention. There will be no refund of fare unless this certificate, which will be received when the ticket is purchased, is presented.

One of the features of the convention will be the exposition that the accessory and equipment dealers will give on the mezzanine floor of the Neil House of their various wares. Thirty firms have already contracted for space.

Among them are the Kimball Organ Co., Wurlitzer Organ Co., Page Organ Co., Operators Piano Co., Automatic Ticket Register Co., American Seating Co., Heywood-Wakefield Co., L. J. Gardiner Co., Markus Vaudeville Agency, Comerford Amusement Co., Perfection Arc Co., Holloway Motor Co., Paramount Publicity Corporation, Libman Spanjer Corporation, Edwards Electric Construction Corporation, International Projector Corporation, National Screen Service, Semler Cinema Co., Rayart Pictures Co., American Cinema Association, Vitaphone Corporation, Clinton Carpet Co., National Theatre Supply Co. and Theatre Underwriters of Philadelphia.

The dealers' show will be the first large motion picture equipment and accessory exposition of its kind, it is said.

Addressing the convention will be Govenor Vic Donahey of Ohio, and S. L. Rothafel. J. J. Harwood, of Cleveland, has been apopinted chairman of the convention committee.

Philadelphia Plans Statue for Late Jules Mastbaum

A committee has been appointed by Mayor Kendrick to take charge of the plans for the erection of a memorial to the late Jules E. Mastbaum. Mayor Kendrick, as chairman of the committee has appointed the other members, among them several representatives of the motion picture industry. The amount necessary for the erection of the memorial has already been contributed and the statue will be placed on the north side of City Hall Plaza.

Proceeds of Warner Premiere for Charity

The proceeds from the premiere at the Coloney Theatre, New York, on Friday evening, May 6, will be turned over to the Hebrew Orphan Asylum Gymnasium Fund, H. M. Warner, president of Warner Bros., has announced. It is expected that a large amount will accrue to the orphan asylum to benefit by the performance.

Alberta Exhibitors Protest Against Standardizing

Members of the Independent Theatre Owners' Association of Alberta, Canada, waited upon Premier Brownlee of the Alberta Provincial Government at Calgary, to protest against the move to establish standards for moving pictures to be shown in Alberta theatres for juvenile, family or general presentation.

The Provincial Premier was told that many patrons would not attend a theatre where announcement was made that a "family picture" would be presented. The advertised classification of a feature would tend to upset regular patronage and would cause confusion. As an alternative, the deputation urged that the Alberta moving picture censor be authorized to draw up a list of pictures suitable for children, which list would be made available in printed form for patrons on request. Such a list would not be advertised, however. The deputation, which was headed by George B. O'Connor, pointed out that there were 100 theatres in Alberta, representing an investment of $4,000,000. This investment should be protected, they believed.

Premier Brownlee promised careful consideration before adopting any film classification step.

New Brunswick Lessens Restrictions of New Law

Exhibitors of the Province of New Brunswick, Canada, were uneasy recently over the prospect of the passing of a new law by the New Brunswick Legislature prohibiting the admission of children under 16 years of age to any theatre at any time unless accompanied by a male adult.

A large delegation waited upon the Provincial Government at Fredericton with the result that Premier Baxter of New Brunswick provided certain relief from the measure, the age limit being placed at 12 years and juvenile patronage is permitted for stated performances.

Erdman Secretary-Business Manager Cleveland Assoc.

The executive board of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, at 713 Film Building, Cleveland, Ohio, announced on May 2 the election of G. W. Erdmann as secretary and business manager of the association.

Minnesota Passes New Permit Amendment

THE recent session of the Minnesota state legislature passed the amendment which was presented to it by the Northwest M. P. T. O. providing for the simplification of permits for children to appear at theaters. The Industrial Commission will now have charge of granting the permits whereas formerly it was also necessary to secure the consent of the mayor of the city in which the theater was located. The commission may now pass on an application immediately instead of its having to have it three days and the mayor 48 hours before the appearance.

Paramount Offers Full Program

Lasky, Kent and Cohen Tells Conventionees of Product for New Season; Christies in Short Feature Line-Up

No Split Season

PARAMOUNT will market its entire output for the 1927-28 season at one time instead of conducting two sales campaigns as previously. The 60 Star Attractions will be sold in block, but the 10 to 12 specials will be sold individually. Each special will be given exploitation runs and campaigns in key cities. "The Rough Riders" will be roadshown as a special. The 1927-28 sales drive will start Monday in the east and continue until next spring.

REPRESENTATIVES of Paramount's eastern sales division and the foreign department attending the annual international convention at the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York City, this week were advised that Paramount is working on its most ambitious production effort, a one hundred per cent program, comprising features, a news reel, comedies, cartoons and novelties for delivery to exhibitors beginning August 1, 1927 and ending August 1, 1928.

This statement was the keynote of the message of Sidney R. Kent, general manager, in response to an analysis of the forthcoming Paramount product by Jesse L. Lasky, who told the conventionees of the company's plans with regard to feature productions. Emanuel Cohen, director of short feature production, outlined the schedule of comedies, novelties, etc.

Lasky Lists Twenty Specials

Mr. Lasky stated Paramount would release 60 starring pictures, a minimum of 20 special attractions and would produce one extra attraction; the short feature program, said Mr. Cohen, will be composed of 104 issues of Paramount News, 52 comedies and 52 cartoons and novelties.

Mr. Lasky listed 20 specials, including one Harold Lloyd picture produced from an original story; one Ernst Lubitsch attraction; "Beau Geste," "Metropolis," "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," for which a search is now being made for an actress to play the leading role; "Underworld," Ben Hecht's original story of crook life; "Glorifying the American Girl," an original story; a picture to be produced from an original idea emanating from a Photoplay Magazine contest; "Make Them Love You," an original by Elinor Glyn; "The Gay Defender," an original by Grover Jones; four Emil Jannings pictures, two of which will be "The Way of All Flesh," an original, and "Hitting for Heaven," an original; two Fred Thomson attractions, "Jesse James" and "Davy Crockett;" "Chang," the jungle melodrama, and "Tillie's Punctured Romance," to be made by Christie.

"Abie's Irish Rose," Anne Nichols' play, will be an outstanding attraction on the coming year's schedule, said Mr. Lasky.

During the new season "Wings," Paramount's epic of the air service, and "The Wedding March," Erich von Stroheim's drama, will be brought to the screen. In addition to these two, "Old Ironsides" and "The Rough Riders," will continue as road show attractions.

Paramount stars will appear in 60 attractions during the year, the lineup being as follows:

Richard Dix—"The Big Timer," an original, will be the first of this star, and there will be three others, including "Shanghai Bound."

Thomas Meighan—"We're All Gamblers," from the play "Lucky Sam McCarver," and directed by James Cruze, will be the first. Three others will follow.

Clara Bow—"Hula," by Armine von Tempski; "Red Hair," by Elinor Glyn; "The Devil May Care," by Arthur Somers Roche, and "Her Cardboard Lover," from the play of the same title.

Wallace Beery—"The Doughboy," from the play "Louie the Fourteenth," will be this comedian's only individual starring film. He will be teamed in others.

Bebe Daniels—"Swim, Girl, Swim," an original; "Miss Jockey," a play and three others will star this comedienne.

Adolphe Menjou—"Service for Ladies," an original; "With Their Eyes Open," by I. A. R. Wylie; "The Beauty Doctor," an original, and two others will feature Menjou.

Eddie Cantor—"The Girl Friend," from a play, and "Help!", an original.

Esther Ralston — "Good Morning, Dearie," from a play; "The Beautiful Woman," an original, and three others.

Florence Vidor—"A Celebrated Woman," an original; "One Wife to Another," an original, and two others.

Zane Grey—"Nevada," "The Open Range" and two other Grey stories will come to the screen during the new year.

Al Christie and Charles Christie

Star Product

W. C. Fields—"[illegible] Wife," among original; "Dude Ranch," an original "Shootin' Irons," an original; "The Cactus Kind," an original, and two others.

Wallace Beery-Raymond Hatton—"Firemen, Save My Child," an original; "Now We're in the Air," an original; "We're in Society Now," an original, and one more.

Chester Conklin-George Bancroft—"Tell It To Sweeney," an original, and two others.

Pola Negri—"Barbed Wire," by Hall Caine; "Woman on Trial," from a play, and two more.

Fred Thomson—Will star in two pictures in addition to his specials, "Jessie James" and "Davy Crockett."

In addition to the foregoing starring pictures the regular schedule of release will include also "Mme. Pompadour," a British National production with Dorothy Gish and Antoneo Moreno; "Stark Love" and "The Last Waltz." "The Covered Wagon," said Mr. Lasky, will be re-issued, while from the Ufa studios Paramount will get "The Mysterious Cry" and "Peaks of Destiny."

Two Hundred and Eight Short Films on Paramount Schedule

PARAMOUNT will have the exclusive world distribution of Christie features and comedies according to negotiations just concluded, S. R. Kent announced to the sales representatives at the Paramount convention.

"Christie picture are not new to Paramount," stated Mr. Kent, "for we have had for several years the distribution of them in many foreign countries. At least one feature picture, "Tillie's Punctured Romance" will be made with a well-known star." Paramount general manager then summarized the short subject product incorporated in the one hundred percent program and details regarding this type of picture were supplied by Emanuel Cohen, director of short feature production.

"Paramount, with the new star, reenters short feature production and distribution with a product from the studios and laboratories of seasoned and successful producers," said Mr. Cohen. He told of the news reel for which men will be stationed in 150 offices throughout the world to gather world events and views of local interest.

There will be 36 Christie comedies, eight starring Bobbie Vernon, eight starring Billy Dooley, eight starring Jimmie Adams, and 12 Christie brand. Also scheduled are six Edward Everett Horton comedies made by Hollywood Productions, headed by William R. Fraser. Of these "Dad's Choice," "Find the King" and "Behind the Counter," have been completed.

For novelty reels will be the Mintz series of five—"Elegy," "Fantasy," "Frenzy" and two others. There will also be a Mintz comedy series of five pictures of which "A Short Tail" has been completed. Two cartoon series will come from Max Fleischer, who will make "Out of the Inkwell" and from Winkler Pictures, Inc., a "Krazy Kat" series which will be drawn by Ben Harrison and Manny Gould.

Educational Meeting on Coast

Company's Entry Into Production Field Features Discussions at Convention Held in Los Angeles; All Branch Managers Present

EDUCATIONAL'S entry into the production field—the greater part of next season's product will be made in its own studios—featured the discussion held at the annual sales convention in Los Angeles, May 2-6, under the leadership of E. W. Hammons, President.

All the branch managers of Educational were in attendance and heard full descriptions of the new product from officials.

Home office executives and department heads, with branch managers from the Atlantic seaboard, went to Los Angeles in a special compartment-drawing room car over the Pennsylvania and the Santa Fe's California Limited.

Two other Pullmans, occupied by Middle Western exchange managers, were added at Chicago.

The New York delegation included: Mr. Hammons; A. S. Kirkpatrick, general manager; J. R. Wilson, sales manager; Gordon S. White, head of the publicity and advertising department; Harvey Day, sales manager of Kinograms; J. F. Burke, traveling auditor; Arthur Lucas, special Southern representative; Lawrence Wooldridge, manager of Far East Films Corp., handling foreign business for Educational; Oscar Hanson, general manager of Canadian branches and several Eastern branch managers.

Among the principal speakers at the convention were Messrs. Hammons, Kirkpatrick, Wilson and Gordon White. Piloted by Jack White, production chief, the delegates inspected the studios, which with exchanges throughout the country, recently went under ownership of the company.

It was pointed out to the exchangemen, who will have charge territorially of the sales campaign soon to get under way, that Educational was well-equipped to meet the competition that will be brought about this year in the short-subject field. The Educational product, which was outlined in detail in last week's issue of Motion Picture News, totals 60 comedies, 89 one-reel releases and the 104 issues of Kinograms.

The convention ends Friday, May 6.

LauraLa Plante Renews Universal Contract

LAURA LA PLANTE, Universal's blonde star, will continue working under the Laemmle banner for the next five years. Her first picture under her new contract will be "Silk Stockings," which was started this week under the direction of Wesley Ruggles. The star will be provided with the best of stories, according to Universal, and the amount expended on her productions will be increased.

Organization Unites Picture Arts

Fairbanks Heads Coast Body Formed to Promote Harmony Among Creative Branches of Industry

THE Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, an organization to unite all branches of motion picture production, has been formed on the West Coast with Douglas Fairbanks as president; Fred Niblo, vice-president; Frank Woods, secretary, and M. C. Levee, treasurer. Application for a charter was filed in Sacramento on May fourth and the Academy will be launched at an invitational banquet held the night of May 11 at the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, when two hundred or more charter members, it is expected, will be enrolled.

The organization will bring together the five creative branches of the industry, actors, technicians, writers, directors and producers, and among the most important functions of the Academy will be the promotion of harmony and solidarity and the reconciling of any differences that may exist or arise between the different arts and their respectatives, according to Mr. Fairbanks.

Mary Pickford, Louis B. Mayer and Joseph M. Schenck represent the producers on the board; Douglas Fairbanks, Milton Sills and Conrad Nagel, the actors; Jeanie Macpherson, Carey Wilson and Joseph M. Farnham, the writer; Fred Niblo, Frank Lloyd and John Stahl, the directors, and Roy Pomeroy, Cedric Gibbons and J. A. Ball, the technicians.

Appearing as sponsors in addition to the officers and directors named above are Richard Barthelmess, Harold Lloyd, Jesse L. Lasky, Irving Thalberg, Charles Christie, Cecil B. DeMille, Bess Meredith, Harry Rapf, Raoul Walsh, Fred Beetson, Milton Hoffman, Edwin Loeb, Jack Warner, Jack Holt, Sid Grauman, Harry Warner, George Cohen and Benjamin Glazer, all of whom have been active in the preliminary meetings which have been quietly under way since January. Temporary quarters for the Academy have been established at 6912 Hollywood Boulevard. Plans of the founders include the erection of an academy building, the bestowal of awards of merit for distinctive achievements, the interchange of constructive ideas among the members and co-operation with colleges and universities in their recognition of the motion picture as a separate and distinct art.

Recognizing that the objective of the academy is the welfare of the motion picture industry as a whole, it is explained that the academy will in no way conflict with the activities of other organizations already in existence, including the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, of which Will H. Hays is president, but on the contrary it will function in harmonious cooperation.

In a telegram of congratulation to Douglas Fairbanks, received yesterday, Mr. Hays, who has been in close touch with the development of the idea, said:

"The Academy will have a definite tendency to quicken the advance of the various arts which are represented in motion picture production, to promote cooperation between the production branches, to bring about further recognition of motion pictures as an art and bring a consequent improvement always in the quality of motion pictures. The foundation of the Academy is a real accomplishment."

Engage Charles Ray for Universal Picture

WHEN Gerald Beaumount's story of the prize ring, "Betty's a Lady," goes into production at Universal City the featured role of prize fighter will be played by Charles Ray. James Gleason, co-author of "Is Zat So?", will have the role of the manager. James Flood will direct the film as his initial production for Universal. Arthur Shadur will act in the capacity of supervisor. The story was adapted by Harry O. Hoyt.

M-G-M Acquires Screening Rights to "Baby Mine"

"Baby Mine," a successful stage farce, will be soon converted into a motion picture by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as the screen rights to the stage production have been purchased by the Loew company. A prominent director and a stella cast is being considered for the picture.

Edwin Carewe Acts in His Own Film, "Resurrection"

Making his first screen appearance in eleven years in "Resurrection," the picture which he produced for United Artists, Edwin Carewe enacts the part of a prison-train guard who curses and lashes one of the exiles.

Universal's $50,000 Sales Bonus

To Be Divided Among Salesmen for Past Year's Work---Chicago Convention Hears Complete Product Plan for New Season

A HIGHLIGHT of the Universal sales convention, held at the Drake Hotel, Chicago, May 1st to 4th, was the announcement of a division of $50,000 in bonus checks to Universal salesmen this month for their work during the past year.

Lou B. Metzger, general sales manager, outlined the company's product to the assembled forces. The convention was the largest in the company's history.

Carl Laemmle was unable to be present in person, but was represented by a speech reproduced by Panatrope. There was also a trailer showing salesmen views of the new product, with close-ups of Mr. Laemmle interpolated.

An important development of the convention was the announcement by William Santiel, Corporation Counsel, representing Mayor Thompson, that the present administration in Chicago would give free rein to the motion picture industry and not hamper it by reactionary measures.

The convention banquet was held Tuesday evening at the Drake Hotel with United States Senator Charles S. Dineen, of Illinois, as guest of honor and principal speaker.

Among the addresses and sales talks heard by the assembled salesmen during the four-day convention were talks by R H. Cochrane, P. D. Cochrane, Paul Gulick, Robert Welsh, Nat Rothstein, E. D. Leishman, R. V. Anderson, Sydney Singerman, Edward Montague, Julius and Abe Stern, Charles Rosenquest , Ben Grimm, Dave Bader and others, including several talks by Metzger, H. M. Sills Classifies Players and Salaries in Address Delivered at Harvard

SPEAKING before the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration on Thursday of last week, Milton Sills discussed the classification of film players on a basis of earnings, the nature of their work and the useful service which they perform. A few of the highlights of his address were:

"Roughly, the human figures you see on the screen can be divided into five classes; the "extra players," the "rank and file," actors, "featured" artists, stars and actor-producers.

"As Mr. Hays has told you, there are some 18,000 extras registered in Hollywood, receiving from $5 to $15 per day—but neither every day nor simultaneously. Their living is precarious; nevertheless. they perform an essential function in the making of pictures.

"The gulf between the "extra" and the actor is rather wide. It is defined largely by the acolade known in the industry as "screen credit." The number who have been promoted to this eminence in Hollywood is roughly 2,000. Most of these are employed by the day at from $20 up.

"The number of actors who receive under $500 per week and who are in occasional demand is approximately 1,000. A large percentage of these have average annual incomes of about $3,000. A few run as high as $8,000 or $10,000.

"Of first-class actors, in almost constant demand, there are about 300. These actors receive from $500 to $1,500 per week. For at least two-thirds of them 35 to 40 weeks may be regarded as constituting a very good year.

"The aristocracy of the profession consists of the "featured" artists, the stars, and the actor-producers. There are some 100 featured players under contract whose salaries average $500 per week. The range, however, lies between $200 per week and $3,000 in exceptional cases. Contracts are usually for forty weeks out of the fifty-two, but in some cases, are for the full year.

"The number of first-class stars is 70 or thereabouts, two or three not under contract at present, 17 of these are actor-producers. Some 50 others are under contract. Of these, the percentage who receive a share in the profits of their pictures is negligible. The amounts of their salaries are not available—they are jealously guarded secrets—but from what I can gather they range from $2,000 per week to $15,000. The average would be $4,000 to $5,000. Most contract stars are limited to making four pictures a year. A greater number would incur the danger of surfeiting the public.

"The next class—the actor-producer—is no longer an employee; he is an employer. There are 17 actor-producers, men and women, producing film dramas, and comedies. These combine the roles of actors and big business men at the same time. They have large staffs, own or rent studios, have sales organizations, borrow money from banks to finance production, buy their own stories, in short, while being the central attractions in their pictures, engage in all the various activities of a big producer. Usually, they make one or two pictures a year."

Theatres in Flood Relief Drive

Coolidge Designates May 7th as Official Day— Benefit Shows Being Given on Nation-Wide Scale

FOLLOWING his proclamation in behalf of the Red Cross that the Flood Relief Fund be increased from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000, President Coolidge has called upon theaters of the United States and Canada to observe Saturday, May 7, as Relief Day for sufferers in the Mississippi Valley.

In designating the date suggested by Will H. Hays, the President expressed his appreciation of the generous response already made by the industry.

Film Boards of Trade, following instructions sent out from headquarters in New York last week, are co-operating with exhibitors throughout the country. Prints are donated for benefit shows when all proceeds of these performances are turned over to the Red Cross.

From New Orleans, E. V. Richards, Jr., again urged no cessation of the campaign for funds and appealed to the industry to continue its concerted action for relief of the flood sufferers.

In the New Orleans exchange area, the Film Board of Trade announced that all service for benefit shows was being booked and handled through a committee of three. Programs together with advertising are furnished without cost, transportation charges excepted.

A complete plan of procedure is mapped out for the use of theaters in the New Orleans district, and similar steps have been taken in all exchange centers.

Benefit programs on a nation-wide scale are being given at hundreds of picture theaters, and May 7th will bring still larger totals to the Red Cross fund.

Summarized, the industry's flood relief activities are as follows:

Publix, through Sam Katz, President, will hold benefit performances in all houses of the circuit, numbering some five hundred. This is the result of a general order issued by Mr. Katz, and the shows will be given May 7th. All proceeds will be turned over to the Red Cross.

The Universal Theater chain and the Loew Circuit have issued similar orders to all houses.

By cities and towns, incomplete reports to the NEWS indicate the following:

New York—Publix benefit at the Paramount Theater, midnight, Saturday, May 7. Tickets on sale in advance, but no reserved seats. The show will consist of talent from all over the city.

The Loew houses in New York are co-operating with the Vaudeville Managers Association and will participate in several mammoth programs.

Theaters represented in the membership of the Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce have set aside Saturday morning, May 14, for special shows. A suggested program is being prepared for exhibitors, in co-operation with the Red Cross and the school board.

Great States Theaters is conducting midnight benefits on May 6 in the thirteen towns in which it operates.

Chicago—Blair McElroy, of Fitzpatrick & McElroy telegraphed to Mr. Hays that exclusive benefit performances would be given in houses of the circuit throughout the Middle West on May 7.

Dallas—Don C. Douglas wired to Mr. Hays that a joint committee of prominent exhibitors and exchangemen had arranged benefits in 145 towns in Texas.

Other reports said 250 Texas theaters joined in benefit performances, with the receipts expected to be in excess of $40,000. Programs were broadcast and the Associated Press and United Press co-operated.

At the Majestic Theater, Dallas, approximately $2,500 was raised at a midnight matinee. Twenty acts volunteered.

Butte, Montana—E. P. White, President of the M.P.T.O. of Montana, wired Mr. Hays that his organization would be glad to co-operate and that theaters would choose their own dates for benefit shows between May 5 and May 12.

Baltimore—Picture performances were given Sunday night, May 1 at four film playhouses and a concert at a fifth. No admission was charged but a silver collection was taken up at intermission. The theaters included the Boulevard, Warners' Metropolitan, Loew's Parkway, the Rialto and Alcazar. The use of the theaters were donated by the managements.

Harrisburg—The Broad Theater gave a Sunday show for the flood fund in co-operation with the Red Cross. A collection was taken up.

Oklahoma City—The M.P.T.O. of Oklahoma set aside May 6-7-8 as official days for benefit performances. It was expected that $25,000 would be raised.

Albany—The Schine houses in Watertown aided materially in Red Cross collections. The campaign was handled by L. J. Carkey, district manager for Schine, who secured speakers. Collections were taken up from audiences and baskets for contributions were placed in lobbies.

William C. Smalley, Cooperstown, head of the circuit bearing his name, announced that 50 per cent of total receipts at each of his 14 houses for all performances on May 9 would be donated to the flood relief fund.

Louisville, Ky.—Minimum admission of one dollar and a $2.50 top were charged at the Rialto Theater in the all-Louisville flood relief and benefit.

Leavenworth, Kans.—Walter Wallace, of the Orpheum, featured a midnight Saturday show for the Red Cross fund, following a vigorous campaign.

Wadsworth, O.—Eight per cent of the Red Cross flood quota for the town was raised by John L. Damm at the Strand matinee April 29.

A number of people in the industry have contributed personally, including S. R. Kent, Colleen Moore, and Elmer Pearson on behalf of Pathe.

Bruen Resigns Responsible Position in Northwest

Jolting film circles of the Northwest, the recent resignation by Hugh W. Bruen of his connection with the M. P. T. O., of the State of Washington as president and his equally important move to resign the general managership of the Northwest Theatrical Enterprises of Seattle, came as a distinct surprise last week. Mr. Bruen will leave shortly for an extended vacation trip to California and the East. Jack Schlaifer, head of the Universal Chain Theatres, announced that he had as yet selected no one to replace Mr. Bruen as head of the ten Universal houses that comprise the Northwest Theatrical Enterprises chain.

Mo. and Ill. Flood Danger Past; Memphis Territory Hit Hard

THE worst flood in the history of the Mississippi Valley in the matter of property loss and widespread hardship has passed so far as the St. Louis district is concerned. The crest of the engulfing waters is now many hundreds of miles below the metropolis of the valley and it is now possible to take stock and to forecast to some extent the future results of the disaster.

Missouri and Illinois generally speaking came off fortunately compared to sections of Arkansas, Tennessee, Louisiana and Mississippi, for below they had the combined waters of the Mississippi-Missouri and the Ohio, Arkansas, Red, St. Francis, White and many lesser streams and a large number of important levees gave way, causing many thousands of square miles of territory to be covered by water up to as high as 40 feet in depth.

D. P. Rathbone, manager of First National's branch in an account of the flood sent to the home office states "levees are breaking in all directions. . . . approximately thirty towns under water in the Memphis territory." Approximately 10,000,000 acres are submerged, he reports.

"We will not feel the result of this flood other than being unable to make shipments for at least two weeks or until the water goes down. After that, at least sixty towns in the Memphis territory will be in such bad straits that they will need immediate assistance in order to run at all.

"It will be at least three months before the theatres in this territory can get back to normal, and the outlook for the entire year is very bad, as it will be impossible for any crops to be raised in the delta sections, which are the best agricultural sections of this territory."

UNIVERSAL'S
Supreme Achievement

1927 1928

I HONESTLY believe, and state with all the sincerity and power in me, that this announcement covers the greatest array of outstanding motion picture entertainment ever offered by Universal—OR ANY COMPANY—in a single year!

I cannot state my faith any stronger. I CANNOT MAKE IT TOO STRONG!

Carl Laemmle

Universal has the BIG

CARL LAEMMLE ASKED PROMINENT EXHIBITORS, one after another, hundreds of them, "What do you want, above all things, in Universal Pictures to make them the outstanding money-making and entertainment-bringing productions on the market—BAR NONE!"

They said: "Give us the best-selling novels and magazine stories that millions are reading; give us the successful Broadway plays that everybody knows about. Give us 'Show Boat,' 'The Chinese Parrot,' 'Alias the Deacon,' 'We Americans,' 'The Small Bachelor,' —others like that—and then give us ANOTHER 'COHENS AND KELLYS!'"

CARL LAEMMLE DIDN'T REPLY BY OFFERING "SOMEthing just as good." He went into the market with hundreds of thousands of dollars—and BOUGHT!—BOUGHT!!—BOUGHT!!! Until it became common knowledge in higher film circles that for anything Universal felt the public wanted—UNIVERSAL OUTBID THE FIELD!

Then Carl Laemmle moved his home TO THE STUDIO. And built around the greatest production facilities and organization in the world an array of directorial talent that is amazing. On top of that, he added to famous plays, novels and stories—casts studded with STARS!

TODAY, CARL LAEMMLE CHALLENGES THE ATTENTION of every exhibitor in the world, no matter HOW BIG. Study the pictures—title by title—THERE HAS BEEN NOTHING LIKE IT IN THE HISTORY OF THE MOTION PICTURE! Universal is at its peak — Universal's place is at THE PEAK OF THE INDUSTRY!

Go to your nearest exchange. Say, "I want to see some of those NEW Universal Pictures." WE KNOW THE PRODUCT! No guesses—no mere hopes—we have SEEN the pictures that Universal City is turning out today. WE WANT YOU TO SEE THEM!

CARL LAEMMLE ENTERS HIS TWENTY-SECOND YEAR as a picture man with UNIVERSAL AT THE PEAK OF THE INDUSTRY! "Long Run Specials" of startling strength; thirty-three BIG GUN GROUP JEWELS crowded with pictures that in any other year and with any other company would be automatic super-specials; sensational THRILL pictures and action dramas; and a line-up of SUPER-SHORTS even out-distancing the terrific pace set by Universal this year in the short subject field.

The rumors started months ago—the word sped. With this first complete, amazing disclosure of the whole story, with the showings of the pictures—it will flame across the country like wild-fire: "Universal Has The BIG PICTURES This Year!"

The serial that Carl Laemmle elevated to the high rank of "JUNIOR JEWEL"! It's a SENSATION!

Blake of Scotland Yard

with

HAYDEN STEVENSON

Directed by Robert Hill

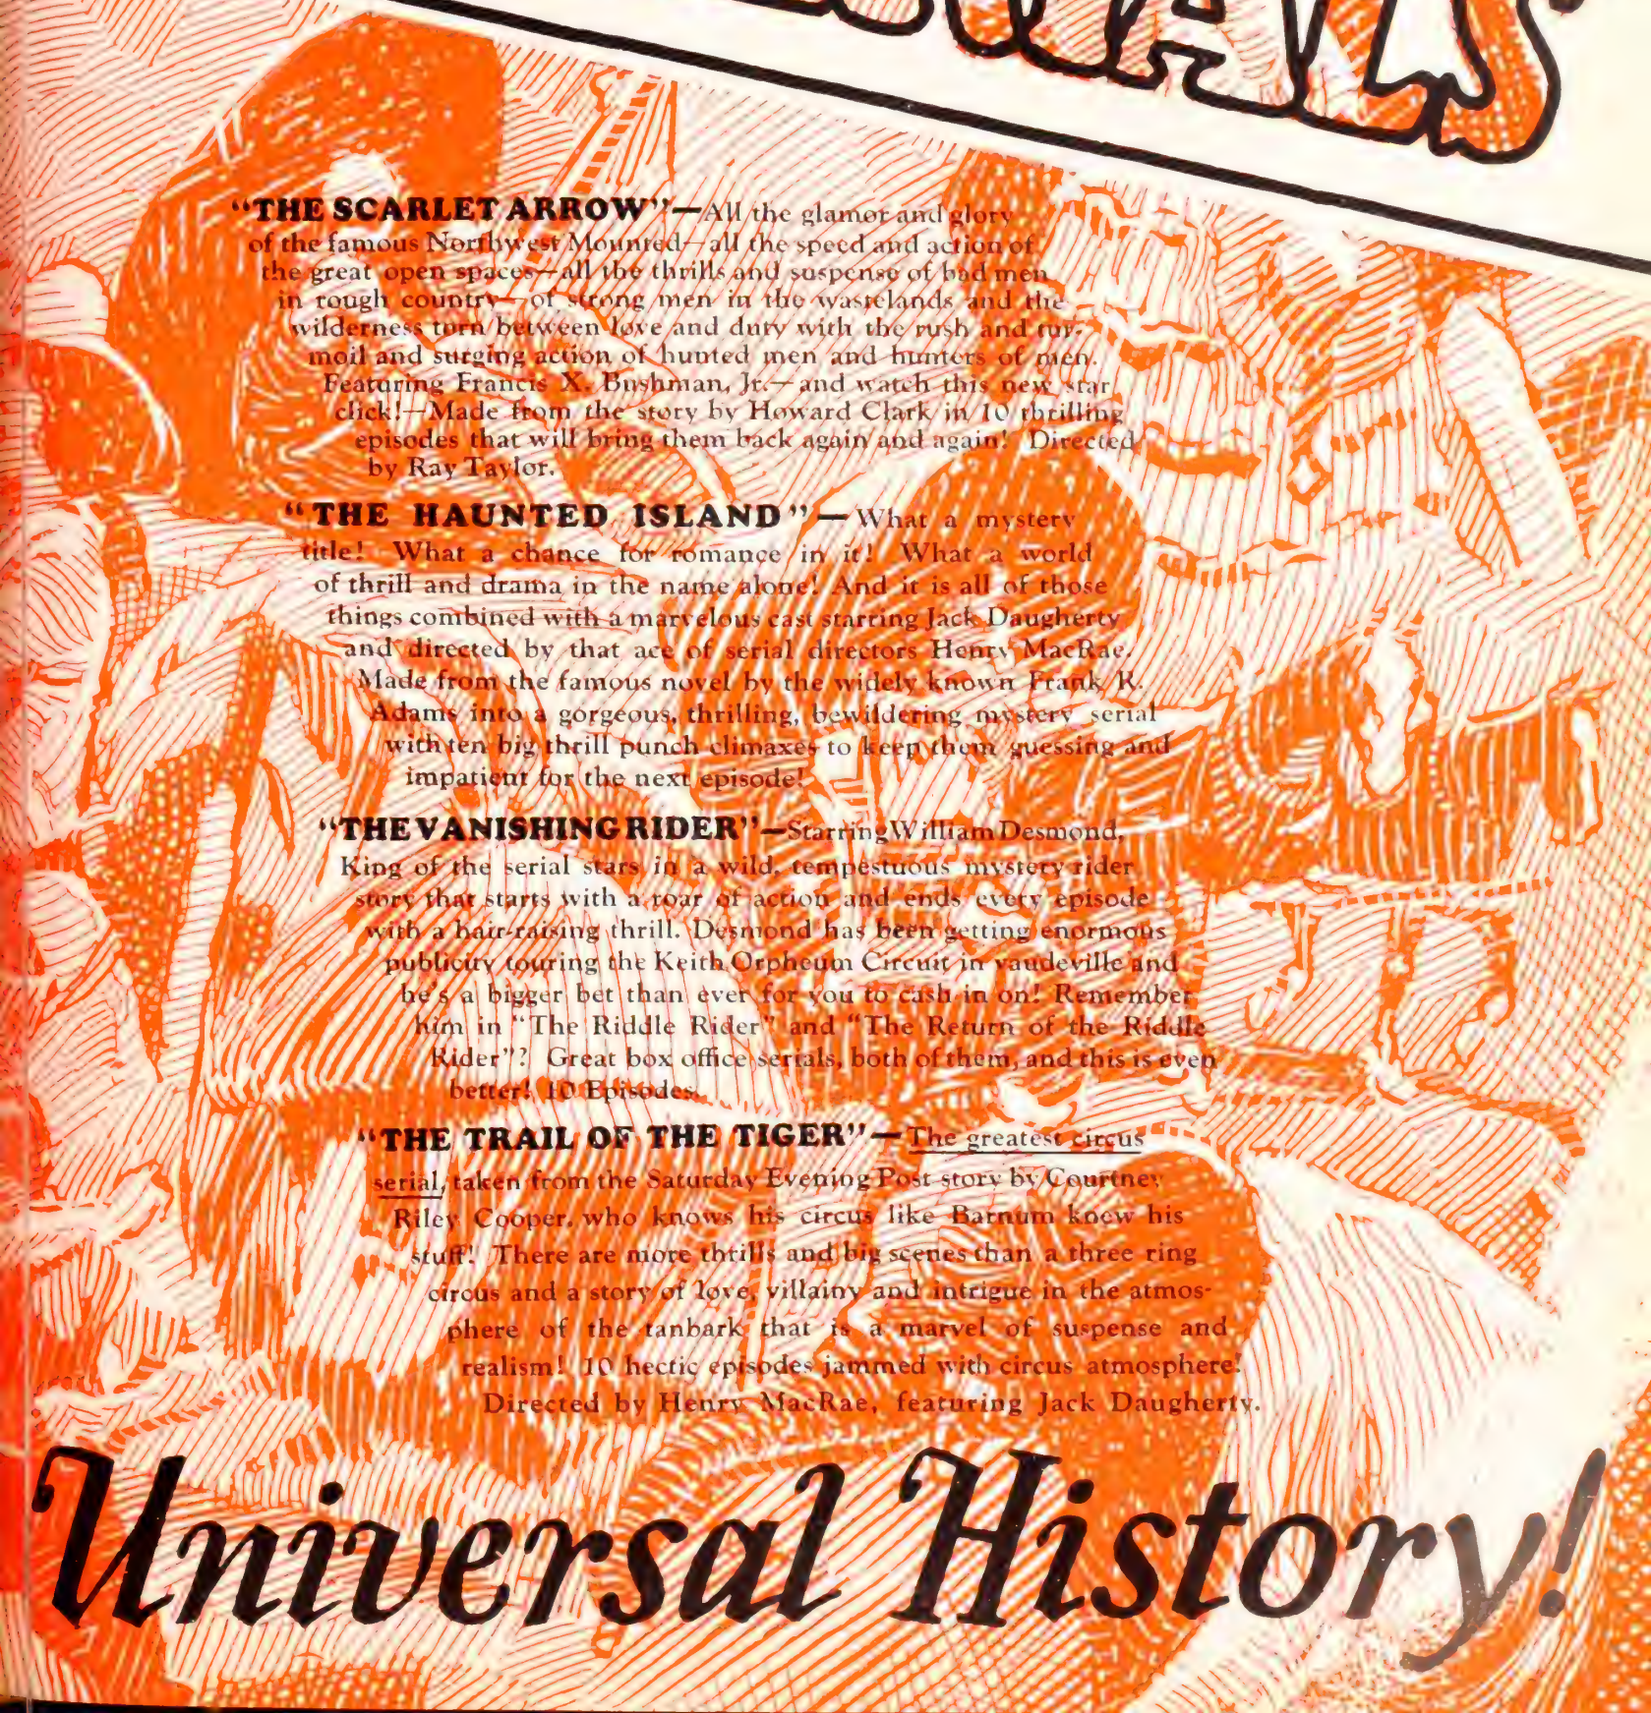
FIRST

SUSPENSE! Action! Thrills! Story value! Direction! BLAKE of SCOTLAND YARD has them all PLUS production value that you generally find in only the biggest features.

And NOW we tell you that the four other serials completing this new series—"THE SCARLET ARROW"—"THE VANISHING RIDER"—"THE HAUNTED ISLAND" and "THE TRAIL OF THE TIGER"—are fit companions to the first super serial ever made! Front runners every one! They represent the best serials that money, players, able direction and motion picture brains could put together, and we got the best stories money could buy to give us the right kind of material to work with.



They are ready now, and when you see them—well, CLASS—BOX OFFICE Class sticks out all over them! They are there, and you can bet your bankroll there'll be no empty seats when you show any one of them. They've got "kick"—the grown-up kind of "kick" that every one of your patrons will appreciate, from the schoolboy and girl to their mothers and fathers. Honest Injun! At last the FIRST-RUN serial is here! Five of them from Universal!

The Greatest Thrills in

"Blake of Scotland Yard"

is only one of Universal's

RUN SERIALS

"THE SCARLET ARROW"—All the glamor and glory of the famous Northwest Mounted—all the speed and action of the great open spaces—all the thrills and suspense of bad men in rough country—of strong men in the wastelands and the wilderness torn between love and duty with the rush and turmoil and surging action of hunted men and hunters of men. Featuring Francis X. Bushman, Jr.—and watch this new star click!—Made from the story by Howard Clark in 10 thrilling episodes that will bring them back again and again! Directed by Ray Taylor.

"THE HAUNTED ISLAND"—What a mystery title! What a chance for romance in it! What a world of thrill and drama in the name alone! And it is all of those things combined with a marvelous cast starring Jack Daugherty and directed by that ace of serial directors Henry MacRae. Made from the famous novel by the widely known Frank R. Adams into a gorgeous, thrilling, bewildering mystery serial with ten big thrill punch climaxes to keep them guessing and impatient for the next episode!

"THE VANISHING RIDER"—Starring William Desmond. King of the serial stars in a wild, tempestuous mystery rider story that starts with a roar of action and ends every episode with a hair-raising thrill. Desmond has been getting enormous publicity touring the Keith Orpheum Circuit in vaudeville and he's a bigger bet than ever for you to cash in on! Remember him in "The Riddle Rider" and "The Return of the Riddle Rider"? Great box office serials, both of them, and this is even better! 10 Episodes.

"THE TRAIL OF THE TIGER"—The greatest circus serial, taken from the Saturday Evening Post story by Courtney Riley Cooper, who knows his circus like Barnum knew his stuff! There are more thrills and big scenes than a three ring circus and a story of love, villainy and intrigue in the atmosphere of the tanbark that is a marvel of suspense and realism! 10 hectic episodes jammed with circus atmosphere! Directed by Henry MacRae, featuring Jack Daugherty.

European Film Notes

Reported to the Department of Commerce by Trade Commissioner G. R. Canty, Paris

A big patriotic and moral film entitled "Pour le Roi," will be produced in Belgium in April, it is reported. This film will be 5,000 meters long and its distribution is said to be nearly complete. The scenario conceives several historic pictures, a very original war history and finishes off with a travelogue of Belgium.

Cine-Documentaire, under the direction of Mr. Leon Ardouin, and with the collaboration of Mr. Henri Vorine, the film director and of Messrs. Louis Durieux, artistic director, and Roland Guerard, has undertaken to show, in a series of artistic and travel films, the various aspects of France.

Each film will recall the local history of one of the French regions and will show the public, by means of a scenario, especially written for each district, the most picturesque corners of the country. Part of each film will be colored. Mr. Ardouin is returning from Britany where he shot a number of exteriors, notably at Saint Pol-de-Leon and at Landernau.

The Municipal Council of Luxemburg, in a meeting held on February 26, last, voted 16 to 8 to rent the city theatre for cinema exhibition during the time when there will be no theatrical presentations. The booking will be done by public submission. The company in question has offered to pay 50,000 francs for rent.

Emelka has acquired the Munich Film Palast. With the three theatres belong-to Kommerzieurat Kraus, Emelka has now five picture houses in Munich which total 3,160 seats. The latter figure will be increased by 700 seats when the reconstruction of the Kammerlichtspiele is finished.

In Czechoslovakia there were exhibited in 1926, 1792 films with 1,863,069 meters of length, of which number 902 were American, 343 German, 131 French, 22 Austrian, 11 Italian, 23 Scandinavian, 7 Russian, 15 English, 1 Palestine, 1 Dutch, 1 Swiss, and 245 Czechoslovak. The censor prohibited 58 films, and 821 films out of 1,702 were especially authorized for exhibition to children.

There was organized recently at Warsaw an association of Polish film directors and operators, whose membership is open also to film architects, painters, artists and technicians.

Norwegian production is beginning to improve, according to reports from that country. The capital of Norway has 15 picture theatres which are all exploited directly by the city. The last films that have been shown are, "Denuye Leusemanden," which had not the expected success; "Baldevin Bryilupp" marking some progress; "Brudefergen i Hartanger," and "Glade euke i Traugvik," a well executed comedy, featuring Grangsholt, de Lilla Carlson, and Holst Jansen. This is said to be the best Norwegian production to date and the public accorded it a good reception. French films are still rare on Norwegian screen.

Lasky's Declaration of Independence Read at Convention

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president in charge of production for Paramount, fired a broadside at those who would inflict their own egos upon the film industry, at the expense of entertainment values and production costs, in a stirring address at the annual international convention of the company in New York this week. Highlights of his talk follow:

"Since its birth years ago the motion picture business has been at various times the creature of many masters—monopolists, trade combinations, fanatic reformers, temperamental artists, exorbitant costs. . . . We have conquered and beaten all of the evils that beset our business. . . . We are no longer their slaves to be bullied and beaten about. We are their masters. . . .

"There was a time, not so long ago, when the public either had no voice or was indifferent to what we were trying to accomplish. . . . Today the public knows pictures—it is picture-wise, picture-conscious—and it quickly and emphatically registers its likes and dislikes at that greatest of all forums, the greatest of all testing-grounds, the box office. . . .

"We have been making pictures, for instance, for various high priced and unreasonable stars, also directors whose names and reputations were a mirage rather than a reality. We have been making pictures for certain groups, who we thought voiced the public demand. We have been making pictures for theorizing critics. We have been making pictures for ourselves . . . for nearly everybody and everything except the men and women and children who pay their money at the box-office.

"Today, however . . . we can tell stars, directors, intriguers, critics, that we are in the business of making Paramount Pictures, and making them our way, to suit the public, and that if they don't like it they can get out. . . .

"No matter who the star is, no matter how famous the director, we can now tell him to deliver—and deliver our way—or get out. And, as corollary to that, no matter how obscure the person, no matter how youthful, if he has that talent we want, we welcome him and give him every opportunity to make good. . . .

"What has been one big result of that policy? It's this: To several well known players and directors we gave opportunities and resources that necessarily were withheld from others. These . . could not reconcile their own aims to our conception of service to the public. They were allowed to go. What happened? These opportunities were given to others. . . .

"So you see that while we are building with youth and courage and ideas, we are not afraid to scrap the old faces whose only appeal is the dubious lure of tradition. . . . Let them go over the hill to that other group which thinks that the motion picture art is shown best in the entertainment of foreign nobility; which thinks that the praise of critics is the voice of the people.

"What I mean is this: In the last year or so a little group of people who gather charmingly about their tea tables in Hollywood trying to warm themselves in the setting sun of their fame, have fomented propaganda against the men and women in our studios who have been working night and day to turn out pictures that will meet the response of the great public. . . . We know what we are doing, and we are going ahead at our task serene and undisturbed. When a star or director is discharged by us, always remember that it is our policy to let that person do the talking. . . .

"No, gentlemen, it has taken us a long time to get to it, but it is the picture—the picture, and nothing but the picture, which spells success. And we don't purpose to have the success of that picture's production jeopardized by high-priced bolsheviks whose fame is so hollow that it bursts at the first touch of intelligent scrutiny.

"We have the situation of production costs licked. We know now that we shall remain within our production budget this coming year. . . . This is not a spectacular victory. . . . But to me it is the most important victory that our producing organization has ever won."

Universal Lists Cast for New Pictures

Star and Directors Named For Coming Big Gun Jewels; Players Designated for Other Product

CASTS for a large number of Universal pictures now in work or completed for the new season were announced this week. The Universal line-up of new season product, by titles, stars and directors was carried in a news article in the issue of April 8.

"Hot Heels," cast headed by Patsy Ruth Miller, with Glenn Tryon, Charles Girard, George Fawcett, Francis Ford, George French, and Cuyler Supplee; William Craft directing.

Al Wilson, air-devil, is now on his fourth of a series of five features. Having already completed "Sky High Saunders," "Three Miles Up," and "The Phantom Flyer," he is now working on "The Air Patrol," under the direction of Bruce Mitchell, with a cast including Elsa Benham, Monte Montague, Art Goebel and Frank Clark.

Dynamite, the Belgian police dog star, is working on "The Hound of Silver Creek," in which Edmund Cobb, Gloria Gray, Gladden James, "Red" Jones and Frank Rice play important roles. Completed pictures of this group of five are "The Four Footed Ranger," "Wolf's Trail" and "The Fangs of Destiny." Stuart Paton is directing the current one.

Ted Wells is now making "Frontier Courage," under the direction of Willy Wyler, with a cast including the Universal Ranch Riders and Al Ferguson, Lillian Gillmore, Buck Connors and others.

Fred Humes has a cast including Dorothy Gulliver, Robert MacKenzie, Francis Ford, George French and Cuyler Supplee in his current production, "The Arizona Cyclone," directed by Edgar Lewis.

Casts are now being assembled for "Painted Ponies," to be Hoot Gibson's first Jewel Production for next year, in which Barbara Kent will play the leading feminine role; "Buck Privates," to be directed by Mel Brown, and "Betty's a Lady," a Jewel in which Charles Ray has just been engaged to play the leading role. James Gleason also is signed up for this cast. The picture will be directed by James Flood.

Universal is picking stars and players for two Super Pictures, "The Man Who Laughs" and "The Big Gun." The stars of these two productions are likely to be Conrad Veidt and George Lewis respectively. Casting for "Showboat," the Edna Ferber story will not be undertaken for a month or so yet. Norman Kerry and Mary Philbin are suggested for the principal roles.

Halperin Bros. Firm of Production Engineers

EDWARD and Victor Halperin, producers, who have made more than twenty pictures during the past twenty years, have formed a company under the name of Halperin Brothers, Production Engineers. The Halperins declare that the purpose of their company is to handle the production of features from the time the story is bought, through its filming and into the final stages of exploitation. Before a story is produced, it is stated, it will be analyzed from the showmanship angles of screen adaptability, negative cost, suitability to a star, advertising value of circulation in book, magazine and newspaper form.

Both of the Halperins are now in New York where they are using the Cosmopolitan studio for the production of "Dance Magic," a forthcoming First National picture which they are producing in conjunction with Robert Kane.

"7th Heaven" Has World Premiere at Fred Miller's Carthay Circle, May 6

ON the night of May 6, the William Fox production of John Golden's stage success, "7th Heaven," was given its premiere showing at the Carthay Circle Theatre, Fred Miller's Los Angeles motion picture palace. No date has as yet been decided upon for the showing of the picture elsewhere. It was originally planned to have the world premiere in Paris, the scene of the story, but the plan fell through and Mr. Fox decided on the Carthay Circle as was done in the case of "What Price Glory." The run at the Carthay is indefinite and is at the top price of $1.65. A special presentation to accompany the picture was staged by Mr. Miller.

Kennedy Outlines F. B. O. Films for New Season

A series starring Ranger, the dogster, are also listed, including "Ranger of the North," "The Breed of Courage," "The Call of the Night," "The Blood Trail," "The Call of the Pack" and "The Swift Shadow."

The short subject schedule for the new season has assumed more imposing proportions than usual. Included among the short reel offerings are:

"The Beauty Parlor" series, H. C. Witwer's latest contribution of two reelers, in which Al Cooke and Kit Guard will play prominent roles.

A series of Mickey McGuire two reelers, in which Mickey McGuire, the principal character in Fontaine Fox's series of Toonerville cartoons, will play the leading role, are scheduled. It is probable that Frankie Darro, the child star, will play the part of Mickey.

A series of 26 one-reel "Newslaffs, travesties on the news events of the day, will be made by "Bill" Nolan, creator of the Krazy Kat cartoons. The "Newslaff" will be produced by a new cartoon photographic process on which Nolan has been working for the past year, and which has now been perfected.

Included in the comedies is a series of Standard Fat Men Comedies, featuring "Fat" Karr, "Fatty" Alexander and "Kewpie" Ross. Also included is a series of "Whirlwind" comedies.

Telegrams were received from Jack L. Warner who was unable to be present owing to production activity, Herman Starr who is in Europe, and Louis Warner.

Before the convention adjourned, Sam E. Morris announced the appointment of George Balsdon, Jr., as New York Division Manager to succeed Arthur Abeles, and the appointment of Jack Levy to succeed Balsdon in the New Jersey territory.

Voters of Lake Crystal, Minn., Defeat Blues

At a recent election in Lake Crystal, Minn., voters badly defeated the proposal to close motion picture theatres on Sunday.

Earle Fox Signs for Five Years With Fox

Earle Fox has affixed his name on a five year contract with the Fox Film Corporation to appear in pictures of that organization as a featured player during that period. For the past two or three years he has been starring in the Van Bibber comedies which Fox Films has been producing. Within the last six months he has appeared in two features, "Upstream" and "A Slave of Beauty." By reason of the new contract he has been definitely elevated to the ranks of a featured player in leading roles.

Eastern Exhibitors to be Represented at Convention

The M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, will have a representation of about ten exhibitors at the national convention to be held in Columbus, Ohio, in June. The delegation will include Lewen Pizor, president; Nate Appell, of York, vice-president, Mike Landow, Philadelphia, treasurer, George P. Aarons, secretary and counsel; and Charles H. Goodwin, chairman of the board of managers.

Select Philly Location for New Tiffany Exchange

Tiffany Productions, Inc., states that the new Tiffany exchange established in Philadelphia will be located at 1313 Vine Street. Al Blofson has been appointed manager of the Philadelphia territory by General Sales Manager Edwin J. Smith and has been placed in charge of the selling of the Tiffany product for the new season in Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware. Tiffany has also established an exchange at 926 New Jersey Avenue, N. W. in Washington, D. C., with R. R. Palmer and Milton Caplon in charge.

Blaze Ravages Grand in Mexico, Missouri

The Grand Theatre, Mexico, Mo., was swept by fire at 4 a.m., April 29, the loss being placed at $50,000. An adjoining furniture store, the building of the Mexico Ledger and some residences were also damaged by the flames, the total damage being estimated at $90,000. The cause of the fire has not been definitely ascertained.

Jetta Goudal Signs New De Mille Contract

JETTA GOUDAL, star of "White Gold," has signed a new contract with the De Mille studio, for an extensive period. Immediate plans call for the French actress to star in three or four pictures during 1927. Miss Goudal was signed by De Mille two years ago; after several pictures she was elevated to stardom and has been featured in two other productions beside "White Gold," "Her Man o' War" and "Fighting Love." Several stories are now being considered for her.

Loew's Net Near 4 Million in Twenty-Eight Period Ending March 13th

AN earned net profit of $3,887,654 is shown by Loew's, Inc., in the twenty-eight week period ending March thirteen. The operating profit during that period was $5,544,223 from which is deducted $1,656,569 for depreciation and taxes.

The Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corp. in that same period reports a net profit before deducting income taxes of $1,974,178. Its consolidated statement follows: Gross profit, $4,594,161; less, operating expenses, $3,076,540; operating profit, $1,517,621; miscellaneous income, $456,557; net profit (before income taxes), $1,974,178.

Hays Chairman F & R Board

Also Heads Public Relations Department of Circuit; Finkelstein Denies Part Sale to Publix

THEODORE L. HAYS, veteran general manager of the Northwest Theatres (Finkelstein and Ruben), has been named chairman of the executive board and head of the newly created department of public relations, in a reorganization of the firm which brings Harold Finkelstein and Edmund Ruben into the foreground in operation of the chain of 131 theatres. Harold Finkelstein is to be general manager of the circuit, with Edmund Ruben in charge of film buying in the realignment decided upon by the founders of the circuit, M. L. Finkelstein and I. H. Ruben, who, henceforth, will act in an advisory capacity.

The executive board, headed by Hays, is to be made up of the various department heads who will meet on designated days of the week, with Hays as chairman, to discuss plans for increasing efficiency. Hays, in addition, will have charge of community contact, labor contact, insurance, taxes and various activities.

M. L. Finkelstein has denied rumors to the effect that Northwest Theatres, Inc. (Finkelstein & Ruben), had sold a quarter interest in their holdings to Publix although he says that there have been negotiations. F. & R. prefer for the present at least to operate without any affiliations and intends to build up its circuit by continued acquisition of theatres and construction of others.

The lastest theatres in the Northwest to be purchased by Finkelstein & Ruben are the Colonial and Photoplay at Watertown, S. D. This brings the total houses to 131 as a couple of weeks ago the Egyptian and Orpheum in Sioux Falls were taken over by F. & R. In this latter city the State and Strand were already owned by this company and all four theatres will now be under the management of Jay Dundas.

Cubberley Prosperity Plan

Theatre Manager for Northwest Devises Means of Aiding Community and Securing Publicity

J. F. CUBBERLEY, manager of Northwest Theatres houses located outside the Twin Cities is perfecting a plan for building good will while boosting box-office receipts which is applicable to farming sections in any part of the United States.

Realizing the importance to the Northwest of diversified farming, he intends this summer to conduct stock-raising contests for school children in every key center in which the circuit has representation, so that his campaign will blanket Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

Winners are to be brought to the Minnesota state fair, and there awarded prizes. Blooded stock then is to be purchased by the theater company and either auctioned at cost or awarded as prizes, depending on final plans, in the various key centers.

Thus, he assures all-summer exploitation for the firm's houses, in addition to which the theatre circuit will be instrumental in bettering the grade of stock throughout the Northwest, as well as increasing stock raising, to the immense benefit of the section, which heretofore has been hard hit because of the predominance of wheat raising. With the contest to be an annual affair, it should add materially to the prosperity of the three states and will command the co-operation of associations throughout the Northwest, interested in bettering the farmer's prosperity.

In and Out of Town

M. H. HOFFMAN, vice-president of Tiffany Productions, Inc., is expected in [illegible] two months preparing the Tiffany schedule of production for the 1927-28 season.

[illegible] manager for First National Pictures, returned Thursday, April 28, after a three and a half weeks' trip through his territory. He was [illegible] Western district manager. Among the towns visited were Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, [illegible]

Incandescent Lighting Being Used at M-G-M on All Interiors of Gish Films

INCANDESCENT lighting, as developed in experiments by Maude Adams and Dr. Nutting, is being given one of its most thorough tests at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in the production of "The Wind," Lillian Gish's latest vehicle. All interior scenes in the picture are being filmed with the use of the incandescent lights instead of the usual hard lights, or arcs.

John Arnold, the cameraman in charge, who, with Victor Seastrom, the director, worked out the application of the method, reports better results in photography with less current consumption, an absolutely steady light, perfectly controllable and making it impossible for the actors to develop Klieg eyes. The players, too, report considerable satisfaction with the innovation.

The method was developed by Miss Adams and Dr. Nutting in experiments over a period of years, and was later made available for general use through General Electric. Several companies have tried it on a single production, and there is reason to believe that it will ultimately become an important factor in studio operation.

Theatre Chains Acquire and Build New Houses

Famous Active in Canada; Stanley Gets Three Each in Jersey and Pennsylvania

FAMOUS Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, has undertaken the construction of two more theatres in Western Canada, the new Capitol at Nelson, B. C., and also the Capitol at New Westminster, B. C. The corporation already operates the Starland in Nelson, where J. P. Pitner is the resident manager and he will have charge of the new house there.

The Stanley Company of America has taken over the Embassy Theatre, Baltimore, the Strand, Shenandoah, Pa., and the Savoy, Bethlehem, Pa., which were operated by Len Berman, who formerly held the Warner Bros. and later the Columbia franchises in the Philadelphia territory.

Stanley-Fabian has entered the Jersey field, purchasing a 50 per cent interest in the Wellmont, Montclair and Bellevue, owned by the Montclair Amusement Co., headed by H. H. Wellbrink. Vaudeville will be added at the 2,400-seat Wellmont, while the Montclair, a combination house, is to be renovated and play only pictures.

A $3,250,000 merger, involving theatres, improvements and new buildings in Cleveland, Akron, Canton, and Mansfield was completed last week when the Silverman-Ohio Theatres Company, and the M. S. Fine and A. Kramer interests of Cleveland united to form the Variety Amusement Company.

The deal includes four theatres outside of Cleveland valued at $1,250,000, one Cleveland theatre now operating, one nearing completion, two to be built in Cleveland during the next year and one theatre site, totaling a sum estimated at $2,000,000.

The theatres outside of Cleveland include the Strand, Akron, Alhambra, Canton; Opera House and Majestic, Mansfield. Cleveland houses include the Shaw-Hayden and Wind-A-Meer, which were owned by the Silverman-Ohio Theatres Company, controlled by Jacob and Isaac Silverman of Altoona, Pa. Fine and Kramer own the Princess theatre and are heavily interested in others. Messrs. Fine and Kramer were formerly connected with the Ohio Amusement Company.

The new company is made up of Fine, Kramer, Jacob and Isaac Silverman, and Sam H. Stecher, real estate man and theatre promoter. The Midwest Properties Company, headed by Stecher, will erect all the new theatres for the company. The officers plan to acquire between fifteen and twenty other Cleveland theatres during the coming year. The Variety theatre, the first of the houses to be built, before the first of next year, will be located on St. Clair Ave., between East 105th and East 106th Streets, and will have one acre of seats, representing a capacity of more than 3,000. This will be a neighborhood house. Plans for this house call for the widest lobby in Cleveland, a new type ramp construction which will eliminate balcony stairways, and parking facilities for more than 300 cars. White terra cotta used in Gothic architectural design has been specified.

The Union Square theatre, East 114th Street and Union Avenue, now in course of construction, with 1,800 seats, will open May 15th. Another new theatre will be erected during the year on the West Side at Lorain Avenue and West 118th Street, with a seating capacity of 2,200.

Officers of the Variety Amusement Company, Inc., are Jacob Silverman, president; M. S. Fine, vice-president, and Isaac Silverman, secretary-treasurer. S. H. Stecher is president of the Midwest Properties Company, with Fine as vice-president and Isaac Silverman as secretary-treasurer.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, announced in Kansas City this week that a large first run house would be built by Universal in Kansas City in the near future.

John and Peter Sinopoulo and Tom H. Boland and their associates announced recently that they would erect a new $1,000,000 theatre on West Main Street, Oklahoma City, in the very near future. It is claimed that this theatre will be the finest and costliest in the entire Southwest and will embody all the recently developed features of architecture and building.

Boriskey Plans Circuit for Chattanooga Suburbs

S. H. Boriskey, vice-president of Independent Theatres, Inc., which now controls four theatres in Chattanooga, announces plans for the organization of Community Theatres, Inc., a corporation to operate community motion picture houses in the suburbs of Chattanooga. The company will either erect the theatres or lease them from property owners on a long term basis; the contemplated circuit of nine theatres will be completed within the year, it is thought. The first theatre of the chain, now under construction, will be built on the Southeast corner of McCallie Avenue and Willow Street and it will be followed by other theatres in Alton Park, East Lake, St. Elmo and North Chattanooga. Each house will seat about 600 and will represent an investment of approximately $40,000. The company will have an initial capitalization of $25,000. Papers of incorporation will be filed during the week. Incorporators are S. H. Boriskey, A. Solomon, J. Schwartz, A. H. Boriskey and Phil Whitaker.

Dr. Bausback Resigns as Head of Ufa Interests

Dr. Ferdinand Bausback, the head of Ufa, has resigned from that position—a move which has been foreseen for some time, according to H. Fraenkel, Berlin correspondent of The News. He has been with Ufa for exactly one year, and will return to the Deutsche Bank directorate, from which he came. A number of other changes in personnel are expected. Six prominent executives have resigned during the past few days.

Florida Showmen Menaced by Sunday Closing

MOTION picture theatres of Florida will find their revenue seriously curtailed if the Sunday closing law proposed late last week by Representative Getzen of Bushell succeeds in passing. An equally undesirable feature of the same bill is a clause proposing a 10 per cent tax on admissions. The measure is aimed not only at theatres, but circuses, carnivals and other amusements of like nature.

The bill provides that the bulk of the moneys accruing from the proposed tax levy shall go to the county school fund. Religious, charitable, educational organizations and school shows are exempt, as are towns under a 2,000 population.

Geo. Reisner, Popular Film Man in Northwest, Dead

Exhibitors and film men of the Northwest were shocked last week to learn of the death of George Reisner, one of the oldest and most popular showmen of this territory, owner and manager of a string of houses in Raymond and South Bend, Washington. Mr. Reisner, a brother of Chuck Reisner of Warner Brothers fame, has been in the theatre business in this state for twenty-one years, and in addition was a director of the First National Bank of Raymond.

Two Releases From Lumas During Month of May

The feature releases that will come from Lumas Film Corporation during May are two, one a Gotham production titled "Sinews of Steel," and the other a William Fairbanks production of wrestling, "Catch as Catch Can." Alberta Vaughn is the featured player in "Sinews of Steel," which is the tenth of the dozen Gothams scheduled for 1926-27. Appearing with Fairbanks in "Catch as Catch Can" is George Katsonaros; the picture also concerns politics besides athletics.

First National Sets "Lost at the Front" for May

"Lost at the Front," First National's new comedy vehicle for Charlie Murray and George Sidney, will be substituted for "The Sunset Derby," as the First National release for the latter part of May. The picture is a Frank Griffin production and was directed by Del Lord. Natalie Kingston is the chief lady in the east, and others are John Kolb, Max Asher, Brooks Benedict, Ed Brady, Harry Lipman, Nita Martan and Nina Romano.

Lon Chaney a Russian Peasant in New Film

Lon Chaney will appear as a Russian moujik or peasant in "Terror," a story by Stig Esbern that deals with the Siberian Red Revolution of 1917. Benjamin Christianson will direct the picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Bradley King is now engaged on the continuity, and according to the latest word from the producing plant in Culver City actual work on the new drama of revolt will begin within a fortnight.

"My Best Girl" Title of New Pickford Picture

"MY BEST GIRL" has been chosen by Mary Pickford as the final title of her newest United Artists picture which will be directed by Sam Taylor. Kathleen Norris wrote the story—that of a five-and-ten-cent store girl's romance. Miss Pickford announced this week from Hollywood her choice for the role of leading man of Charles (Buddy) Rogers, a graduate of the Paramount School of Acting. William Haines was given a similar opportunity two years ago in a Pickford film, "Little Annie Rooney."

$1,500,000,000 Now Invested in Motion Pictures Industry, Bankers Report

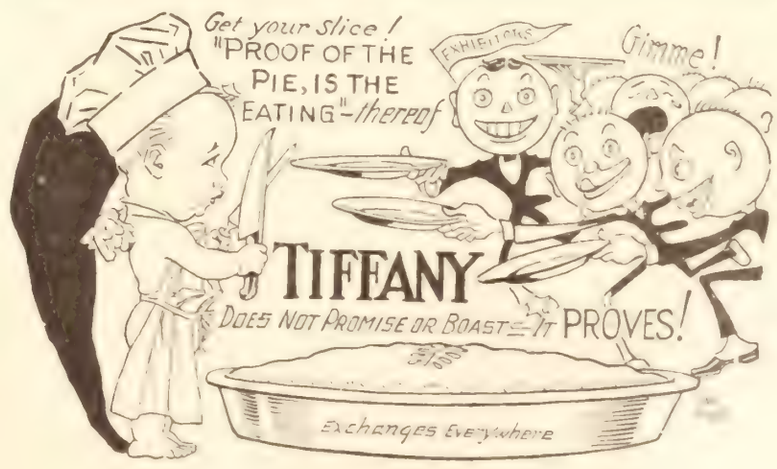
THE motion picture industry now ranks as the fourth largest in the United States and represents an investment of about $1,500,000,000, of which $1,250,000,000 is in theatres and the balance in studios and distributing offices, according to Edward B. Smith, & Co., the bankers who recently engineered the $100,000,000 combine of the Stanley Company of America, First National Pictures and West Coast Theatres.

"Fifteen years ago there was hardly a respectable bank in the country which would consider lending the industry money," the bankers point out in an analysis just completed, "and it is only during the past nine years or so that friendly relationships have been established between the banks and the industry, as in any other seasoned business. In 1925 ten companies earned over $24,000,000, while in 1926 five companies earned more than this amount.

"The manufacture of raw film has created an industry in itself. The Eastman Kodak Company makes some 200,000 miles of film yearly and uses three tons of silver bullion a week, being the largest consumer in the country after the government mint."

Produces Most Raw Film

Recently Merged Kodak-Pathe Company Manufactures Seventy-Five Percent of Stock Utilized



THE manufacture of 75 per cent of all raw film used in the world will eventually be placed in the same hands through the recent merger of the Kodak and Pathe raw stock interests. This will be brought about when financial details of the merger are settled and the new alignment becomes operative as one unit. At present, 60 per cent of the world's output is manufactured by Kodak, 20 per cent is accredited to the German Agfa concern and 15 per cent to Pathe.

Complete financial details of the amalgamation are unavailable and remain to be definitely settled. All that is known is that Kodak (France) and Pathe Cinema, likewise a French unit, will unite to form a Kodak-Pathe Co., with Kodak holding 51 per cent of the stock. This new company will acquire and operate the Pathe plant which manufactures motion picture and photographic stock. It is located at Vincennes, on the outskirts of Paris.

Pathe Cinema, however, retains its interest in the Pathe-Baby projector, which is manufactured at Jouville, as well as in the Pathe-Rural Co. The latter will soon develop a network of [illegible] enterprises throughout the rural districts of France, all using a special narrow-width film, intermediate between the regulation size and the Baby stock.

The Pathe works at Vincennes are equipped to produce non-inflam stock in large quantities and under a French law of recent date, the use of this film will become obligatory in France after January 1, 1928. Since this law has been postponed many times, further postponement is practically impossible.

The new Kodak-Pathe company will not, however, confine its activities to France. One of the important sales policies of the company will be to develop throughout Europe, including Germany and Russia. At present, 50 per cent of all film used in Russia is supplied by Germans. The Germans are also active along these lines in Scandinavia, Central Europe, Italy and elsewhere. Kodak is already taking steps to develop its business in these countries.

Chas. Hutchinson in Pathe's "Pirates of the Sky"

Charles Hutchinson, former Pathe serial star, is again a featured player in a film bearing the Pathe rooster trademark. This time he is co-featured with Wanda Hawley in "Pirates of the Sky," a feature announced for release on May 22. Assisting players include Crauford Kent and Jimmy Aubrey.

Aileen Dee, Has Role in "Slaves of Beauty"

Aileen Dee, of Calgary, Canada, overturned precedent when, having arrived in Los Angeles from Honolulu and being stationed in the motion picture centre for about one day only, she succeeded in penetrating the studio gates and landing a position as one of the principal actresses in Director J. G. Blystone's unit producing "Slaves of Beauty." Miss Dee has returned to Canada to assemble a wardrobe and will come back to Hollywood to assume a screen career. Appearing with her in "Slaves of Beauty" are Earle Fox, Olive Tell, Margaret Livingston and Holmes Herbert.

"After Midnight" New Title of Shearer Film

The title of Norma Shearer's new vehicle to come from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, formerly called "Liberty Bonds," has had a change of title and is now entitled "After Midnight." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer intend to put the picture in work in the near future under Monta Bell's direction.

Cody-Pringle Film Titled "Adam and Eve"

The new title for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer comedy drama starring Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle is "Adam and Eve." The picture went into production several weeks under the working title of "His Brother from Brazil."

First National Has Four Ready for Fitzmaurice

AMONG the several stories agreed upon by First National for forthcoming George Fitzmaurice productions are four stories which are awaiting picturization at the hands of the director. "The Rose of Montery," from Minna Smith and Eugene Woodward's story is to be made into a special with Mary Astor and Lewis Stone in featured roles, while "Louisiana," adapted from "The Barber of New Orleans," Edward Childe Carpenter's play, and "The Barker," the current Broadway play by Kenyon Nicholson, will also give the director opportunities to display his hand.

The Joseph M. Schenck organization is preparing "Breakfast Before Sunrise," from Andre Briabeau's "Un Dejeneur de Soleil," as a vehicle for Constance Talmadge.

Three Fox Players to Come East for Dwan

GEORGE O'BRIEN, Virginia Valli and J. Farrell MacDonald are scheduled to arrive in New York from The West Coast on May 26 to start work in "East Side, West Side," the picturization of the Felix Riesenberg novel which Allan Dwan will direct at the New York studio, beginning about the first of June, when it is surmised that the scenario and continuity will be ready. The director, himself, is reported to be working on the treatment of the story. A number of New York's celebrated sections will have a part in the story. Arthur Cozins will be assistant to Mr. Dwan.

"Children of the Ritz" Wins Story Contest

Cornell Woolrich, twenty-one years of age, who had already published one New York novel, "Cover Charge," has been adjudged the winner of the $10,000 prize story contest instituted by College Humor and by First National Pictures, Inc., which will make a feature photoplay from the story. The title of the prize-winning novel is "Children of the Ritz."

The judges of the contest were H. N. Swanson, editor of College Humor; John McCormick, West Coast production manager for First National and Florence Strauss, First National's scenario editor.

"Children of the Ritz" will appear in College Humor, beginning with the issue of August, 1927.

Fairbanks Names Female Leads for "The Gaucho"

The leading feminine roles in "The Gaucho," Douglas Fairbanks' next production for United Artists, will be played by Eve Southern, a blonde, and Lupita Velez, a brunette, both newcomers to the screen. The former is under contract to Edwin Carewe, and appeared in that director's "Resurrection." Hal Roach has Senorita Velez under contract; she has played in one of the comedy producers' comedies, following her arrival in Los Angeles from Mexico City last January. Fairbanks says that he will begin camera work on "The Gaucho" on June 1 at the Hollywood studio of United Artists.

Extended Run for "Annie Laurie" at Embassey

Lillian Gish's latest starring production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, "Annie Laurie," comes to New York next Wednesday evening, May 11, when it will open at the Embassey Theatre for an extended run. The new film presents the actress in a role quite different from her previous efforts as the scene is laid in Scotland and Miss Gish interprets the part of a Highland lassie. Norman Kerry is her leading man. "Annie Laurie" was directed by John S. Robertson.

Lytell Signed for "Alias the Lone Wolf"

Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of production for Columbia Pictures, has signed Bert Lytell to appear in "Alias the Lone Wolf," listed on the company's line-up for the new year. Columbia intends to surround Lytell with a capable cast of supporting players and to entrust the production to some prominent director.

Exchange System for Vitaphone in Mid-West

Intending to collect information relative to the opening of a system of exchanges for Vitaphone Corporation, Paul Swift, a Vitaphone official, left Wednesday, May 4, for Chicago where he will open a branch office for his company and look over the field. Vitaphone opened its first district office in Los Angeles several months back. Mr. Swift was stationed with Paramount several years ago as general A.B.C. representative. He was also associated with the Warner Brothers outside of New York and was later called by the home office in which he worked as a member of the contract department. He entered into his present position with Vitaphone last fall.

Harry Carr Editorial Advisor at DeMille Studio

Harry Carr, who conducts "The Lancer," one of the editorial columns on the Pacific Coast, has been signed by the De Mille studio as editorial supervisor. He has been actively connected with the motion pictures for ten years, it is said, and has been associated with such producers as Sennett, Griffith, Stroheim and others in scenario work. He takes up his new duties at the DeMille studio at once in the capacity of editor and advisor of scenarios.

Milton Sills to Appear in "Hard-Boiled Haggerty"

Milton Sills next vehicle for First National will be "Hard-Boiled Haggerty," filming on which is scheduled to start within a week or ten days at the Burbank, California, studio. Wid Gunning will have charge of the production. Carey Wilson is doing the adaptation from a story, "Belated Evidence," by Elliott White Springs.

Roxy Radios "Clipper" Over WEAF

THE greater portion of the United States heard the one-hour program which Roxy and his gang broadcast from nine to ten o'clock, daylight saving time, Saturday night last, when "The Yankee Clipper," a production from the De Mille studio, opened at the Roxy on that day. The entertainment was heard directly from the theater's studio through a network of over nineteen stations and was perhaps the largest commercial radio hook-up that WEAF and its subsidiary stations have broadcasted. Mr. Rothafel prepared a special program for the occasion.

Educational Moving Into Paramount Bldg.

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., will move into its new offices in the Paramount Building (Times Square), 43rd St. and Broadway on Saturday, May 7. The company expects to be fully established in its new quarters on the 22nd floor by Monday, May 9. The moving from the present home office location at 370 Seventh Avenue will be done without any interruption to business. The offices will be established in first class shape in the Paramount Building in time for the arrival of executives returning the week of May 8 from Educational's annual convention in Los Angeles. The company will have the entire 3,000 square feet of floor space on the 22nd floor, which is served by six express elevators from the Paramount Building lobby that opens on Broadway and Seventh Avenue.

First National Purchases Two Stories

John McCormick, general West Coast production manager for First National, announces the acquisition by his company of two new stories. The motion picture rights to "The Code of the Northwest," a novel by Edward Childs Carpenter, and "The Barber of New Orleans," also by Carpenter, have been signed for. A contract was also entered into with Mann Page whereby the entire rights to his original story, "Three Cheers," are taken over by First National. Mr. Page will write the treatment of the story, the director and leading players of which have not yet been assigned.

Columbia's First May Release, "Poor Girls"

The first release that will come from Columbia Pictures during May is "Poor Girls," a drama of night life and night clubs. Edward Burns and Dorothy Revier are the featured stars and support comes from Ruth Stonehouse, Marjorie Bonner and Lloyd Whitlock. William James Craft directed from an original story by Sophie Bogen. The release date is May 5.

Key City Reports

New York City

AMUSEMENTS of all descriptions went into a heavy slump last week in New York, with "Chang" and "The King of Kings" as outstanding exceptions to the general depression. "Chang" has started off with a smash at the Rivoli, and with the word-of-mouth which this picture should accumulate it is pretty sure to be good for an extended run.

"The King of Kings" continues to sell standing room at most performances, and last week was no exception to this.

"Camille" at the Globe is off to good business, despite many predictions that it would not register as a two-dollar film.

The extended run attraction at the Rialto is "Children of Divorce," which does not seem likely to enjoy the run of some of its predecessors have had at this house.

The Roxy last week passed the million mark in attendance, after a little more than seven weeks' operation. Last week was not particularly strong on the second week of "Ankles Preferred."

The Capitol was fair last week, and the Strand moderately good.

Chicago

REPORTS coming in from all parts of Chicago indicate that Daylight Savings and unseasonable weather, combined, caused a decided slump. This, however, was more noticeable among the neighborhood houses than it was in the large de luxe theatres.

The Oriental as usual, topped the down town houses, "Lovers?", the feature, and Paul Ash in "Oh Teacher," bringing the usual capacity business to this house. At the Roosevelt "The Fire Brigade" got away to a normal business and "Slide, Kelly Slide" at McVickers continued to hold up in a satisfactory manner, although attendance was slightly off. At the Chicago, "Venus of Venice" on the screen, Spitalny's orchestral production, "Vagabond of Paris," and special stage production, "Milady's Perfumes" accounted for a normal business. At the Auditorium "Old Ironsides" helped by the large amount of publicity given the "Old Ironsides" renewal fund in Chicago press, continued to play to satisfactory crowds.

On the northside, the Granada had a good week with "The Little Adventuress" as the feature picture, the Vitaphone and Charles Kaley, the new singing director, leading the stage band. The Uptown also enjoyed good patronage, it being Bennie Kreuger's week to conduct his band at this house, and "Knockout Reilly" being the picture. At the Sheridan, showing "The Fourth Commandment" was slightly off.

Lubliner & Trinz Harding and Senate both played to above average business, "Flesh and the Devil" being the attraction at the Harding, plus Mark Fisher's band and "Knockout Reilly" at the Senate, with Art Kahn and his musicians.

Some of the south side de luxe houses also reported average or normal business including the Capitol, where "Casey at the Bat" was a strong attraction, and the Vitaphone and Del also helped pull the crowds. The Tivoli did its usual good business with "The Demi Bride."

Los Angeles

THIS week marks the close of "What Price Glory." The picture has done yeoman duty at the box office for a period of six months, and the management is more than happy over the results. Another Fox production will move in on Wednesday of this week and according to those who are in on the "know" it will be another surprise of celluloid entertainment. The speculation is that "7th Heaven" will equal the run of "What Price Glory," which will not be so bad for Fred Miller and his Carthay Circle Theatre.

Corinne Griffith in "Three Hours" is coupled up with a strong program of entertainment this week at Loew's State. On the bill is a Lupino Lane, Educational Comedy, "Naughty Boy" that looms large in audience favor. Gene Morgan and his band and a Fanchon and Marco, presentation do their part in adding strength to an already strong line-up. The theatre is doing good business.

"Casey at the Bat" walked home to some good receipts at the Million Dollar. "The Fire Brigade" takes over the house as the next attraction and some very good advance advertising is telling the town about it.

"Resurrection" is going along a a good pace, pleasing its patrons and management. The picture is now in the fourth week at the Criterion.

Richard Dix in "Knockout Reilly" at the Metropolitan is scoring a hit and "Mr. Wu" in its fourth week at the Forum is doing nicely. "Old Ironsides" sailed through a fair week at the Egyptian with two weeks more to go before closing.

Philadelphia

BUSINESS along the cinema Rialto in Philadelphia continues to hold up well after the Easter Week rush.

"Evening Clothes" at the Stanley with Adolphe Menjou starred, flanked by a glittering array of presentation acts, did a fine week's business. "Slide, Kelly, Slide," the Metro-Goldwyn feature originally slated for the Stanley, opened at the Stanton and was unfortunately held there for only one week. Business was tremendous and the picture was declared by newspaper critics and patrons generally to be one of the best pictures of the season.

At the Arcadia Constance Talmadge in "Venus of Venice," went along to average business. "Too Many Crooks," featuring Mildred Davis and Lloyd Hughes at the Karlton, ran a little better than average, with matinees especially good.

"New York," a second run after the Stanley, did a satisfactory business at the Palace, while "Arizona Bound" at the Victoria, with aid of lobby exploitation, got away to a good start in this territory.

The Fox offering, "An Affair of the Follies," with Lewis Stone, Billie Dove and Lloyd Hughes, had another good week. The presentations, however, were a decided asset to the program.

It now looks as though "What Price Glory" would stay at the Fox Locust until well into the summer and John Barrymore in "Don Juan" at the Aldine still has no time set for closing. Business has been up to capacity practically since opening.

The Capitol offered Jackie Coogan in "Johnny Get Your Hair Cut," which did just a fair business.

Boston

BOSTON's theatres reaped the benefit of another good week, partly due to the absence of any special concert or amateur entertainment productions and partly due to continued cool weather for spring. Just at present stage attractions at the motion picture houses appear to have the right of way over any special feature offerings.

The Metropolitan has added a special musical stage attraction as a regular feature and its tryout during the week has shown a gain, although there is a question as to whether or not the gain would not have been evident had the extra attraction not been added. This should not be taken to mean that the added attraction is not up to the Publix standard. Gene Rodemich, late of St. Louis, the apostle of pep, has organized a jazz orchestra worthy of a place on any bill. Cambria's stage presentation "Way Down South," and "Knockout Reilly," Paramount's feature offering and was enthusiastically received.

United Artists' "Love of Sunya" proved a big drawing card for Loew's State Theatre, which has been carrying capacity audiences for a number of weeks.

Both the Keith-Albee Theatres had heavy patronage following N. V. A. week.

The Boston featured "The Monkey Talks," which was favorably received.

Other films showing during the week and reporting good business are "Three Hours" at the Washington Street and Scollay Square Olympias, "What Every Girl Should Know" at the Modern and Beacon, "Don't Tell the Wife" at the Allston, "The Red Mill" at Loew's Orpheum, "McFadden's Flats" at the University and "The Mysterious Rider" at the Fenway and Lancaster Theatres.

Boston is without a road show and none is booked for the current season, hence picture lovers are showing in force at the regular houses.

Minneapolis

ANOTHER good week was recorded at Minneapolis movie theatres last week. The State put on a big program and did an excellent business. The feature film was Billie Dove in "An Affair of the Follies." The Vitaphone was in its third week with Micha Elman and Mary Lewis. And to add to that, the entire orchestra of the Capitol theatre in St. Paul joined with the State orchestra to make an ensemble of 40 members offering Tschaikowsky's "Solonnell of 1812."

At the Strand "The Yankee Clipper" played to very good crowds, but was not good enough for a second week. Bebe Daniels in "A Kiss in a Taxi" proved a popular attraction at the Garrick, while "Love's Greatest Mistake" with Evelyn Brent saw good business at the Lyric.

The weather was generally fair and mild, and about the only strong attractions the pictures had to fight were Irving Berlin's

"Music Box Review" at the Metropolitan and Mary Young in "Believe Me, Xantippe" at the Shubert.

St. Louis

FAIR to middle will safely gauge the business that was enjoyed by the first run picture palaces of St. Louis the past week, while it can also be truthfully stated that the neighborhood houses showed some improvement.

At Loew's State Theatre, Eighth street and Washington avenue, "Rookies" was the chief screen attraction. This house also have a very good stage attraction and held its own in a patronage way.

Two blocks south and one east at the Ambassador "The Better Ole" aided by the Public stage presentation "Sea Chanties" did very nicely, everything considered.

The Missouri Theatre at Grand and Lucas avenue offered Bebe Daniels in the world premier of "Senorita" while the stage offering was "Brooke Johns on Broadway." It was a good week for this house.

The Grand Central just across the street had on its screen "Moulders of Men."

The St. Louis Theatre had an average week with "The Little Adventuress" on the screen.

San Francisco

GENERALLY speaking the business in the down town first run houses was good, as well as in the residential houses, but all managers agree it would have been better had not some of the afternoons been too warm, especially for this time of the year. An increase in general business conditions also helped to stimulate the motion picture business.

"Tell It to the Marines," which was shown for third week at the St. Francis, proved attractive but not as big a crowd attended as was contemplated. "The Telephone Girl" held a fair audience at the California and the receipts were what the management contemplated they would be.

"Frisco Sally Levy," drew a big crowd to Loew's Warfield Theatre and the audience was very much pleased with the picture. Fanchon and Marco's idea drew fairly well.

The Granada Theatre also did exceptionally well with "Cabaret." The presentation by Jack Partington proved popular also. "The Girl Hunt" was enjoyed by those who attended the Cameo, the majority seeming pleased. "Stolen Pleasures" at the Union Square did not draw a big crown, the majority going to see the acts of vaudeville.

"The Auctioneer" drew a big crowd to the Pantages Theatre and the audience was more than pleased with it, sending their friends. The acts also drew, but the picture was the main reason, by far. "A Perfect Sap" was considered but a fair picture although odd, the majority in this instance going to see the six vaudeville acts.

"The Show" at the Coliseum and "Lone Hand Saunders," at the Wigwam, both suburban houses, did fairly well. The Majestic in the Mission district did exceptionally well with "Kosher Kitty Kelly," some going twice to see this picture. The orchestra in the New Mission motion picture house continues to draw the many who like exceptionally first class orchestras.

Kansas City

WITH fair and balmy weather trading upon the heels of a week of rain, all first run houses of Kansas City did better than an average business this week.

At the Newman, Richard Dix in "Knockout Reilly" did a big business both matinee and night all week. "Children of Divorce," featuring Clara Bow, played to a good attendance all week on its second week, drawing mostly women patrons at matinees.

Lon Chaney in "Shadows" at the Liberty far exceeded the average week's business, although the picture was not exploited more than usual. "See You In Jail" at the Mainstreet also drew good, especially the latter part of the week, being supported by a strong stage program. "The Sewing Machine Girl" at the Pantages had a noticeable feminine pull, most of the increase in attendance being at matinees.

"Rubber Tires" at the Globe drew steadily all week, each daily attendance being just a bit above normal.

Seattle

THE week before Easter witnessed a slight drop in theatre business generally throughout the Northwest, and Seattle was no exception, despite good weather and average film programs.

At John Hamrick's Blue Mouse Theatre, "Don Juan" and Vitaphone played its fifth and last week to very pleasing business. Matinee business was weak, but evening performances held up wonderfully, and the house established a record of having a waiting line in front of the theatre every night for five consecutive weeks. It is reported that this program broke all records for the Pacific Northwest for a 50c and 75c attraction.

At the United Artists Theatre, "Casey at the Bat" opened to very good business, due to successful advertising and exploitation, and the opening of the local baseball season. George Lipschultz, conducting the United Artists Orchestra, continued to draw a noticeable patronage, building up strongly since his transfer to this house a few weeks ago.

The Coliseum with "Three Hours" did an average week's business, but the picture failed to create any enthusiasm. The Columbia, likewise, played to average houses but disappointed its audiences with "Nobody's Widow."

At the Fifth Avenue Theatre, "Venus of Venice" showed an increase over the previous week's picture, but still failed to hit a consistently good gross. Fanchon and Marco's "Golf Idea" on the stage was bright in spots. Too much clowning is hurting the dignity of the box office at this house.

"Redheads Preferred" at the Embassy; "The Last Trail" at Pantages; and "Tarzan and the Golden Lion" at the Winter Garden were all average attractions. Hamrick's Egyptian, leading neighborhood house, fell below normal with "The Fire Brigade."

New Orleans, La.

BUSINESS at the down town motion picture houses was rather discouraged throughout the week on account of the Mississippi river flood scare. All but two of the theatres reported a big decrease in patronage. The new Saenger and Loew's State theatres reported business up to the standard. Both these big Canal street houses presented quality attractions during the past week.

Clara Bow in "Children of Divorce," assisted by a stupendous Publix stage show, sent the New Saenger patronage in the several figures mark. The same may be said of Loew's State. Eddie Cantor in "Special Delivery," with Jobyna Ralston, added to the drawing power of a well balanced and varied program of vaudeville acts.

Doris Kenyon in "Ladies At Play" was shown at the Strand but business was not as large as usual. "Casey at the Bat" with Wallace Beery was shown at the Liberty and fared well although business was not a record breaker. "An Affair of the Follies" at the Globe, starring Lewis Stone and Billie Dove, and Charles Murray and Chester Conklin in "McFadden's Flats" at the Trianon, drew their share of the patronage.

A peppy musical comedy show, coupled with "While London Sleeps" with Rin Tin Tin and Helen Costello, did an ordinary run of business. "The Perfect Sap" was the Tudor feature. Ben Lyons is the star and his popularity with the flappers of New Orleans was responsible for the big improvement in patronage shown at this house the past week.

The residential houses of New Orleans did well, the new Prytania doing exceptionally well with nightly changes in program. "Faust" at the Mecca drew a record patronage.

Baltimore

"SLIDE, KELLY, SLIDE," did the best business of any first run moving picture production in Baltimore during the week beginning Monday, April 25, at Loew's Valencia Theatre. Part of its success might be attributed to the questionnaire tie-up arranged by Charles Winston with the Baltimore News.

"The Better 'Ole" did very good business during its second week at Warners' Metropolitan Theatre with the Vitaphone accompaniment and other pictures which did very good business also included "The Cheerful Fraud," with five acts of vaudeville at Keith's Hippodrome; "The Monkey Talks," with five acts of vaudeville at the Garden Theatre "and Cabaret" at Loew's Century with an added stage attraction.

"The Night Bride," starring Marie Prevost, only did a fair business at the New Theatre with a stage attraction and "The Notorious Lady," starring Lewis Stone, did a fairly good business at the Rivoli with a stage attraction.

Portland, Ore.

WARM, bright weather over the week-end caused receipts at the theatres to drop considerably, but a cooler temperature with rain for the last three days brought the week-day business, in most cases, somewhat above normal.

"Children of Divorce" at the Broadway drew very good business. Fans seemed a little disappointed with Clara Bow's role, but an excellent stage attraction—Fanchon & Marco's "In Dutch" idea, balanced the reports satisfactorily.

The Peoples Theatre took a chance and persuaded Paramount to go into their Long Island vaults for a print of Barrymore's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," which they put on for six days. The experiment proved highly successful. It was advertised as a return showing, so that fans knew what they were getting. Drew splendid business and the theatre received many calls wanting to know where, in the city, it would be shown again.

''Blind Alleys'' at the Rivoli was a disappointment to Meighan fans, and business suffered. ''The Sea Tiger,'' with ''Shoulder Arms'' at the Liberty, got a good proportion of business and the program was well liked, especially the Chaplin picture.

Columbia got fair business with good reports on ''The Fourth Commandment. The fifth week of ''Don Juan'' at the Blue Mouse was reported as satisfactory, with business building on the final three days.

Milwaukee

THE Third Anniversary Week at the Wisconsin theatre, much heralded, well exploited, with its attractive bill headed by ''Evening Clothes,'' was the big event of the week for theatre goers of this city. ''A flock of merry artists headed by Johnny Perkins'' divided honors in making the bill one of the most popular of the week. ''What Price Glory'' at the Davidson took a large share of patronage and played to well filled houses at every performance. It was introduced by an extensive advertising campaign. ''Resurrection'' at the Alhambra continued to attract the public to a gratifying extent. This is its second week in the city. At the Strand, ''Easy Pickings'' fared well, and ''Flaming Forest'' at the Merrill was well attended.

Despite the down town attractions, neighborhood business was good all during the week. ''Orchids and Ermine'' at the Milwaukee won local favor. ''Stepping Along'' at the Tower and Modjeska was exceedingly popular. The Tower found attendance better than usual due to the Marajah, the mystic seer and his ever popular act, playing at the Tower all week. The Colonial showing ''Man of the Forest'' had a very satisfactory week, and the Venetian drew crowds with ''Fighting Love.''

Cleveland

THE second week after Easter was a decided improvement over the first week after Easter, theatrically speaking. Almost all of the big theatres report that business picked up a little last week, but they are unanimous in agreeing that business is below the average of last year at this time, and that it takes added inducements to attract patronage.

''Rookies'' held the palm for last week. It played its second week at the Cameo and topped the first week's business. ''The Beloved Rogue'' fell below expectations at the Stillman and is not being held over. ''Venus of Venice'' brought the Allen receipts about to normal. Gilda Grey in ''Cabaret'' drew well at the State, with a splendid vaudeville bill surrounding it. The Palace reports ''better than fair'' business with ''Ankles Preferred'' and an average vaudeville program. ''Flesh and the Devil,'' which had a very successful downtown first run several weeks ago, repeated its success last week during a second run engagement at the Park. ''Don Juan'' with Vitaphone synchronization and Vitaphone acts, more than satisfied expectations at the Circle, where it was playing its second week. ''Man Bait'' was not much of a success at Keith's East 105th street theatre, but came off quite successfully at Reade's Hippodrome where it split the week with ''Stolen Pleasures,'' which didn't do so well. ''The Vagabond King,'' with the original cast was playing at the Hanna and drawing big crowds, and the Ohio Theatre summer stock company also drew well. These strong legitimate attractions, combined with the approaching opera season and a big percentage of unemployment in the city, account for consistently unsatisfactory business at the movie houses.

Albany

COOL weather prevailed throughout all of last week in Albany, Troy and Schenectady, with the result that business continued good at all of the downtown houses in these three cities despite the fact that daylight saving became operative on Sunday, April 24.

The Vitaphone, coupled with ''Casey at the Bat,'' played to excellent business at the Mark Strand, and while there were no long lines such as characterized ''Don Juan'' the week before, the receipts measured up extremely well, as there was a quicker turn over due to the fact that ''Casey at the Bat'' is a shorter picture than ''Don Juan.''

At the Mark Ritz, ''Cabaret'' ran to a satisfactory business, despite the fact that the newspaper criticism following the opening day was far from favorable. The ''Demi-Bride'' ran well at the Leland, while ''Stepping Along'' and ''Somebody's Mother'' did only fairly well at the Clinton Square theatre.

In Troy, ''The Red Mill'' did only fair at the Lincoln and the same held true with ''The Magician'' at the Troy. This is due more to business depression generally in Troy than the drawing power of the pictures. In Schenectady, ''Convoy'' played to big business at the State theatre, following a heavy program of advertising and exploitation. In connection with the picture a soprano solo was used as well as a striking tableau. ''Summer Bachelors'' did only fair at the Strand in Schenectady.

Ottawa

PATRONAGE was healthy and well-distributed in all theatres of Ottawa, Ontario, during the week of April 25, when bright, cool weather prevailed and there were few counter-attractions in the shape of sports or outdoor events.

There was wide diversity in the film features for the week and there were indications that many people took in three or four shows during the period. They flocked to see Colleen Moore in ''Orchids and Ermine'' at the Centre Theatre; ''The Nervous Wreck'' at B. F. Keith's and ''Sensation Seekers'' at the Imperial. War veterans, military officers, males generally, children and quite a few women patronized the Regent Theatre to see the British war special ''Mons,'' the bill also including ''The Making of a King,'' depicting the life of the Prince of Wales, which the women liked particularly.

The Francais Theatre emerged from its Lenten slump still more with this attractive series for the week: ''The Silent Lover;'' ''My Old Dutch'' and ''The Sea Wolf,'' but this house is hardly booming yet.

In Hull, Quebec, both the Laurier and Eden Theatres picked up with ''Three Hours'' at the Eden and ''The Winning of Barbara Worth'' at the Laurier.

Oklahoma City

BUSINESS with the Oklahoma City theatres was humming this week. The weather was on its best behavior, the programs at the four first-run houses were all interesting and the people responded well.

''Don Juan'' showed to unusually good crowds at the Criterion all week. There was a little increase in price, but an added attraction in a song interlude made up a program that was better than the usual run there.

At the Empress ''See You in Jail'' and Will Rogers in ''Dublin'' brought crowds to the theatre during the whole week, and there was much comment on the program both by the man on the street and the newspaper critics. ''The Telephone Girl'' was well received by the patrons of the Capitol Theatre the first part of the week, and gave way to an equally popular picture for the last half in ''The Understanding Heart.'' ''Ankles Preferred'' stayed over all week at the Liberty Theatre whereas it was booked only for the first half.

Salt Lake City

FIRST Run Theatres of Salt Lake all report business to have been exceptionally good last week. The Pantages Theatre here put out the biggest exploitation campaign that they have used this year. This was in connection with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, ''Mr. Wu.'' ''A Night of Love'' has played to capacity houses at the Paramount Empress Theatre all week. ''Lovers?'' went over very big at the Victory according to report. The two feature program at the American consisted of Harry Langdon's new comedy ''Long Pants'' which went over in a highly enthusiastic manner, and ''Sensation Seekers'' which was also well received.

''Flesh and the Devil,'' was a great drawing card at the Gem. ''The Flaming Forest'' at the Kinema was the feature picture, in connection with their weekly added attraction of local juvenile talent.

''Is That Nice?'' topped the vaudeville bill at the Orpheum. ''Variety'' and ''Soapsuds Lady'' went over well at the Mission, a neighborhood house here. A great deal of twenty four sheet space was utilized in addition to the regular amount of newspaper exploitation. Typical spring weather has been enjoyed with the exception of a few extremely hot days.

Central Pennsylvania

HARRISBURG Movie fans fell hard for ''The White Black Sheep,'' featuring Richard Barthelmess, at the Colonial all week, and it easily was the oustanding film attraction in that city, if box office receipts are any barometer.

In Loew's Regent and the Victoria, respectively, Lew Cody and Adolphe Menjou, each in ''one of these modern French farces,'' as one manager remarked, were pitted against each other in competition for patronage in offerings that, in a sense, had much similarity. Cody, with Miss Norma Shearer, starred in ''The Demi Bride,'' and the Menjou vehicle was ''Evening Clothes.'' Most of that class of movie patrons who average two shows a week in the principal downtown theatres, selected either Cody or Menjou, thus dividing their support between that pair, while all flocked to the Colonial to witness the different type show in which Barthelmess appeared.

A spring fashion window display tying up with the showing of "The Demi-Bride" (M-G-M) at the Rialto theatre, Macon, Ga.

A novel covered wagon was the ballyhoo feature of a campaign staged in Nashville, Tenn., by Manager Walter Harmon for his showing of "The Overland Stage" (First National) the Strand theatre in that city.

A striking lobby display playing up the comedy angle was a feature of exploitation for First National's "McFadden's Flats" at the Hollywood theatre, Gormont, Pa. Stock paper furnished material for the cut-outs used in the arrangement, pictured above.

Ballyhoo, in the form of a tractor, and lobby display featuring cut-outs in a naturalistic setting, which exploited the showing of "Tell It To the Marines" (M-G-M) at the Fischer theatre, Danville, Ill., of which Nels Frye is manager.

An impressive street demonstration launched the national tie-up between the Reo Motor Company and Producers Distributing Corporation in connection with "The Yankee Clipper." Photos above show one of the floats which advertised "The Yankee Clipper" and the Flying Cloud model automobile, as part of a campaign for the Michigan theatre, where the De Mille picture was shown.

New Idea for Telegraph Tie-up "Used for Fourth Commandment"

A NEW form of Postal Telegraph tie-up was worked up in Pittsburgh, Pa., recently by Manager Davis of the Cameo Theatre and Universal Exploiteer Charles Loewenberg for "The Fourth Commandment." A practical instrument was installed in the lobby which was manipulated from the box office and above was a card, an exact duplicate of a Postal Telegraph blank 22 by 28 inches in size, which read: "To my mother and father, any place in the world—My thoughts are of you—God bless you"—(signed "Bill"). Over this 22 x 28 was a smaller card reading: "Send a wire home to the folks." The Telegraph Company believed that any patron coming from "The Fourth Commandment," whose parents were at a distance, was in a most favorable mind for such an appeal.

In return for this lobby display, the company turned over sixteen of their principal windows to "Fourth Commandment" advertising. A large duplicate of a telegraph blank was placed in each with this copy on it: "'The Fourth Commandment' reads 'Honor Thy Father and Mother'—Have you written home lately?—If not, send a wire to the folks and see 'The Fourth Commandment' at the Cameo Theatre, starting Saturday."

The Wurlitzer music store arranged a full window display of "mother songs" with a specially prepared shadow-box in the center. The plug was for "How I love you, Mother Mine," published by Milton Weil, Chicago.

Five hundred windows in and around Pittsburgh carried an announcement of the picture through a tie-up with Serv-Us Brand Products. A special hanger, 12 x 36 in size, carried an 8 x 10 photograph of Belle Bennett and the copy "Belle Bennett, star of 'The Fourth Commandment' at the Cameo Theatre endorses Serv-Us Brand Products."

Water Spray Stunt Scores for "Let It Rain"

Manager James H. McKoy used the water spray stunt to excellent advantage in advertising "Let It Rain" when that film played at the Publix Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C.

A water pipe line was run out under the Rex sign and protruded over the street. A shower bath attachment was put on the end of the pipe which caused the water coming out of the pipe to spray.

A man, neatly attired in rubber boots, rain coat, rubber hat, and holding an umbrella stood under the spray. Both the umbrella and the rubber raincoat were labeled with the title of the picture, name of theatre, and play dates.

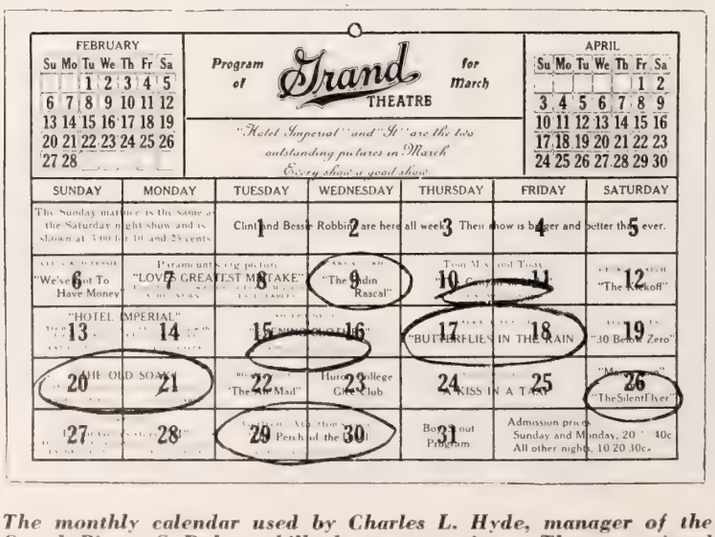
When the man was not standing under the spray of water, he walked the streets and always held the umbrella over his head.

Railroad and Car Agent Tie-Up With Theatre

Manager Edward Harrison swung an automobile agency and a railroad into a tie-up on "A Little Journey" that got a lot of priceless publicity when that film played at the Publix Rialto Theatre, Lincoln, Neb.

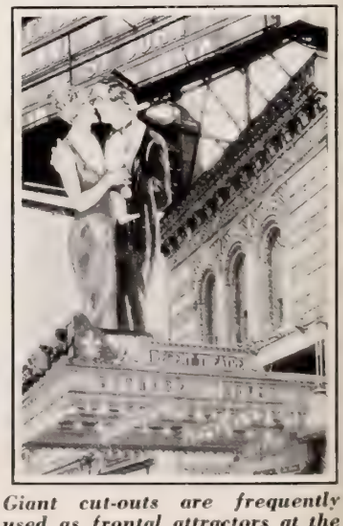
A locomotive model mounted on a Fordson tractor was driven all over town during the showing of the picture. Signs and banners on the ballyhoo announced the title of picture, name of theatre, and play dates.

The tractor was furnished by the Ford dealer and the lomotive model and services for mounting same were furnished gratis by the Burlington railroad.



The whole stunt was put over at a cost of $7—which paid the salary of the driver and the cost of gasoline.

Offers Free Parking for Bikes and Coasters



Here's a good Saturday stunt that's easy and cheap. Lee Berger, manager of the Cedar-Lee theatre, Cleveland Heights, a residence suburb of Cleveland, circularizes his territory. And on the circulars he announces special, free parking space for bicycles, coaster wagons and other junior conveyances.

Barbara Worth, Universal contract player, will have the feminine lead in "The Fearless Rider," the Universal Western which will star Fred Humes. Edgar Lewis will direct the picture.

Mack Sennett has finished "For Sale, a Bungalow," and "Smith's Modiste Shop," two new comedies for Pathe release. Earl Rodney directed the first, which co-stars Madeline Hurlock and Eddie Quillan; the second was directed by Alf Goudling. The usual Smith family, Raymond McKee, Ruth Hiatt and Mary Ann Jackson are appearing in "Smith's Modiste Shop."

Avonne Taylor, Ziegfeld beauty, has been signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to a long term contract, following screen tests.

In production on the Sennett lot are a golf comedy starring Eddie Quillan, who is working under the direction of Harry Edwards and a Jimmy Smith comedy which has a beauty contest plot and which Earl Rodney is directing. Alma Bennett, Billy Bevan, Vernon Dent, Andy Clyde, Glen Vavender and Mary Maberry are in the golf comedy and in the Smith number besides the usual trio of featured players are Irving Bacon and Harney Hellum. James Montgomery Flagg appears in a number of scenes with Raymond McKee.

William Austin, one of the younger screen actors, has signed a Universal contract to play in "Silk Stockings," a forthcoming Laura La Plante film on which actual production was started this week under Wesley Ruggles' direction. Otis Harlan is one of the important players in the cast.

Lillian Gish, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star now working in "The Wind," is supported in that picture by little Miss Carmencita Johnston, who has appeared in forty pictures.

Walter Woods, now under contract with De Mille, has been assigned the supervision of "His Dog" which Karl Brown is to direct.

The cast for "Snowbound," Tiffany's next production to go into work, has been engaged and includes Betty Blythe, Robert Agnew, Lillian Rich, Guinn Williams, George Fawcett, Martha Mattox, Pat Harmon and Harold Goodwin.

Sally Rand, one of the newer De Mille players and a Wampas baby star, will have one of the principal roles in "His Dog," an Albert Payson Terhune story which Karl Brown will direct. The featured player will be Joseph Schildkraut. Walter Woods is supervising the production.

Robert Hichens, author of the novel, "The Garden of Allah," recently joined the film unit at Biskra, a North African location where exterior scenes are being taken under the direction of Rex Ingram.

Sarah Padden is the latest addition to the cast of the Fox Films' picture, "Colleen," which will feature Madge Bellamy.

Leo Maloney has started actual production work on his seventh production for Pathe release, "Border Blackbirds" at his San Bernardino ranch. Ford I. Beebe did both the synopsis and continuity. Maloney's supporting cast will include Eugenia Gilbert, Morgan Davis, Bud Osborne and Joseph Rickson. Edward C. Kull is taking care of the photography.

Metropolitan Pictures has decided upon Harrison Ford to play the male lead in Marie Prevost's new picture which E. Mason Hopper will direct. Zelda Sears and Fred Stanley are responsible for the adaptation and the continuity on the production over which F. McGrew Willis will supervise.

Hal Roach has engaged Henry Lehrman to take charge of the Roach story department. He will handle story material for the various directors producing Pathe comedies. The Roach directorial staff has been also augmented by the signing of Louis J. Gaznier, director, who assumes charge of a new unit immediately.

E. Mason Hopper, who has been Marie Prevost's director in her last four pictures to come from the Metropolitan studio, is collaborating with Zelda Sears and Fred Stanley on the adaptation of the star's next picture, which, it is said, will be entirely different from anything that Miss Prevost has done since she joined Metropolitan.

Blanche Payson, policewoman and actress, has joined the "The Callahans and the Murphys" cast. Miss Payson is about six feet three inches in stature. At one time she was a member of the comedy forces of Keystone and has recently played several comic character roles.

Charley Chase has begun another farce comedy for Hal Roach, as yet untitled. His new leading lady is Edna Marion and Caryl Lincoln and Lincoln Plummer have parts of prominence. James Parrott is directing, Max Davidson is also working on the fourth of a series of comedies with a Jewish strain. Leo McCarey is directing and completing the cast are Spec O'Donnell, David Butler and Lillian Elliott.

The casting of "Midnight Rose," the Universal-Jewel production which will star Lya De Putti, neared completion this week. Four new players, Gunboat Smith, Fred Kelsey, Lorrimer Johnson and George Larkin were signed for important roles and filming started this week. The story is an adaptation of "Backwash," by J. Grubb Alexander. James Young will direct.

Eileen Percy has joined the cast of "Twelve Miles Out," the John Gilbert film which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is producing. Joan Crawford and Betty Compson are also included in the cast.

Hal Yates directing a fan comedy on the Roach lot and among the actors and actresses whom he is directing are Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy, Lupe Velez, Viola Richard, Will Stanton, Frank Brownlee, Anita Garvin, May Wallace, Henry Ward and Gustav Schirrffraht.

Photography was finished last week on "The Romantic Age," a Columbia drama which co-stars Eugene O'Brien and Alberta Vaughn and which Robert Florey directed from the screen adaptation by Dorothy Howell.

James K. McGuinness, author of the scenario on "The Secret Studio," the Fox Films production which was placed in work last week at the Fox studio in Hollywood, will be remembered for his conducting of columns in three of New York's evening newspapers, The Evening Telegram, The Sun and The Evening Post. Victor Schertzinger is directing "The Secret Studio" which has Olive Borden in the starring role.

Doris Hill, titian-haired young actress, was this week signed to a new long term contract by Paramount, Miss Hill has appeared in the two Paramount films, "Casey at the Bat" and "Rough House Rosie."

Howard Estabrook, who recently completed "Cafeteria," a comedy for First National, is now collaborating on a new comedy entitled "Own Your Own Home."

"The Race Track Tout," the temporary title of Syd Chaplin's new comedy for Warner Bros., was finished last week on the West Coast. Prior to the picture's presentation on the new Warner program as an extended run production, the title will probably be changed. The comedian has the role of a city dude who creates a furore in a small village in Vermont; Charles Reisner directed Chaplin, whose associate players include Clara Horton, Helene Costello, Duke Martin, Thomas Jefferson, Erville Alderson, Lal Kruger, Nora Vevil, Louise Carver and Bob Perry.

Columbia's production of drama in the circus, "The Clown," will be directed by William James Craft from a story by Dorothy Howell, Craft is expected to give the production more than ordinary realism as he was at one time a circus manager himself. One of the traveling circuses will be released by Columbia in its entirety to serve as atmosphere and background for "The Clown." Harry O. Hoyt is preparing the continuity.

Joseph Cawthorn, musical comedy star who was last seen in New York at the New Amsterdam Theatre in "Sunny," has signed a contract with Fox Films to play a character role in "The Secret Studio," on which production has just been started at the West Coast plant of Fox Films.

:: "The Check-Up" ::

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who consider it "Fair"; the third, the number who consider it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who consider it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

"The Home Trail"
(Universal Mustang—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

THERE'S plenty of action in this newest Mustang featuring Fred Gilman—and a good little story to boot with the one exception that the old familiar buckboard rescue is rung in once again. However, it furnishes action and comes early in the first reel when the attractive little Miss arrives to take care of Fred's adopted infant. Now, this infant is of considerable importance to this picture, having inherited several thousands of gold dollars and thereby creating the need for a villain to rob the cache. The villain is the little Miss' step-brother and he almost succeeds with the dastardly deed but for the little girl's change of heart and intercession. The latter has, of course, concluded that Fred is a square guy. Quite a bit of riding and fighting in the second reel—and after it's all over, as the first reel obviously pointed out, little Miss stays on the farm with Fred. All in all, 'though, Director Wm. Wyler has done pretty well.

"Just A Husband"
(Fox Comedy—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

THIS is a continuation of the Helen and Warren series based on the stories by Mabel Herbert Urner, and is well up to the standard of those made in the past. Its treatment, however, is considerably different from its predecessors. This time Director Harry Sweet has taken for his theme two newlyweds who by a series of mishaps are cast into Death Valley. From the time they land there and meet three starving itinerants of the desert, it's a laughable burlesque of the old time Death Valley affairs. If starvation is funny, this two reeler gets away with it. There are some real good gags; the eating of the groom's straw hat, the drawing of lots to determine who shall be eaten, and the assault on the cabin wherein is stored eatables. The rolling stones, always good for laughs when they are being dodged, are well handled. Kathryn Perry and Arthur Housman are the featured players.

"Stop, Snookums"
(Universal Stern Bros.—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

THIS Snookums kid certainly seems to get a great kick out of his work in these two reelers of Stern Brothers if a grinning countenance is any proof. He seems perfectly happy whether immersed in a bin of flour or being pulled around the floor by that cock-eyed dog friend of his. But then, Father has rather a tough time while Mrs. Newlywed is away and can't do much in the way of entertaining his friends at poker with Snookums to mind. Lollypops, chips and cards do not mix very well; neither do the extra cards that Snookums extracts from a player's trouser-legs. The game is in a bad way when Mother returns unexpectedly.

Sid Saylor, Ethyln Clair and Snookums are the featured players and the effort on the part of Director Gus Meins is praiseworthy.

"A Dog's Pal"
(Fox Comedy—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

FURTHER adventures of Little Jerry and his dog Pal have made another very fair brand of comedy entertainment and it isn't often that these players have the opportunity of doing their stuff on an ultra-expensive set. The one used happens to have been in service for the Fox production "Sunrise." Jerry is having his usual trouble with opposition in the newspaper selling game when his friend, an elderly banker, arrives accompanied by his little daughter. Later, Jerry rescues her purse and is invited to return it to the banker's mansion. He arrives with Pal and dozens of other dog companions while a party is going on. Although championed by the little girl, Jerry is persona non grata with the governess, etc.; is accused of stealing the purse and a wild chase around the house follows. Of course, all is well in the end.

"Bigger and Better Blondes"
(Roach-Pathe—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

ANOTHER very amusing comedy with the inimitable Charley Chase as the chief funmaker. This time Charley plays the role of jeweler's errand boy, falls in love with the girl to whom he is delivering some jewelry and likewise attracts the attention of a couple of yeggs through displaying the jewels in public. There is a party at the girl's home and an attempted robbedy which is forestalled in an entertaining manner.

Charley's supporting cast consists of Jean Arthur, Mario Carillo, Gale Henry and Frank Brownlee, all good troupers. James Parrott directed with credit to himself.

"Crazy to Act"
(Sennett-Pathe—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

MACK SENNETT'S latest will make a fairly amusing contribution to your program as it incorporates some funny and some not-so-funny gags. The cast works hard and there's a chuckle here and there. It's all about a poor but pretty girl with ambitions as an actress; the villain of the piece offers to back her first picture if she will marry him and she promises though her heart belongs to "another". The major portion of the film is devoted to the taking of the picture and it's projection.

Earl Rodney directed a cast comprising Mildred June, Matty Kemp, Oliver Hardy, Sunshine Hart and others.

Pathe Review No. 20
(Pathe—One Reel)

FLAPPERS and elephants and views of Japan's grand canyon in Pathecolor, comprise the ingredients of this issue of the Review. First the flappers showing how they "keep that school-girl complexion"; next some beautiful views of the Canyon situated in the southwestern part of Japan. An animal story with elephants, dogs and monkeys playing the roles winds up the reel.

They should like it.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"When Snow Flies"
(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

WITH the exception of Al Falfa everyone in the Aesop's Fables aggregation has a good time in this week's issue with a hockey game as the main source of fun. The gags are alright but they don't string along; poor continuity.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Tabloid Editions"
(Sportlight-Pathe—One Reel)

GRANTLAND RICE this week shows that all manners of sport may be indulged without great expense. As examples there are tabloid editions of gymnasium, ice boating, trap shooting, etc. Interesting, as usual.

—HAROLD FLAVIN.

Nine Shorts Pathe's List for Week of May 15

Two two-reel comedies head the Pathe releasing schedule for the week of May 15 and in all nine subjects are set for that week. "Crazy to Act," with Mildred June, Matty Kemp, Oliver Hardy, Sunshine Hart and others, is a Mack Sennett production which was directed by Earl Rodney. "Bigger and Better Blondes," starring Charlie Chase, supported by Jean Arthur, Mario Carillo, Gale Henry and Frank Brownlee, was directed by James Parrott for Hal Roach. The other Pathe offerings are: "A Strange Voyage," Chapter 6 of the serial, "Melting Millions"; "When Snow Flies," an Aesop film fable; "Tabloid Editions," one of the Grantland Rice Sportlights; Pathe Review, number 20; Topics of the Day, number 20, and Issues 42 and 43 of the Pathe newsreel.

"Eyes of the Totem" Due from Pathe on May 15

"Eyes of the Totem," an H. C. Weaver production which Pathe is distributing, is a Pathe feature release for May 15. Wanda Hawley and Tom Santschi have the leading roles, supported by Ann Cornwall, Gareth Hughes, Bert Woodruff, Violet Palmer, Mary Jones, Dorothy Llewellyn and Nell Barry Taylor. "The Totem Pole Beggar," W. W. Dickson's story, provides the source of the picture which W. S. Van Dyke directed. E. C. Marwell did the adaptation.

La Voy Becomes Special Pathe Photographer

Merl La Voy, globe-trotting cameraman who has been an active photographer since 1905 and whose exploits include several thousand feet of film of the world war on the Western and Serbian fronts, has been appointed a special correspondent of Pathe News by Editor Ray Hall. Mr. La Voy's territory will be world-wide; he has already received his first assignment and will make the first stop of his itinerary at China.

Kofeldt to Capitalize Questionnaire Craze

The questionnaire fad, the new craze that the public has taken to heart as much as the cross word puzzle, will be brought to the screen by Walter W. Kofeldt, Inc., of Hollywood, who will produce a series of single reel subjects scheduled for immediate release. They will bear the screen name of "Now, I'll Ask You!"

The Climbers

Should Do Well at the Box-Office

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

WE THOUGHT we were in for another costume picture but the latest Irene Rich vehicle gets away from the court scenes after the first reel and becomes a high class Western insofar as atmosphere is concerned. The picture version is quite a radical departure from the original as written by Clyde Fitch, but this treatment makes a fairly good yarn and the action and performances of Miss Rich and Forrest Stanley enhance the value of the production from an audience standpoint. The heroine's role is different from anything we have seen Miss Rich do in previous efforts, that of a man hating, iron willed woman who, through sheer courage, has made a success of running a plantation in the land of her exile. It's a great role and a great performance. Forrest Stanley, too, deserves honorable mention for his portrayal of the bandit character, whom he makes a light hearted, devil may care caballero a la Fairbanks. Flobelle Fairbanks, a blonde edition of Lillian Gish, looks like a comer.

Through the scheming of a "climber" in the court of Spain the Duchess of Arogan is banished to New Spain (Porto Rico), where she becomes a powerful figure, ruling a plantation with a hand or iron; but He turns up and she once more reverts to type.

The Cast: Irene Rich, Clyde Cooke, Forrest Stanley, Flobelle Fairbanks, Myrna Loy, Anders Randolph, Dot Farley, Rosemary Cooper, Nigel Barrie, Joseph Striker, Hector Sarno, Max Barwin, Martha Franklin. Directed by Paul Stein.

THEME: Drama. Spanish noblewoman is banished to New Spain where she becomes powerful figure through ruthless rule of plantation but falls in love with carefree bandit with resultant reversion to true femininity.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The court scenes. Miss Rich's performance and that of Forrest Stanley. The comedy and atmosphere on the plantation.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Story was a best seller. Play up Irene Rich and cast.

DRAWING POWER: Good buy for any house.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Length, 6621 feet. Released May 14, 1927.

Venus of Venice

Not Much Point To It But It's Well Done

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ONCE in a while the law of averages has to be obeyed, which accounts for this comedy not hitting on all six as compared with some recent releases starring Constance Talmadge. With a plot which is not overbright it offers considerable compensation in its technical highlights. These include lavish sets, colorful backgrounds—and exceptionally fine lighting to illuminate them.

The locale, naturally, is Venice—with the star playing the role of an Italian apache whose pals are a bunch of crooks. Constance makes herself up to provoke much interest from the boys, but her particular pal is one Marco, for whom she pilfers jewels, etc. Inasmuch as Venice is a city of canals it is easy for the heroine to effect her getaway by demonstrating her swimming ability. She eventually swims into a gondola and encounters the hero—who after becoming interested succeeds in reforming her. To spice it up a bit his fiancee comes along and asks for explanations. It all ends with the disappointed girl taking an exit in order to give Venus her chance.

The Cast: Constance Talmadge, Antonio Moreno, Julanne Johnston, Edward Martindel, Michael Vavitch, Arthur Thalasso, Andre Lenoy, Carmelita Geraghty, Mario Carillo, Tom Ricketts, Hedda Hopper. Director, Marshall Neilan.

THEME: Romantic comedy of "borrowing" gaming of Venice who after a brief life of crime is reformed by the American hero.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Star's sprightly performance. The locations. The atmosphere and lighting. The intrusion of fiancee. The incident of the heroine's escape.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Feature the title—which is light but colorful. Play up the location. Bill as a typical Constance Talmadge comedy. Feature the players.

DRAWING POWER: Should do business on strength of star's name—and the title should help. Suitable for all types of houses.

Produced by Joseph Schenck. Distributed by First National. Length, six reels. Released May, 1927.

Hills of Peril

Westerns Are Improving

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

INTRODUCTION of some clever new gags, excellent photography and backgrounds and the same hard riding and fighting Buck Jones serve to hold up the quality of these Western melodramas. For this type of entertainment, we believe they'll be hard to beat; certainly they are on a par with the best of Western pictures. After your fans see Buck swim under the flaming surface of a subterranean stream, shoot away the side-arms of a "bad man" and perform numerous other stunts, we predict they will come back for more of the same kind. There is also a finely executed "swan dive" from a high cliff.

The story opens with Buck attempting to tame his white horse. Two crooks appear and he unwittingly assists in the capture of the Sheriff. He turns the tables, however, and makes a friend of the officer. They return to town, where Buck becomes involved in a bootlegging feud. Headquarters of the gang is in the shaft of an abandoned mine, which with the arrival of Ellen Wade, the heroine, is again being developed. Although Buck has joined the gang, he is really working with the town authorities. A scene in a dance hall brings matters to a head and sensing capture the bootleggers seek to outwit the posse. However, the town is finally cleaned up and Buck is chosen as Sheriff. He wins the heroine.

The Cast: Buck Jones, Georgia Hale, Albert Smith, Buck Black, Wm. Welch, Marjorie Beebe, Duke Green, Charles Athloff, Robert Korsman. Directed by Lambert Hillyer.

THEME: Western Melodrama featuring the clean-up of a band of bootlegging villains.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Action, the dance-hall fight, scenes in the cavern and good work of the principals.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: They are making Westerns better with each new picture, it seems. Tell your patrons this along with the usual ballyhoo.

DRAWING POWER: Westerns are growing in favor and this is on a par with any.

Produced and distributed by Fox Films.
Length, 4,943 feet. Released May 1.

Rin-Tin-Tin an Actor and a Good One

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE idea of a dog as an omniscient being, a quadruped who faithfully chooses to stick by his master and mistress even when his absence from the side of his mate may mean disaster for her—this idea should carry an appeal to an audience seeking entertaining and worthwhile screen fare. And more so when the dog happens to be Rin-Tin-Tin. In his latest he is not one whit behind the humans in going through the various emotions; as a matter of fact his performance means more to us because the dog in a way transcends the natural limitations that one would associate with dogs. His intelligence is of such a high order and the things he does are done in so magnanimous a fashion that the picture carries sufficient "lupine greatness" to satisfy the critical. Of course, attention is concentrated on Rin-Tin-Tin and Nanette, his leading lady, who are, it seems, a perfectly matched pair; Virginia Browne Faire and Jason Robard are the girl and the man whose lives are threatened by the blackguard (Tom Santschi). This trio perform very well, though we would ask for more naturalness on the part of Robards.

Outdoor shots, rushing waters, desert sands, abound.

The Cast: Rin-Tin-Tin, Nanette, Jason Robards, Virginia Browne Faire, Tom Santschi, Dave Morris, Theodore Lorch, Ben Walker, Wilfred North. Director, Ray Enright. Cameraman, Ed Du Par.

THEME: Outdoor melodrama. Enemies plot to destroy dam in construction. Young foreman and his dog succeed in checking their nearly successful attempts.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Wounding of the dog and his near extermination in the grandfather clock. The rising of the flood locks and Rinty's pulling of the lever, which act saves the girl. The slugging match between Robards and Santschi.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Do not place emphasis on the title for no police appear in the picture, and the title seems to have been erroneously chosen. Exploit the dog and the punch that is invested in the film.

DRAWING POWER: Good. It will please the majority, especially the children.

Produced and Distributed by Warner Brothers.
Length, 5,823 feet. Released May 7, 1927.

Eyes of the Totem

Devoid of General Commendatory Values

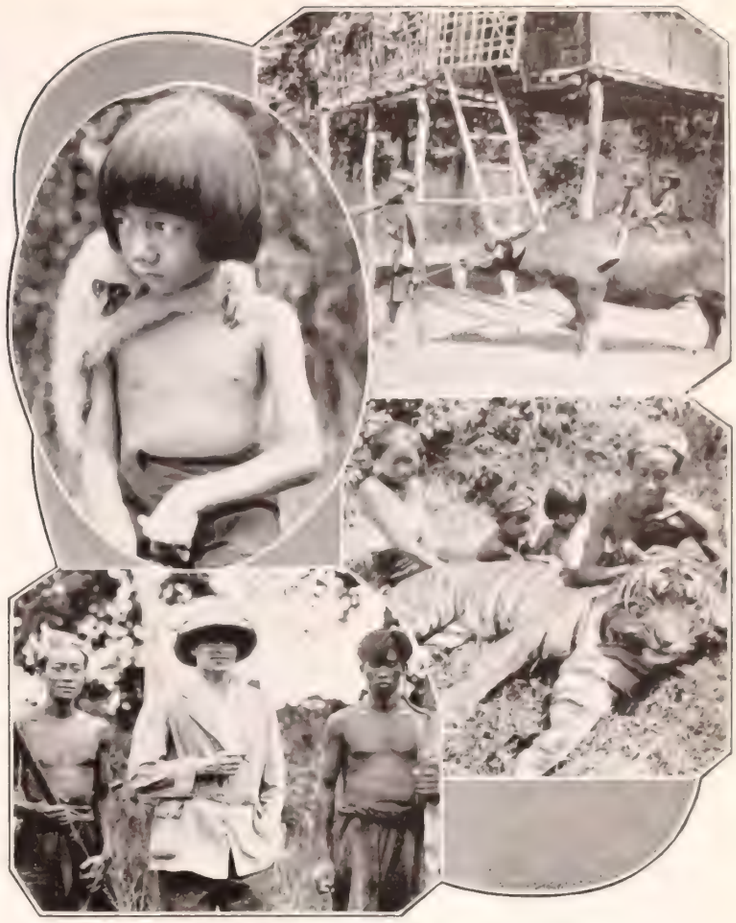
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

AN H. C. Weaver production, the story of which was written by W. W. Dickson. Frankly it is nothing much in the way of sincere or even melodramatic entertainment. It is one of those things that starts out promisingly but falters before even the first half of the film has been projected. The initial episodes of the frozen North, its lonely inhabitants thirsting for the comforts of civilization, give expectations of something good to come. None of this is realized, however, when the scene changes to the city and its totem pole. It proceeds to become slow in motivation, poor in continuity and certainly not convincing. Wanda Hawley is woefully miscast and is utterly incapable of putting over her highly emotional role of distraught mother and revengeful wife who seeks the "eyes" that slew her husband. Tom Santschi as the heavy is convincing but tends to overact. Anne Cornwall and Gareth Hughes supply the youthful romantic element; the rest of the cast is mediocre. Director Van Dyke has not succeeded in putting over his "big" scenes; when the film has reached its most serious moments it does not vibrate but seems to be languid, at least from the all-important angle of interest well kept and sustained.

The Cast: Wanda Hawley, Tom Santschi, Anne Cornwall, Monte Wax, Bert Woodruff, Gareth Hughes, Violet Palmer, Mary Louis Jones, Dorothy Llewellyn, Nell Barry Taylor. Director, W. S. Van Dyke.

THEME: Her husband having been murdered by a man whose eyes she cannot forget, wife determines to seek him out by posing as beggar. He eventually passes by her way and the woman secures her long-sought revenge.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The first appearance of the "eyes." The goings-on in Santschi's dive. The scrap between Santschi and Hughes.



EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up the theme of a life devoted to revenge. Make use of the eyes idea, eyes of conscience, terror, etc.

DRAWING POWER: Not for sophisticated audiences. Suitable for second and third run houses.

Produced by H. C. Weaver. Distributed by Pathe. Footage, 6,228 feet. Released May 15, 1927.

Humorous moments from the Pathe feature comedy, "His First Flame"

Highlights of "Chang," a Paramount Picture

High Hat

Entertaining Number About the Movies

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THIS piece possesses entertainment qualities in fairly generous portions. It is a goodly little effort about two extras in a movie studio and a girl who works as a maid in the wardrobe department. Enough spark and pep is in it to make it interesting and spontaneously humorous. Ben Lyons easily fufills the role of a lazy studio "hanger-on" whose thoughts seem to be concentrated mainly on snoozing in comfortable perches. Sam Hardy as the latter's "friend" always captures the interest and puts over excellent comedy whenever he is emoting before the cameras.

Aroused from his baneful lethargy and imbued with a sudden spirit of hard work, Ben Lyon changes from a nonchalant to a vigorous and ambitious extra. And responsible for this really remarkable transformation is Mary Brian. But though he has cast off the shackles of slumber a series of ups and downs come his way and his job of studio extra is no more. Mary also drops her occupation when a necklace with which she was entrusted is lost. However, the semi-tragic High Hat (Sam Hardy) is found to be at the bottom of all this and he gets his you may be sure. Several scenes of the Harlem and Bronx find their way into the picture, too.

The Cast: Ben Lyon, Mary Brian, Sam Hardy, Iris Gray, Ione Holmes, Lucien Prival, Osgood Perkins, Jack Ackroyd. Director, James Creelman.

THEME: Comedy drama of an extra and his girl, a coworker in one of the Hollywood studios. Fellow extra plays him false and the girl is implicated in a theft. Hero awakens from his sleepy ways and recovers the stolen property, his girl's attention and the good graces of the studio lords.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Constant discoveries of hero sleeping on "live" props in studio. His efforts to redeem himself in eyes of tempermental director and his girl. His breaking into the fight sequence of the director's opus by whipping High Hat.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Youth in Hollywood and their efforts to scale the heights.

DRAWING POWER: Good for average house.

Produced by Robert Kane. Distributed by First National. Length, 6,161 feet. Released March, 1927.

Chang

A Masterpiece—One Of The Greatest Ever Shown

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

SUPERLATIVES sweep forward profusely here, begging to be used in describing the greatest wild-animal adventure picture ever shot. What "Nanook of the North" was in its depiction of life at the far reaches of the North, this epic (the word can be safely employed) is in its revelation of how life can be lived in the recesses of Siam's deepest jungle—a land heretofore only partially explored. The motivation of both pictures is the same in that it records the fight for existence among the natives, and Nature's plan of providing man with the inventiveness and ingenuity to succeed.

"Chang" was produced by Merion C. Cooper, a wild-animal hunter, and Ernest B. Schoedsack, the cameraman. Armed with their trusty weapons and their film paraphernalia, they have captured scenes which are actually astonishing in their realism, thrills, suspense, photographic beauty and simplicity. There's a story behind their adventure. It concerns a jungle native and his family. This Kru—for such is his name—is ever at war with the stalking tiger and leopard. He sets his traps and captures many of these wild trespassers. And he takes life philosophically. His children have oodles of fun with a comic gibbon, which supplies a happy comedy relief.

The picture builds from one highly interesting episode to another and climaxes with a scene which is positively amazing in its sweep and thrill. What it discloses has never been captured before. It's something even new for the films. Meanwhile the plot motivation carries out Nature's designs with man pitting his brain against brute force and instinct—and winning.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The photography. The constant thrills. The human interest. The comedy of the gibbon. The marvelous stampede.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Go the limit. Play it big as the biggest adventure film of jungle and wild animal life ever shot by a camera.

Produced by Cooper and Schoedsack. Distributed by Paramount. Length, about 12 reels.

Broadway Nights

Stage Story Treated Too Seriously

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY had to get serious with this stage story and inject a lot of pathos—which never becomes convincing. As a result it misses fire when it could just as well have been treated in a light fashion and carried the saving grace of humor. In the effort to build the heart interest the story gets out of hand—and all of the earnest work of the players seldom gets over.

The central figure is a stage-struck girl who, after "getting the hook" on an amateur night, is encouraged by a music hall entertainer. He makes her his partner and they become fairly successful until the song plugger gets to "rolling the bones." This breaks up the team—the girl being taken under the management of musical comedy producers, while her partner gambles and drinks to the point where he becomes a "down-and-outer."

From this point the authors proceed obviously to reconcile their central characters. After the hero has descended to the depths and the girl has climbed to the heights they are brought together through the medium of the radio. The gambler does some broadcasting and when his voice is recognized by his fair partner it is all over but the shouting.

The picture could stand more sophistication and less hokum. The contrasts are too sharply divided. It doesn't ring very genuine.

The Cast: Lois Wilson, Sam Hardy, Louis John Bartels, Philip Strange, Barbara Stanwick, "Bunny" Weldon. Director, Joseph C. Boyle.

THEME: Romantic drama of the theatre with actress after being disillusioned over partner's character becomes reconciled when he reforms.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The amateur night. The acting by Lois Wilson and Louis John Bartels. The moment of reconciliation. The rehearsal The atmosphere of the theatre.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tease the title. Might put on an amateur night. Play up fact it is theatrical story.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for average houses. Title has appeal.

Produced and distributed by First National. Length, 6765 feet. Released May, 1927.

THE "Get-to Gether" luncheon held recently at the Hotel Astor by the Motion Picture Film Salesmen, Inc., has produced results which are particularly gratifying to those who labored so hard to bring about a condition permitting a closer relationship between the salesmen's organization and the local Film Board of Trade.

According to report, future meetings of the Film Board of Trade will include at least one delegate from the Motion Picture Salesmen, Inc. Members of the latter body first attending will probably be the officers and after each of this group has had his turn at sitting in, salesmen members from the several exchanges will also serve.

As additional proof of their desire to do away as much as possible with misunderstandings which frequently arise between salesmen and their managers, thereby eliminating to a great extent conditions which are always detrimental, to good business, a committee of three from each body has been appointed to iron out these matters.

The Committee from the Film Board of Trade consists of Louis Phillips, executive secretary of the Board; J. Vergesslich, of the Jersey First National exchange, and Harry Thomas, of Merit. Chas. Rosensweig, of F. B. O. is ex-officio.

The Salesmen's committee is made up of Dick Gladhill, Merit; Morris Markowitz, of the Hollywood exchange, and Joe Felder, of P. D. C.

"Jimmie" Binckoff, of the Temple Theatre, Union Hill, N. J., is to be commended for the manner in which he handled his audience during a serious film room fire which recently destroyed nine reels of film. Now, nine reels make considerable of a blaze and can be calculated to cause not a little excitement in a theatre; but under Mr. Binckoff's leadership, instead of becoming "panicky," the patrons stayed in their seats and made no move except to turn their heads in order to witness the fire.

There is a report that the Consolidated Amusement Company, extensive operators of theatres on the West Side of New York and in the Bronx, may soon have opposition in the form of a concerted move by several of the leading exhibitors in the Bronx. Lawrence Bolongino and Lou Ganz are the two well known in the ranks of Consolidated, and while no names have been mentioned connecting any Bronx theatre men with this move, the territory effected would appear to be occupied by theatre circuits under the control of Suchman Bros., Grobe and Knobel and Julius Joelson.

Down in the neighborhood of Clinton and Delancy streets, where Dave Lustig holds forth and where is located the headquarters of the Steiner and Blinderman circuit, they are busy getting the East Side's Only Roof Garden in condition for the approaching hot weather. Seats are in the process of installation—projection apparatus is ready to be hooked up and the owners are also making preparation to decorate the sides with an Italian garden effect. Spacious elevators will carry the patrons from the foyer to the roof.

Rosenzweig and Katz, long identified as prominent Brooklyn exhibitors, are no longer connected with one another according to report. With the exception of the Culver, Beverly and Leader theatres which were recently sold to Federal Theatres, controlled by Henry Siegel, the balance of the circuit will remain under the banner of David Katz. Mr. Rosenzweig's future plans are unannounced at present.

The Katz theatre holdings, as near as can be ascertained are the Lefferts, Our Civic, Concord, Norwood, Adelphi, Sheridan, City Line and Kinema theatres. Mr. Katz is also reported as having taken over the Cross Bay and Rugby theatres from Edw. Spiegel.

An exhibitor of bona fide American Indian descent is said to have invaded the ranks of New Jersey showmen. He is unnamed at present but is reported to be the new owner of the Warren Square Theatre, Newark. Ben Eilen was the former proprietor.

Jack Goldstein, Commonwealth exchange salesman and editor of the live little bi-monthly organ of the Motion Picture Salesmen, Inc., informs us that demand for his diminutive publication is increasing regularly. Mr. Goldstein also renders the information that the Seymour Schussel Convention will be held at [illegible] hotel in 91st street, New York City. (Not confirmed by Mr. Schussel.)

Manager Cox formerly with Chas. O'Reilly, who recently tendered his resignation as President of the T.O.C.C. of New York City, is now in charge of Leon Rosenblat's Rex Theatre, Bayonne.

Fred Dollinger is said to have resigned from his position as manager of the Lynbrook Theatre, Lynbrook, L. I.

Harry Harris, owner of a string of theatres stretching from the Battery to upper Broadway, has taken over the S. & A. Theatre, 125th street, near Broadway, according to report. Mr. Harris will temporarily close the house in order to make some needed repairs.

F. G. Wilson's Endicott Theatre, a 2,000 seat house at 71st street and 13th avenue, Brooklyn, held its first night last Friday.

D. Liman has recently opened the Eagle Theatre, a house seating about 600 at 16t6h avenue and 43d street, Brooklyn. The Eagle has been closed for some time.

B. Praeto has purchased the American Theatre, Fort Hamilton Avenue, Brooklyn. Liss was the former owner.

The new Hendryx Theatre, Pitkin and Hendryx, Brooklyn, has been taken over by A. Krawwitz & Son. A. Wollen was formerly in charge.

San Diego

The Granada Theatre Company, with headquarters at La Jolla, a suburb of San Diego, has been incorporated with a capital of $25,000. The incorporators are Louis and Mary V. Stutz and Harry J. Carey, all of La Jolla.

When it was announced that the West Coast house here was to be called the California, an injunction was sought by the National Theatres of California, who operate a house of that name here on Fifth street. After considering the arguments the court decided that no injunction would be granted for the reason that it was not shown that the use of the name of the New California Theatre would injure the reputation of the older house. The block in which the New California is located is known as the California building, and this, it was held, also justified the use of the name for the newer film house.

Announcement is made that a new $35,000 motion picture, in Italian type of architecture, will be erected at India and Fir streets by Melvin Walters. The new house will have seats for 600 and will be opened in the early fall. There is no film house in that vicinity at the present time.

FRANK FRANCIS, 37 years old, owner of the Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Mo., died April 27 from injuries received the night of April 22 when he fell with a 20-foot ladder while replacing light bulbs over the stage in his theatre.

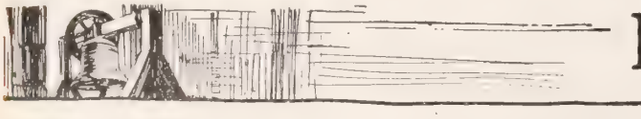
Tom McKean, manager of the St. Louis F.B.O. office, spent much of the past week in the territory, visiting among other towns Hannibal, Quincy and Springfield.

S. Sigoloss, through his architect Otto J. Krieg, 822 Wainwright Building, has taken bids on a new one-story theatre building to be erected at the southeast corner of 18th and Park avenue, St. Louis.

The structure, to be known as the Elite Theatre, will be 143 feet by 46 feet. It will be known as the Elite Theatre.

J. Meador has taken over the theatre at Macon, Mo.

On January 21, 1913, the Ferris Grand Opera House, which occupied the same site, was destroyed by fire.



Manager O'Toole of Producers Distributing Corporation visited Paducah, Ky., and Cairo, Ill., during the week. He reports that the flood conditions in the Lower Mississippi Valley are fearful.

The Farmington Entertainment Company of Farmington, Mo., of which Dr. C. A. Tetley is president, has had plans prepared by J. Hal Lynch & Son, 412 Dolph building, St. Louis, Mo., for a new theatre. Construction plans will be prepared at once, as preliminary sketches have been approved.

The Minden Amusement Company, Rollin Williams, manager, Minden, La., plans to rebuild its theatre at once. Details not yet available.

Harry Kelley has just purchased a site on West 12th street, Bentonville, Ark., on which he plans to erect a new theatre. The lot is 110 by 42 feet.

Shreveport, La., is to have two new theatres. Charles Morel, El Dorado, Ark., plans to build at Portland and Fetzer Avenues. His house will cost about $30,000. A. L. Waller plans a house on Texas avenue. It will have a main floor and balcony and cover a site 40 by 125 feet. Plans for both houses have been prepared by Jones, Roessle, Olschner & Wiener, Ardis Building, Shreveport, La.

Philadelphia

GABRIEL HINES has succeeded Graham Harris as conductor of the Stanley Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Harris was for some years conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra and had been connected with the Stanley Company for about a year and a half.

Sam Hochfeld, pioneer salesman in Philadelphia territory and connected with the Pathe exchange for more than a decade, has been confined to his home for two weeks with a serious attack of foot poisoning. He will probably not be able to resume his duties for another fortnight.

Bill Quinlivan, who was formerly assistant manager at the Philadelphia exchange of Universal, has joined the P. D. C. sales force under Bill Humphreys, and will cover both Philadelphia and upstate territories for P. D. C.

Nat Levy, for many years connected with the Philadelphia office of Universal, has been transferred to the Albany exchange of the company and has been promoted to branch manager. Mr. Levy was given a most cordial send off by his associates in the Philadelphia exchange and his friends.

The motion picture industry in Philadelphia was saddened by the death of Joseph F. McCarthy, brother of John A. McCarthy, one of the directors of the Stanley Company of America. Mr. McCarthy was head of an electrical concern and had been identified with the motion picture industry not only through his brother's association but in his capacity as an electrical contractor.

Milwaukee

THE film men's baseball season officially opened on Wednesday, April 27th, when the Film Board of Trade team met the Saxe Managers in a lively game which the Film Board took to the tune of 16 to 14 (no, not basketball—baseball!). The Saxe battery, Milt Harmon, catcher and F. Fitzgerald, pitcher, were supported by C. Braun at 1st, Jack Plant at 2nd, Johnny Strain, 3rd; J. Long, S.S.; Frank Dau, R.F.; D. Smith, C.F.; and Stan Brown, L.F.

The Film Board line up—J. Frackman, catcher; Sam Shurman, pitcher; Joe Imhof, 1st; Charley Trampe, 2nd; Newton, 3rd; E. Weisman, S.S.; S. H. Abrams, R. F.; Jack "Punk" Goldman, C.F.; and Bob Smith, L.F.

The game was called a few days earlier than was originally anticipated. Sam Shurman as pitcher for the Film Board was the outstanding performer of the game. Lyman Ballard, the official mascot for the Film Board team, failed to make his appearance, which greatly lowered the morale of his team. Ben Koenig umpired a splendid game.

The Universal theatres are undergoing a thorough spring house cleaning which is taking form in new paint, new fixtures, new organs, and general redecorating. The Downer and State theatres have completed their activities, and the Jackson is very nearly finished. The Jackson under management of Joe Seidel has radically changed in appearance.

Peter Roumain of the State theatre at Rhinelander showed up at the exchange this week, his first visit in a good many months.

"Doc" Honeck, P. D. C. manager, left on Wednesday on a three-day trip to Manitowoc, Two Rivers, and Green Bay.

J. Vander Vaart, manager of the Vander Vaart theatre at Sheboygan, was a recent Film Row visitor.

R. F. Smith, Warner's manager, left Thursday morning to attend the convention in New York. He expects to be gone until Tuesday of next week.

The wind-up of the bowling season was held on Wednesday noon when the teams met for final games to decide the distribution of treasury funds. The money which was left in the league's coffers was divided into four prizes. Steve Bauer's team took first, Charles Trampe's team, second; N. Weinbaum's, third; and E. W. Van Norman's took fourth.

Howard Colburn, of the Orpheum at Burlington, stopped in for a brief visit at exchanges during the week.

G. H. Adams, of the Ozaukee theatre at Port Washington, was in the city during the week and visited several of the exchanges.

George L. Fecke, radio director from the M-G-M New York office, spent a few days in the Milwaukee office prior to going to St. Louis.

Neil Duffy, of the Elite theatre at Appleton, was among out-of-town visitors at exchanges this week.

E. J. Weisman, Educational Manager, left on Friday for Los Angeles to attend the Educational convention. He was accompanied by Max Stahl, special representative of New York.

August Berkholtz, of the Mermac theatre at West Bend, visited Film Row for a short time on Wednesday.

O. L. Meister, manager of the White House theatre, entertained a number of his friends at a midnight smoke fish dinner at Port Washington on Tuesday. The Loos Brothers who are appearing on the Majestic bill this week were his guests of honor. It is Mr. Meister's custom to fete these old friends [illegible] their [illegible]

[illegible] arrived at the local M-G-M office [illegible] a visit of a few days.

Out-of-town visitors this week included Charles Bauman, manager of the Star at Oshkosh; R. C. Wheeler, of the Lloyd theatre at Menominee, Mich.; Percy Palmer, of the Rialto theatre at Edgerton; and R. B. Riggs, of the Purtell theatre at Rio.

Frank Welter, of the Grand theatre at Wausau, was in the city during the week. His theatre is being razed to make room for the new 1500 seat theatre which is being built by the Wausau Theatres Co. of which Mr. Welter is manager.

The building will have a frontage of 80 ft. on Fourth St., and will extend back 146 ft., which will include the stage and loft. The theatre will be provided with a stage 30 x 67 ft., with a proscenium opening 42 ft. wide and 32 ft. high. A new Kilgen organ is to be installed.

Mr. Welter is hoping to have the new building completed in record time.

New England

THE Premier Theatre Co., which now operates the Premier Theatre at Norwood, expect to announce the opening date for their new Norwood Theatre within a short time. The house is rapidly nearing completion and will open sometime during the mid-summer season. Thomas Hayden and William Breen are in active charge.

William Massee, who operates the Idle Hour at Three Rivers, is closing the theatre this week for extensive renovation and redecorating, and will reopen at an early date with a change of policy.

John McConville, publicity director for the Gray Circuit of Publix Theatres in New England, has joined the sales staff of Independent Films, Inc., and will cover New Hampshire and Vermont. He is a brother to Joseph McConville, president of Independent.

Herbert Rose, of New York City, is spending a few weeks at the Boston exchange of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer before leaving to act as special representative of that company in the Philippines.

Louis Coriarty, who recently acquired the Bijou Theatre at Uxbridge, has added another theatre to his embryo chain, the Regent Theatre at Arlington, formerly operated by Nate Hoffman.

The Lyric Theatre at Westerly has been sold by Mrs. J. C. Davidson to John B. Findlay, who also owns the United Theatre at Westerly, and who will operate both houses.

C. L. Devizia, long a salesman for Educational and well known through Northern New England, has resigned to join the staff of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and will cover the Rhode Island territory for them.

H. F. Campbell, district manager for Fox in New England, has been in Portland for several days on business.

Larry Gardner, booker at F. B. O., who was at one time a salesman for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has been made a salesman at F. B. O., and assigned to Rhode Island and Southern Massachusetts.

Fox salesmen are being given another week's vacation with pay prior to another sales drive, half the salesmen getting their vacations this week and the other half next week.

Joseph Mekelberg, salesman for Film Booking Office at Boston, has been transferred to the Cincinnati exchange.

National Theatre Supply Co., which has moved from Church Street to larger quarters at Columbus Avenue and Berkeley Street, Boston, held a house warming at its new rooms on Tuesday, which was the occasion for bringing an unusually large number of exhibitors to Boston.

Manager Harry F. Campbell of Fox exchange, Ed Connolly of the sales force at Pathe, and Lee Rhodeniser of the Strand Theatre, Rockland, Mass., enjoyed a day's fishing Sunday and returned with thirty-four of the speckled beauties which were distributed among friends.

Wilfred Lupu will open his theatre at Old Orchard, Me., on May 30.

The new Pine Point Theatre at Springfield opened this week. H. Sitomar, who built the house, will operate it.

Everything is in readiness for the opening of the new Steinberg Theatre in Worcester, and the opening date is momentarily expected to be announced. Furnishings are being installed.

Division Sales Manager Munroe, of Producers Distributing Corp., was a visitor to the Boston exchange during the week.

Benjamin Bebchick, shipper at P. B. C., has resigned to become associated with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's exchange. Michael Zaman has been promoted to succeed Bebchick.

Murray Curran has resigned as salesman for Warner Brothers in the New Hampshire and Vermont territory.

Al Emery is building a new theatre in East Providence to seat about 1500.

Max Nathanson, formerly of Providence and Woonsocket, has returned from a very successful fishing trip to Sebago Lake, Me. Sixteen below zero weather only added to the sport, he says.

Thomas Duane, formerly advertising sales head at Paramount-Famous-Lasky, has been advanced to the sales department and will cover the Cape territory.

Samuel Levine, booker at the Tiffany exchange, is congratulated upon the announcement of his engagement to Miss Williams.

Chicago

MARKS BROTHERS are planning to open their huge Marbo Theatre on May 17, although the date may have to be put back slightly on account of delays in finishing the house, which seats 4,000.

Tom Mitchell of Progress Films, started for the Aurora Race Track last Saturday, but en route, crossed wires set his automobile on fire and the machine was totally wrecked. The passengers, however, escaped without injury.

Mike Siegel is now managing the Prairie Theatre which is owned by Ludwig Siegel. The gentlemen in question are not related.

It is reported that Bruce Godshalk has resigned from the Karzas organization to become connected with Schoenstadt & Sons. General Manager Van Ronkel is leaving the latter organization.

Anthony Caputo, head of the A. B. C. Studios, 845 S. Wabash Avenue, has joined the ranks of the benedicts, having been married last week to Tillie Antoinette Florentine, popular Chicago girl.

The Kankakee interests, which intended to erect a house which was to be leased to Great States Theatres, have been unable to get together, it is reported, and construction of the house is indefinitely postponed.

J. Roder of the Astor Theatre has taken over the La Salle Theatre, for many years a legitimate and musical comedy house, located in the loop on Madison Street. After redecorating and installing a new organ, this eight hundred seat theatre will be reopened as a motion picture house under a daily change policy at ten cents admission on week days and twenty cents on Sundays. J. P. Koppel will be in charge of the La Salle.

It is reported on good authority that Manager Levine of the Adams has secured the lease on the Randolph Theatre and will take it over on August 1, and will operate it on a ten cent policy. It is understood that the State Street entrance will be converted into a store.

Manager H. C. Young of the National Screen Service has returned from his company's national convention at Atlantic City.

The Fischer Circuit is planning to open its new house at Portage, Wisconsin, this week. It is a modern de luxe theatre of two thousand seats. The Fischer Circuit has also added to its chain of theatres, the Pastime at Delavan, Wisconsin, the Orpheum at Burlington and the theatre at White Water, Wisconsin.

Frank Goldquist has resigned as managing director of Great States' theatres and has been succeeded by Perry Hoeffler, who is a son of J. P. Hoeffler, general manager of Great States Theatres in Quincy. Tom Sawyer who has been managing the La Petite in Kanakee has been appointed managing director of the four Great States houses in that city.

It is reported that Joe McCormick has sold his Jefferson theatre on E. 55th Street.

Kansas City

THE Olive Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo., has been sold by Mrs. S. E. Moore to George Montray.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: Edward Smith, Cozy, Minneapolis, Kan.; Frank Whittman, Bonner Theatre, Bonner Springs, Kan.; T. D. Block, Odessa, Mo.; Charles Fiske. Butler, Mo.; S. E. Wilhoit, Electric, Springfield, Mo.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth, Kan.

C. A. Schultz, manager of the Kansas City P. D. C. branch, will become manager of the Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., of Kansas City, May 1, it was announced this week by E. C. Rhoden, president of the latter company.

Russell Borg, booker for the Kansas City Educational branch, had a sore right arm this week from shaking hands of congratulating friends, following his victory in the monthly "Hall of Fame" contest, it being the first time a booker ever had won the contest.

Frank Harris, field representative for Harold Lloyd, was a Kansas City visitor this week.

In the last two fire drills at the Warner Bros. branch the exchange has rated 100 per cent.

E C. Rhoden, president of the Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., returned from a business trip to Chicago this week, but Fred Willoughby, of the Haywood-Wakefield Company, is reported "Lost" in Oklahoma or Kansas, he having been driving back from Oklahoma when the floods occurred.

Nat Levine, producer, was a Kansas City visitor, he being en route to the Pacific Coast.

The accounting and office management of the Kansas City F. B. O. branch is nearer perfect than any other branch which A. J. McPhail, home office auditor, has visited thus far, according to Mr. McPhail's frank admission to J. A. Masters, assistant branch manager, this week.

R. A. McGuire, Warner Bros. home office representative, departed from Kansas City this week after spending two weeks here.

Edward Alperson, district manager for Warner Bros., also was a Kansas City visitor.

Minneapolis

THE Crystal theatre, 305 Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, celebrated its eighteenth anniversary last week. The theatre opened in 1909 and has operated continuously since except for a short time while undergoing repairs after a fire. Ten cents has always been the admission price. The house is owned by William Nelson, prominent Minneapolis banker and real estate man, and is managed by Anton Janssen. The Crystal was the first theatre in Minneapolis to use a pipe organ in connection with pictures and some of the most prominent organists in the Twin Cities had their first experience there.

Mel Evidon is to succeed Ernie Fravis as manager of the ad sales department at the Minneapolis branch of Paramount. Fravis has gone to Des Moines to manage the same department there where his home is.

The "Vodvil" dance given by the St. Paul Finkelstein and Ruben managers' club at the Coliseum ballroom last week was attended by more than 500. Music for the dancing was furnished by the Coliseum orchestra and many vaudeville acts were on the program, which was arranged by J. T. Stroud, manager of the Oxford theatre.

A recent visitor at the Minneapolis exchanges was Art Johnson who owns the Orpheum theatre at Aberdeen, S. D.

At the June election in Minneapolis one of the candidates for Park Commissioner will be Bob LaPiner of the Minneapolis office of Finkelstein and Ruben.

Park Agnew, formerly of Minneapolis, has been promoted from booker at the Des Moines office of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to traveling booker out of New York.

The Lyric theatre at Huron, S. D., has been purchased from S. A. Goethel and Ralph Jones by A. B. Leak, who is planning immediate improvements.

J. F. Osborne is now operating the Grand theatre at Big Falls, Minn. It was formerly under the management of Hogan Burud who has entered another business.

Portland, Ore.,

GEORGE E. JACKSON, manager, F. F. Vincent, exploiteer, E. I. Hudson and J. T. Moran, salesmen, left last Wednesday evening to attend the Universal convention at the Drake Hotel, Chicago. They expect to be gone ten days.

Charley Hudson, Paramount salesman, is in the Good Samaritan Hospital, Portland, recovering from an operation for appendicitis.

J. J. Parker motored to Seattle Thursday to meet Harry Arthur, Jr., and discuss the revised plans for alteration of the Majestic Theater. Neal East, manager for Paramount here, is also in Seattle.

Louis Amacher, M-G-M local manager, is away on trip over the territory.

Frank A. Lacey, formerly manager of the Majestic, is back in Portland for the purpose of disposing of his real estate holdings here. Lacey has connected with several Sacramento houses, and will make his home there.

Manager George Christophers of the Hollywood Theater, sponsored an amateur theatrical entertainment and banquet held by members of his staff at the theater after the show Friday. The piece de resistance of the evening's entertainment was a play written and produced by the staff.

Cleveland

GEORGE W. ERDMANN has been appointed secretary of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association. He assumed his new mantle of dignity last week, following the resignation of W. J. Banks, who has been executive secretary of the organization for the past four years.

Promotions have been the order of the day in the Standard Film Service organization. William Onie, manager of the Cleveland office of Standard, has been made assistant sales manager of the company, under Jesse Fishman, who is sales manager. Nat Lefkowitz, who managed the Cincinnati Standard exchange, takes Bill Onie's place as manager of the Cleveland office. And Bill Flemion, with a record as salesman for the Detroit Standard office for the past nine years, succeeds Lefkowitz as manager of the Cincinnati exchange.

W. N. Skirboll, local distributor for Columbia and Gold Seal productions, has just returned from a two months' pleasure trip abroad, which included, in addition to the beaten path, a trip to Carthage and other old Roman cities. The day Bill got home from Europe, Harry, manager of the Educational exchange in Cleveland, left for California to attend the convention.

George Palda is a new member of the film family residing in this Film Exchange Building these days. He is now associated with Paul Gusdanovic as partner.

Leo Devaney, manager of the Cleveland Universal exchange; Phil Dunas, assistant sales manager for this division; Andrew Sharrick, publicity director, and the entire Universal sales force, attended the Universal convention in Chicago. The girls were left behind to keep the wheels going 'round.

Mark Goldman, manager of the local Tiffany exchange, has returned from a Tiffany convention held last week in New York. Goldman stopped off in Boston to say "Howdy" to the folks.

John Himmelein, of the Paramount Cleveland exchange, is one of seventeen Paramount salesmen in the entire country to win a cash prize in the national sales contest.

Mrs. Robert Cotton, of Minneapolis, wife of Rev. Robert Cotton, and mother of Robert Cotton, central division manager for P. D. C., died at her home in Minneapolis last week, aged 86 years. Rev. Cotton, 88, Robert Cotton and three sisters survive.

Dr. B. I. Brody, general manager of the Universal circuit of theatres in Cleveland, known as the U-B circuit, is taking a vacation in Atlantic City with his wife and family.

The Stillman Theatre is installing a new ventilating and cooling system, which will be in operation no later than June 1st. Crews have taken possession of the theatre every day from midnight to noon of the next day. This system is being installed at an expense of approximately $75,000. Negotiations are under way to duplicate the system in the Allen and State Theatres also.

Cleveland theatres are co-operating with The Cleveland Press to put on a series of benefit performances next week at the Metropolitan Theatre, all profits to go to the Mississippi River flood sufferers. Talents playing at all local theatres, including the Palace, State, Allen and Hippodrome, will be recruited to make up a program. The show is dated to open on Tuesday and continue through the week. All tickets will sell for fifty cents.

Joe Calla, manager of the Strand Theatre, Canton, was in New York last week. The Strand has been all remodeled and redecorated.

Found—Billy Leyser. By Harry Charnes. In Hollywood. Leyser was motion picture editor of The News until two years ago, when he went to the Coast to get into the national advertising end of the business. Billy had lots of friends in Cleveland, but nobody ever heard a word from him after he left. Many have inquired. When Harry Charnes was in Hollywood this winter he met Leyser, who is [illegible] the publicity for the Metropolitan Studios. He's well and happy, and doing very well for himself, thank you.

Frank [illegible] Howard, who has been booking broker of the Cleveland Paramount exchange for the past six years, resigned last week.

Ed Fontaine, Pittsburgh Paramount exchange manager, was in town last week to meet with district manager Harry Dodge. Fontaine held a miniature reception while here.

Clint Cline has sold his Arcade theatre, Akron, to Arthur J. Hanze. Cline has been prominent in northern Ohio exhibitor activities for many years.

Howard Reiff, of the Scoville, Essick and Reiff circuit, has a new vice. It's golf. He had his first lesson one day last week under the tutelage of Percy Essick and Johnny Himmelein. Now Essick and Himmelein are offering Reiff a bribe to stay off the links.

H. T. Palmer, formerly manager of the Lyric theatre, Fairport Harbor, opened his new Park theatre, Painesville, last Wednesday night. He held a reception on the opening night. All the residents of Painesville were invited to come and see the theatre and enjoy a free show.

Seattle

THE Olympic Theatre in Seattle, built and opened a few months ago by E. G. Peters as a downtown second run house operating on a 25c policy, last week closed its doors for an indefinite time. Reports are current to the effect that the house will be taken over by one of the large suburban chains in this city, but verification of the report could not be had from "Christy" Christensen, manager.

C. M. Dunn, exhibitor of Cle Elm, Washington; Jack Allender, of the Ritz Theatre, Spokane; and Merle Davis, of the Ansonia Theatre in Butte, Montana, last month were the respective winners in Manager D. C. Millward's Western Film Corporation March Anniversary Contest. Film rental certificates of $250, $100 and $50 were awarded the first, second and third prize winners, in addition to a dozen smaller prizes for runners-up.

Thieves who apparently believed that they carried the theatre receipts home with him each evening last week stuck up Ed Dolan, genial manager and exhibitor of Aberdeen and other Southwest cities, as he entered his home at the end of the evening's shows. A $10 bill, however, proved to be practically the only cash available for the thieves—that coming from Mr. Dolan's pocket.

Jess G. Beckman, special sales representative for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, arrived in town last week. He came from Portland, and expected to return to California within a short time.

Word received from Tacoma last week indicated that H.M.S. Kendrick has resigned as manager of the Pantages Theatre in that city, and plans to return to the Fox Film Corporation's employ as supervising traveling manager.

Following the merger of the Western Film Corporation and the De Luxe Feature Film Company recently, Western has consolidated the two offices in new quarters at 2015 Third Avenue. Beatrice Morrison, Helen Ogden, and Joanne Chadwick, former De Luxe booker, cashier and inspectress respectively, remain a part of the newly enlarged Western Film group.

Jack Schlaifer, general manager of Universal Chai Theatre Enterprises and former manager of the local Universal exchange, arrived last week for a few days' business xisit.

O. O. Ruth and Waldo Ives, theatre magnates of Anacortes and Mount Vernon, Washington, spent a few days in this city last week arranging dates for forthcoming attractions.

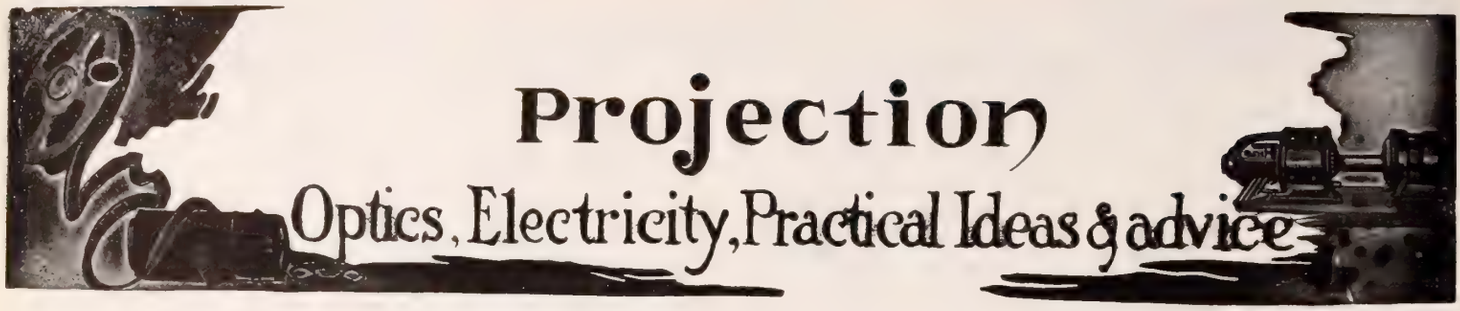
W. E. Whisnand and Lon Brown, competitive showman from the metropolis of Snohomish, Washington, were also seen by film magnates during the past few days.

Des Moines

THE Universal Theatrical Enterprises have bought the interests of Don Thornburg, formerly manager and part owner of the Casino Theatre at Marshalltown.

A new theatre is to be built at Thurman, Iowa, by Port Stephenson. The plans are all made and building will start at once.

It is reported the American Legion of Inwood offered to rent the theatre at Inwood paying 20 per cent of the gross as rent. However, the Community Hall board refused the offer, so it is thought that negotiations are all off.



The Grand Theatre at Muscatine, Iowa, which has been paying a license fee of $70 a year although the house is only open a few months of the year has appealed for a reduction of the license fee

Roy Chapman will have the management of the Garden Theatre at Lisbon, Iowa which has been reopened recently by the Scoloro Theatre Company of Cedar Rapids.

It is reported that the Strand Theatre at Boone has been closed.

Harold Larsen, Minneapolis decorator, is in charge of the work at the Colonial Theatre at Osage. This house is owned by Frank Wewerka, one of Iowa's most enterprising theatre men.

Jesse Collins sold his theatre at Perry, Iowa, to William Youngclass who has gone into partnership with C. J. Latta, Iowa, in the theatres at Perry. Mr. Latta bought the other theatre at Perry, the Grand, with Mr. Youngclass. The two men were formerly business partners.

Inquiries and Comments

Some Practical Considerations of the High Intensity Arc

Part II

THERE appear to be no small number of projectionists who entertain the idea that a high intensity arc possesses the same operating characteristics as the low intensity type and can, therefore, be subjected to the same flexible regulation, as regards current, which is ordinarily resorted to in the case of the old style arc.

In spite of the fact that there are available only four sizes of high intensity positive carbons, on each of which the proper operating current is plainly marked, instances have been noted wherein the particular electrode being used was operated either under its rated current value or above it.

Appreciable differences existed between the rated and operating current values in all the cases observed, such as, for example, the operation of a 120 ampere electrode on 100 amperes; the use of a 75 ampere electrode on 100 amperes; and the deliberate use of 170 amperes in connection with a 16 mm. 150 ampere carbon.

Strange to say, most of these errors were deliberate ones and resulted, in some cases, from ignorance on the part of the projectionist, and in others from a mistaken idea that additional illumination could be obtained by working a given size of electrode much in excess of its proper current value.

"Boosting" the High Intensity Effect

In one prominent Broadway house, the chief projectionist labored under the impression that the use of 170 amperes in connection with a 16 mm. 150 ampere carbon would give him greatly increased screen illumination—believing that by so doing he could "step things up" in a fashion similar to what he had been accustomed to with the old style of arc.

The result of these efforts to force the carbons (already loaded to a high current density to obtain the high intensity effect) nearly 20 per cent over their rated current capacity was a "dark" screen as often as twice during a single performance since the overloaded crater naturally tried to adjust itself to this abnormal condition without success.

It was pointed out to this projectionist that he stood no chance of obtaining appreciably greater screen illumination by so over-working the electrodes for the reason that the temperature at which the rare earth fluorides contained in the case vaporized, and was fixed so that the brightness of the incandescent flame (gas ball) could not be raised above its normal value.

Nor could a larger crater be established by the excess current since the normal size of the crater established by the proper rated current was of such a size as to constitute nearly the entire end section of the carbon.

The net result, therefore, was unstable arc operation with no material increase in screen light.

Carbons Designed for One Current Value

It is necessary to remember that high intensity positive electrodes are designed for a particular current and will deliver their best results only when operated on hte current for which they were made. Thus, the proper size for 50 amperes is 9 mm.; for 75 amperes, 11 mm.; 120 amperes, 13.6 mm.; 150 amperes, 16 mm.

While no additional illumination is obtained by operating them over-amperage, the effect of running them under their rated current value, as pointed out last week, is to entail an appreciable loss in screen light, which increases rapidly as the under-loading of the carbon is increased.

Thus, in those theatres using 120 ampere electrodes on 100 amperes, as mentioned earlier in this article, the loss in illumination would be of the order of 40 per cent. Even a reduction of 10 amperes involves a light loss of 20 per cent and the editor has been in any number of theatres where under-loading of the electrode to the extent of 10 amperes was considered hitting close enough to the 120 ampere rating; which goes to illustrate the attitude taken by many projectionists that the manufacturers' rating on the carbon is placed there more as a matter of policy than something to be seriously considered.

It is true that in some cases voltage conditions are such that the full rated current is impossible to obtain but the easy tolerance of such grossly inefficient conditions should not be so lightly overlooked by any chief projectionist worthy of the name.

Use Next Smaller Size

It would be better, in cases where the difference between rated current and that actually obtained was great, to change to the next lower size of carbon, thereby obtaining probably the same screen illumination with a great reduction in current.

As an illustration, suppose the 120 ampere size of electrode was being used and it was found that 100 amperes was the most which could be obtained. Where the conditions permitted, it would be more economical to switch to the 75 ampere electrode, thus taking an additional 5 per cent loss in light and saving approximately 2.5 kilowatts per hour. Or, if it was necessary to obtain greater illumination, then the low voltage condition should be corrected and not allowed to stand.

It is interesting to note, in this respect, that a 75 ampere electrode operating at its rated current will deliver practically the same amount of screen light as will a 120 ampere carbon operated at 100 amperes.

Use Care in Trimming Carbons

In the high intensity arc, the real source of light is the incandescent gas ball contained in the crater proper so that anything which tends to disturb this gas has an immediate and direct effect upon the screen illumination.

It is essential, therefore, to maintain this gas ball steadily at all times and it is also quite necessary to keep the crater well filled with gas from top to bottom. Since it is naural for the intensely hot gases to rise and spill out over the top of the crater, the various forces present in this type of lamp are used to prevent this spilling of the gas before the crater is completely filled.

This is accomplished by so directing the force of the gas stream issuing from the negative carbon as to cause it to strike the crater just above the axis of the positive carbon with the result that the crater gas is packed into the crater, completely filling it and thus maintaining a good source of light from crater edge to crater edge.

Some projectionists, in their haste to trim the lamp, frequently advance the positive too far forward so that the gas stream from the negative strikes the crater below its center. The result of this misadjustment is immediately evidenced by a light cloud of black soot which is pure carbon formed by incomplete combustion of the core ingredients. This is caused by the negative gas stream violently "scooping" out the crater gases before they are completely consumed.

This action is immediately evidenced in the screen intensity, which drops quite sharply. The remedy for this is to pull back the positive electrode slowly until the screen illumination again reaches its maximum value—at the same time making the arc more steady in operation.

The intersection of the negative axis with the crater should be carefully watched as automatic feeding progresses, in order to determine whether or not the feeding is proper at all times.

It all comes back to screen quality

The impression your theatre conveys, the reputation it enjoys, the day-to-day patronage it attracts —whatever phase of the business you consider, it all comes back in large measure to the screening quality of the pictures you show.

Specify prints on Eastman film —the medium that first made movies practical, that has been known from the infancy of the industry for its never-failing screen superiority.

S. M. P. E. Norfolk Meeting Highly Successful

Papers Presented by Authors of Note Cover Many Phases; Attendance Excellent

THE spring meeting of the S.M.P.E., which was held at the Monticello Hotel, Norfolk, Va., April 25-28 inclusive, proved to be one of the most successful ever held by that organization.

The list of papers presented were by authors of note and covered an exceptionally wide scope of all phases of the motion picture industry, from the most technical aspects to generalizations on the motion picture business.

The attendance of members and guests at this meeting set a record as being the largest in the history of the Society. Besides the comprehensive program of papers various specialties for the entertainment of the Society took place in the evenings.

Highlights on Wednesday

In particular, a banquet, held on Wednesday night, proved to be the highlight of the convention. Through the courtesy of the Vitaphone Corporation and the Western Electric Company, a Vitaphone presentation was given at the banquet.

A historic touch was added to the meeting, as Tuesday, April 26th marked the 320th anniversary of the landing of the Cavaliers on Cape Henry, and on that afternoon, in commemoration of this event, the entire convention motored from Norfolk to Cape Henry to witness the celebration.

The convention opened on Monday morning with a review of the progress of the Society by President Willard B. Cook, who stated that the present membership of the Society was the largest ever attained, and that efforts were now under way to further expand both the membership and the scope of the activities of the Society.

It was at this session that a new phase of the work to be undertaken by the Society was determined upon by the formation of a New Theatres Committee, whose duty it will be to engage in efforts to insure maximum comfort for theatre patrons, compatible with perfect projection, by coordinating the efforts of architects in the design of theatres. Also, assistance will be rendered to theatre owners and architects in illumination problems, such as the general lighting of the interior of theatres, as well as projection problems.

Two papers, which were of unusual interest, inasmuch as they were prepared by authors from foreign countries, were "A Film Developing Process for Automatic Records," by J. B. Engl, Technische Hochschule, Berlin, and "A Shutter Dissolving Mechanism," by D. L. Mistry, Bombay, India.

Many other points of interest to this industry were brought out through the various papers, one of which was a discussion of motion pictures in their use in the study of the form of athletes. This study is of particular significance, inasmuch as it was Muybridge's original desire to study, in a similar fashion, a race horse in action, that led to the invention of motion pictures.

Also, in another paper, it was pointed out that the eventual elimination, or at least a reduction of deleterious effects of arc lamp illumination in studios, may be brought about by the general use of panchromatic film, which gives good photographic results through using incandescent lamps rather than arc lamps.

A Twenty Ton Camera

A discussion of the scientific studies and investigations which are being carried on through the use of motion pictures was revealed in one of the papers. A notable achievement in this line of work, it was pointed out, is the construction of a movie camera weighing twenty tons, to be used for the purpose of making motion pictures of the planet Saturn and its rings.

A complete list of the papers and their authors, as they were presented at the convention, are as follows:

"Report of Progress in the Motion Picture Industry," by Carl E. Egeler, National Lamp Works, Cleveland, Ohio. "Hollywood and the Motion Picture Engineers," by K. C. D. Hickman, Research Laboratory, Eastman Kodak Company. "Radio Movies and the Theatre," by C. Francis Jenkins, Jenkins Laboratories, Washington, D. C. "Some Technical Aspect of the Vitaphone," by P. M. Rainey, Electrical Research Products Division, Western Electric Co. "CHANG"

"Chang" — the new film thriller made in Northern Siam by Mr. Ernest B. Schoedsack and M. C. Cooper with a "DEBRIE" all-metal camera, is the one topic of conversation in film circles today.

"Chang" is beyond doubt the most realistic, authentic, thrilling melodrama of jungle life ever filmed. Mr. Schoedsack has this to say about the film—and the "DEBRIE" camera:

"The 'DEBRIE' all metal camera with which the thrilling scenes of "Chang" were photographed was selected by us because of its utility and reliability and because it alone answered every requirement of the work we were called upon to do with it. We were 1½ years in the making of this picture, under the most severe of tropical conditions, and we never experienced any trouble or loss of even one foot of film. Nor do we see how we could have made some of the shots with any other type of outfit."

We are American Agents for the "DEBRIE" cameras—and stock all the new models, including the one selected for this marvelous film, as well as all equipment and accessories.

Chicago Theatre Inaugurates New Stage Policy

ASCHER BROTHERS recently threw open the doors of their magnificent new 3,500 seat theatre, the Sheridan, at Sheridan Road and Irving Park Boulevard, Chicago.

In this theatre the architects have created one of the most beautiful houses in Chicago, both externally and internally.

The exterior is in Greco-Roman architecture style where the columns and handsome beams are used in combination of lintels and arches. Features of the lobby are the two huge staircases located on either side which lead to the impressive foyer of loges and balcony. Pictures by well known French artists adorn the walls and the furnishings, draperies and tapestries are also all imported. The auditorium itself is featured by the proscenium with its unique treatment which sweeps to the dome of vivid colors overhead. The stage is of large size and every modern device has been installed.

The opening of the Sheridan inaugurates a new stage policy in Chicago, a complete musical comedy with a New York cast holding the stage of the new theatre, the first offering being entitled, "Sally." The production was staged by Frank M. Rainger, head of the Ascher production staff, and a large chorus provided a feast for the eyes of patrons.

Edmund Fiteh, noted organist, is at the console of the new Wurlitzer organ, and Roy McMullen, a veteran in Ascher service, is in charge of the house.

Ascher Brothers are among the pioneers to the motion picture theatre business and have operated houses in Chicago continuously for twenty years, since the opening of their first house, the Little President, one of Chicago's early nickelodeons. During this period, their chain has steadily expanded until, with the addition of the Sheridan, Ascher Brothers are now operating seventeen fine motion picture houses in Chicago.

Marr and Colton Organ Co. Report Installations

The Marr & Colton Organ Company have reported new sales and installations of their instruments to the following: A new five-manual organ for Messrs. Fenyvessy's new three million dollar theatre, Rochester, N. Y.; a special organ, recently installed for broadcasting use by the Wisconsin News studio over station WSOE, and another new Marr & Colton instrument for Harry Schwartz's new Admiral Theatre, West Lawrence Avenue, Chicago. The latter will also broadcast a program of organ music over station WBBM from 6:20 to 7:00 Eastern time.

New Projection Screen Installed in Roxy

A new projection screen has been installed in the Roxy Theatre. This screen is manufactured by the Royal Projection Screen Company, Brooklyn, N. Y., and is of a glass beaded surface. The beads used for this surface are being imported from Germany.

It is pointed out by those responsible for the installation of the Royal screen in the Roxy that this screen apparently gives great depth to pictures, a depth that verges on stereoscopic effects.

Through the use of this screen the projection department of the Roxy theatre predicts that the current required for the projection arcs will be reduced by one-third.

Begin Erection of New Woodstock Theatre

Work has been started on the new Woodstock Theatre at Woodstock, Illinois, which is being erected by J. C. Miller, owner of the present theatre in that city. Elmer F. Behrns is the architect. The new house will have a seating capacity of nine hundred and eighty and it is said, will cost about $90,000. The auditorium is designed in Moorish architecture and will be illuminated through ornamental grills on the side walls. The exterior is in Spanish type of architecture.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"Tell It to the Marines"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles

Examiner: "Military scenes as splendidly executed as anything yet offered. Even real thing furnished by News Reels doesn't give any better idea. . . . Characterizations register with bang. . . . Lon Chaney seen for first time with all his members intact. His hard-boiled sergeant a gorgeous portrayal."

Daily News: "Should stir finest emotions. . . . Picture that will keep real side of soldier-sailor life alive. . . . Has entertainment value. Doesn't preach, but it does inspire patriotism."

Times: "Has natural charm. . . . Brilliant. . . . All very natural and believable . . . Surely, most lovable soldier scamp that ever fought and loved and got into scrapes and did kitchen police is William Haines. The subtitles are certainly peaches. . . . George Hill directed and it is quite impossible to praise too much the smooth skill, the vibrant movement, the general zip and naturalness and charm of his work."

Express: "You don't want to let 'Tell It to the Marines' slip by. Several reasons for this. . . . In a word, 'Tell It to the Marines' has all qualities that make good picture near perfect."

Herald: "Brilliant audience gave vociferous welcome. . . . Applauded numerous times. . . . Admirable picture, ably directed, superbly acted. . . . From start to finish one of best acted pictures I have been privileged to view."

Record: "One fact alone, if there were no others, and there are, guarantees enormous success. This is that Lon Chaney is the star. He gives a remarkable interpretation. . . . It is to be expected that thousands of film enthusiasts will see 'Tell It to the Marines,' for the picture is crammed full of zip and zest, telling ever fascinating story of those daredevils, the U. S. Marines."

"Lovers?" — Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer, Capitol Theatre, New York City

Morning Telegraph: "If you want cinema drama that has strength in spinal column, by all means see 'Lovers?'. By all odds best of seven photodramas reviewed in this issue. Stirring, suspenseful vehicle, competently directed, nobly enacted."

Times: "Absorbing picture. . . . Narrative flows so easily and convincingly that it is joyous relief after many pictures overflowing with artificialities. Novarro really splendid; Alice Terry an excellent choice."

World: "'Lovers?' attracted to first big cinema theatre for afternoon showings yesterday crowds which filled the seats, even into the side boxes, and stood up less fortunate ones, eight or ten deep across broad foyer at rear."

Daily News: "Alice Terry and Ramon Novarro get together again after a screen separation of several years. No question as to merits of picture. Beautifully photographed, well directed and finally convincing. Novarro gives beautiful performance. Alice as lovely as ever."

Herald: "We should say that Ramon Novarro gave perfect performance and Edward Martindel never has done anything better."

Mirror: "Brilliant cinema. So sympathetically produced, so realistically handled and so excellently acted that it merits salvos of applause from those grown weary of movie-esque tripe. Domestic tangle an ancient subject but this flicker freshens old story."

Post: "One of best duel scenes we ever saw. Not only is fight remarkably well photographed—it is also about hundred times more exciting than usual film duel, for simple reason that the outcome is not evident from beginning. 'Lovers?' has almost everything in its favor."

Graphic: "Madrid of beautiful homes and scandal-spreading inhabitants is locale for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's 'Lovers?'. Commendation due John M. Stahl for this film. Without doubt Novarro is one of handsomest men on screen. He has perfect profile and seems to grow younger with each film. . . . There is suspense carried through entire action."

American: "Director has made fine job of picture. Ramon Novarro looks too good to be true."

Journal: "Best picture of week. Strength and suspense and intelligence in film, which illustrates far-reaching venom of idle gossip."

"Vanity" — Producers Distributing Corporation, Ritz, Theatre, Los Angeles

Record: "The fascinating and emotional Leatrice Joy of 'Manslaughter' is back again—back one hundred percent hit!

"Along with this regeneration comes a new, mysterious comedienne—also Leatrice Joy, and Leatrice, what a joy it is to view this production. . . . Director Donald Crisp has done an excellent job with his megaphone, delivering a truly 'crisp' melodrama pleasantly sprinkled with adequate sequences of hilarious comedy. The settings and camera work, too, were most attractive. Another surprise is the performance of Alan Hale . . . in a comedy sailor characterization that certainly equals anything that Wallace Beery has done."

"Resurrection"—United Artists, Criterion Theatre, Los Angeles

Evening Herald: "Is among best. Will be received as one of ten best photodramas of 1927. Not only does tell forceful, gripping story, not only does one receive same impression from picture that is received while reading book, but fine handling of character and del Rio and La Rocque raise the production from the class of ordinary. Is superbly cast. Scenically, production far above ordinary. Is one of the best things that Carewe has ever directed, if not best."

Examiner: "Miss del Rio superb. Stands out among great screen performances. Enough glory in 'Resurrection' to be spread in many directions. Will probably rate at end of year as one of 1927's finest offerings."

Record: "Is awe-inspiring. . . . One of best pictures that has ever come out of Hollywood studio.

"Madame Wants No Children"—Fox Films, Monroe Theatre, Chicago

Tribune: "Clever and subtle—Excellent, unusual . . . yields considerable enjoyment . . . has charms all its own . . . intimate, vivaciously sophisticated . . . interesting and amazingly well done."

Daily News: "Laugh provoking picture. . . . Acting and directing intelligent."

Herald Examiner: "Film good. . . . Misses by only breath being great picture . . . extraordinary . . . acting refreshingly natural—even subtle . . . much of picture novel."

The Voice of the Silent Drama

TO THE NEWEST of popular arts, Kilgen brings the Aristocracy of Years . . . . On an infant industry Kilgen bestows the fruits of almost three centuries of experience.

Kilgen craftsmen for generation after generation have been developing the modern pipe organ. All that they have learned about tone quality and dependable action now serves as a background of experience for the Kilgen Wonder Organ which provides the "Voice of the Silent Drama" in motion picture theatres throughout the land.

During the past ten years Kilgen and the photoplay have been traveling together to new heights of success. The Kilgen Wonder Organ has provided new tonal beauty for motion picture accompaniment; and in so doing has won new opportunity for growth and service.

Profiting from this happy relationship are successful motion picture exhibitors who know the box office value of "The Voice of the Silent Drama." If you are planning a new instrument let a Kilgen organ architect tell you how to secure a Wonder Organ well adapted to your theatre and pocketbook... Geo. Kilgen & Son, Inc., Builders of Pipe Organs, St. Louis, U. S. A.

ARCTIC NU-AIR COMPLETELY CONTROLLED VENTILATION

U. S. Government Repeats!

Army Motion Picture Service Purchases Ten More

ARCTIC NU-AIR VENTILATING COOLING SYSTEMS

NO more convincing evidence of Arctic Nu-Air supremacy in the field of theater cooling and ventilating can be submitted than its list of "circuit repeaters." Here is business that can only be transacted on a PAST PERFORMANCE basis.

The history of the U. S. Army Motion Picture Service purchases of Arctic Nu-Air Systems is typical of the repeat orders we are receiving from the biggest circuit owners of the country. The first War Department Theater was equipped last May. By September eleven more systems had been installed. Ten more have already been ordered this year.

There is more of this indisputable evidence that we will gladly submit if you will send the coupon.

A SURVEY OF PICTURES

Spring ~ 1927

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER

"More Stars Than There Are In Heaven"

Karl Dane and George K. Arthur, the new Comedy Team, whose first vehicle to fame is the sensational "Rookies."

A SURVEY OF PICTURES

Spring ~ 1927

AGAIN this Spring Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer commands the attention of the industry.

In every city of the nation M-G-M attractions are doing the outstanding business at Box-Offices.

AN unprecedented line-up of hits is being delivered to M-G-M exhibitors. The gold-rush is on! And the end is not in sight, for M-G-M has in store for you some of the greatest productions it has ever released.

Lon Chaney in "Tell It to the Marines"

"ROOKIES" is just one diamond in the M-G-M sky. Lon Chaney in "Mr. Wu," "Captain Salvation" are among many other Big Ones.

IT TAKES a smooth-working, dependable organization to give you pictures like "Flesh and the Devil," "Tell It to the Marines" and "Slide, Kelly, Slide" in rapid succession.

John Gilbert and Greta Garbo in "Flesh and the Devil"

Then to follow through with hits, hits, hits!

DEPEND on M-G-M always. No other organization has its personnel of practical showmen, nor its production facilities.

AND WHEN you have checked the lists carefully you'll find that the stars who mean money at the box-office are under M-G-M's banner.

YOUNG Blood this Spring continues its uninterrupted march to supremacy in the motion picture industry!

It has just been announced that Lillian Gish in "Annie Laurie" will follow "Slide, Kelly, Slide" into the Embassy at $2 admission. Another feather in M-G-M's cap!

"SLIDE, KELLY, SLIDE" is enjoying a merited success at legitimate theatre prices at the Embassy Theatre, N. Y. Showmen who plan to run a baseball picture this Spring will find that "Slide, Kelly, Slide" is the only baseball subject playing as a road-show and has been acclaimed the greatest of its kind ever made. Box-offices everywhere agreee!

Lon Chaney in his amazing characterization of "Mr. Wu," a triumph in its $1.65 run at the twice daily Forum, Los Angeles and everwhere.

THE IMPORTANCE OF "ROOKIES"

Karl Dane and George K. Arthur become the Screen's leading Comedy Team

KARL DANE
Whose fame in "The Big Parade" now grows tremendously through his work in "Rookies."

DAILY the wires pour in telling of the early success of "Rookies" in all theatres. Stanley Chambers, of Wichita, Kansas, says: "Knockout comedy. Dane and Arthur great combination. Will bring out the old S.R.O. sign at box-office." Jed Buell, of West Coast Theatres, wires: "Had to have two carpenters re-anchor seats." The Strand Theatre, Waterbury, holds over picture. The second week in Cleveland beats the first week. The Capitol rolls up tremendous gross. And so it goes everywhere. And this is just the beginning.

"ROOKIES" comes to picture audiences at a fortunate time.

Never before has the box-office reflected public eagerness for comedy productions as right now. The outstanding hits today are comedies. They do the big business.

"Rookies" in addition to its laughs has the most thrilling balloon-scenes ever taken.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER sweeps in on this public craze for comedies with the very greatest of all!

GEO. K. ARTHUR
brings real acting ability to the comedy field. Fame and fortune are now his

"Rookies" is the biggest thing—bar none — that the Spring of 1927 offers anywhere in this whole industry.

Already the news of "Rookies" is being shouted from film row to film row, and wise exhibitors are making sure of it. You will never forgive yourself if you miss out on it. In "Rookies" the industry witnesses the introduction of a new comedy team, Karl Dane and George K. Arthur.

THERE HAVE been comedy teams before, but M-G-M believes Karl Dane and George K. Arthur starting with "Rookies" will prove to be greater than any who have preceded them, a tremendous factor to be reckoned with at box-offices in coming months.

"Captain Salvation" is a Cosmopolitan Special in every sense of the word. The photograph above shows the picturesque old sailing vessel bought especially for this picture. The story of "Captain Salvation" is now being serialized to millions through the Hearst papers.

M-G-M STARS and DIRECTORS are LEADERS

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER exhibitors are in a more secure position today than the exhibitors of any other product.

NORMA SHEARER

M-G-M has the stars that mean something at the box-office.

M-G-M knows that the great American public patronizes theatres that can display popular names.

JOHN GILBERT

YOU CAN put names like John Gilbert and Norma Shearer on your marquee when you have an M-G-M contract.

LILLIAN GISH

Ramon Novarro, Lon Chaney, Lillian Gish, Marion Davies are names at the top today and still growing.

LON CHANEY

WILLIAM HAINES has come into the most sensational stardom of years. "Tell it to the Marines" and "Slide, Kelly, Slide" have put him over with the public 100 per cent.

MARION DAVIES

Greta Garbo's amazing hold on the public cannot be duplicated anywhere in this industry. "Flesh and the Devil" is just a foretaste of the money she means for the theatres.

RAMON NOVARRO

WILLIAM HAINES

GRETA GARBO

M-G-M has created the most winning of all Western stars, Tim McCoy. He's clean and different. America's keen for him.

Jackie Coogan, Joan Crawford, Lew Cody, Eleanor Boardman, Aileen Pringle, Renee Adoree and a host of other names are among M-G-M's "more stars than there are in heaven."

"Tillie the Toiler" is Marion Davies' most amusing comedy role. Seldom a picture so widely known in advance as this one based on the Hearst syndicated comic strip.

And the crowning achievement, the new comedy team, Karl Dane and George K. Arthur. M-G-M above all others is the Star Maker.

THEY ARE being directed by the top-notch directors in attractions sponsored by the smartest aggregation of showmen ever gathered together under one banner.

When you examine all the facts you can only come to one conclusion:

M-G-M gives exhibitors security!

THE STARS ON THIS PAGE ARE UNDER EXCLUSIVE CONTRACT TO M-G-M.

William Haines is welcomed to stardom by the applause of "Slide, Kelly, Slide."

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios still remain unsurpassed in size and production facilities. Hardly a day passes without some new improvement and addition being made to this amazing plant.

RECENTLY an order was published at the great M-G-M studios: No more visitors allowed! We regret the need for this. We would like to entertain visitors but we are too busy making hits for you.

So great are the production activities at M-G-M's Culver City plant that for the first time in history it has become necessary to bar visitors.

Under the direction of Louis B. Mayer and his famous lieutenants a program is under way that will amaze this industry by its magnitude and its diversity of subject.

FOURTEEN COMPANIES are engaged, under supervision of the industry's foremost money directors. They are creating the lively entertainments that you have witnessed coming in consistent numbers from this great organization of showmen.

M-G-M having recently given exhibitors such hits as "Flesh and the Devil," "Slide, Kelly, Slide," "Rookies," "Mr. Wu" and now "Captain Salvation," "The Unknown" and others, is prepared to wind up its Spring and Summer season in a continued blaze of glorious achievement.

Lon Chaney in "The Unknown" is another Big M-G-M Spring attraction.

IN this industry it is M-G-M that is talked about, because of its progressive activities.

Young Blood, more ambitious than ever, has ideas, pep, daring that will ever continue in coming weeks to merit the respect and admiration of the entire industry.

SHORT FEATURES

---They're Off!

They're off! Like racers leaping away at the crack of the pistol, the sales forces are beginning their annual campaigns. And the Short Feature gets greater attention; bigger emphasis is put on it everywhere; salesmen are talking about the Short Feature who never sold one before.

But, after all, the product itself isn't changed so very much. The company that has kept faith with you in the past will do so in the coming season.

What a line-up Educational offers you! Lupino Lane, Lloyd Hamilton, "Big Boy," Dorothy Devore, Larry Semon, the Tuxedo Comedies with Johnny Arthur, the Mermaid Comedies, and the fine group of single reel subjects including Cameo Comedies, Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge, Robert C. Bruce's Outdoor Sketches, Felix the Cat Cartoons, Curiosities and the best news reel on the market, Kinograms. Supported by national advertising and big exploitation tie-ups; backed up by seven years of specialized experience in the Short Feature field.

Don't be dazzled by the excitement of the get-away. The safest way is to play the favorite—the favorite of 13,000 exhibitors.

New York City.

Dear Mr. Johnston:-

It may interest you to know that at a recent meeting of the house managers of the Small-Strausberg Circuit of Theatres, the writer brought up the subject of "Trade Papers" for manager's use.

The merits of the various trade papers were discussed pro and con. The benefits derived from such features and departments contained in the Motion Picture News as,

Exhibitor's Service Bureau
Current Reviews of Pictures
Feature and Short Subject Release Chart and The Semi-Annual Booking Guide

were immediately recognized by the managers, with the result that the Small-Strausberg circuit has now subscribed 100% for the Motion Picture News.

For myself, I want to congratulate you upon the inauguration of "The Showman" section. This department to my mind is a step in the right direction and should prove invaluable to managers who will take the time to read and absorb the fund of information contained therein.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Yours very truly,

Motion Picture News

Volume XXXV NEW YORK CITY, MAY 20, 1927 No. 20

An Editor in Hollywood

Final Article of a Series on the Production Centre

By William A. Johnston

Hollywood, April 30.

THERE'S a considerable air of excitement at the Warner Bros. Studio. A new stage is going up; changes are being made in some of the projection rooms; and many odd looking boxes never seen before around Hollywood studios are arriving daily on the lot.

All this is in anticipation of the arrival from the East of George Jessel, at which time "The Jazz Singer" will be put into production.

And "The Jazz Singer"—now comes forth the secret—will be made throughout with Vitaphone accompaniment; all possible enhancing and interpretative effects of instrumental melody, vocal and other sound effects. Rehearsals of these are already going an and without delving in detail I can say that as much care, ingenuity and talent are to go into the Vitaphone part of the production as enters ordinarily into the best of Hollywood pictures.

The trade will watch the results of this enterprise with intense interest.

It is, it seems to me, the most significant piece of development work now going on out here.

We have been discussing the Vitaphone, back East, in connection with its presentation specialties and orchestration of the picture. Very little, certainly very little in an imaginative way, has been said of the picture production possibilities.

I don't know, of course, how Warner Brothers are going to turn this trick; it is a good deal of an undertaking. But one can readily enough sense the splendid possibilities. And I can safely say this, that, if the studio work turns out as it should, it will have a mighty big effect upon picture entertainment.

Watch it!

I DID not add, by the way, in speaking of "Wings" that out at the Paramount lot, and under cover, a good deal of experimental work is going on with sound effects. The droning of the aeroplanes will be reproduced —the varying makes of machines, and at varying distances. Also there are to be some brand new and startling projection tricks.

Don't minimize the importance of these mechanical developments—by any means.

We have been admirably progressive with the camera, but pretty deficient with projection. And while musical and stage accompaniment has been highly developed, almost over-developed, we have not as yet put the interpretative effects—and how important they are!—into the picture itself.

DOES anyone recall the Regent Theatre in New York, in 1913, when Roxy first made there his bow to the New York public; back-of-the-screen-shout when the columns crashed down in "The Last Days of Pompeii?"

Not a great advance, surely, from then to 1927 and the reproduction of the weird noise of an aeroplane.

The motion picture is now in the greatest of all ages of invention. Will it be greatly affected? Of course it will; nothing can stop it.

Those who constantly think that so marvelous a basis of entertainment will stay put and stay in certain grooves and under the brain control of a few concerns and the power of financial interests, theatres, etc., are thinking in the days of the Patents Company. And some people, at that time, thought wrong.

ANOTHER thing about Warner Brothers—their pictures. In the East we have, of late, been discussing this company mostly in terms of the Vitaphone.

Before I left New York I heard that Warner pictures were, as a whole, topping the box-office record of a certain prominent chain. Since arriving here I have talked about picture programs with the heads of two other chains located West of Buffalo and they tell me pretty much the same thing.

And the answer is, I think, that there's a good deal of practical showmanship at the head of the Warner concern. Which is the answer generally out here. J. L. Warner is rated a showman producer, even by his competitors. And there are three other showman brothers!

"This business is all right," said he. "But I've got one criticism and it's this: there isn't so much studio competition here, as there used to be. There isn't the competition there should be. And the reason is that there's less theatre competition. Put them in two or three or several chains and there will be too little. That is what is happening right now. It is a vast change over the past, when there were no chains."

All of which sounds pretty true.

"Take our picture 'Wolf's Clothing'", he went on. "It is just one of our pictures. It was held over a second week in The Roxy, where apparently it pleased several hundred thousand people. What showing would it have otherwise had in New York?

"However, we're not kicking." And, apparently, they are too busy, on the Warner lot, to kick.

I SAW on the Warner lot an odd assortment of automobiles, beginning with the first one that raced with a horse and so on up to Barney Oldfield's famous racer, old "999". These curiosities have been used in "The First Auto." Jack Warner is enthusiastic about this and also about "Old San Francisco" with Dolores Costello. He promises a very human, and novel picture in "The First Auto."

The latter picture, by the way, has been made with Mazda lamps, the first to be turned out here with this new studio illumination.

"You can put these two down" he said," with 'My Four Years in Germany' and 'The Sea Beast', two pictures I was sure about in advance."

Two more specials are "Black Ivory" and "Noah's Ark." Considerable preparations are being made for the latter. It will be directed by Michael Curtiz, the Austrian director, of whom very favorable things are being said; he has just finished "A Million Bid," with Dolores Costello.

Dolores Costello follows this in "The Heart of Maryland."

"Ham and Eggs at the Front"—a comedy war drama of two colored warriors sounds good.

In addition to the Warner twenty-six there will be, altogether, some eight or more specials.

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY is going right ahead with his policy of adding the best executives to the F. B. O. roster.

A year ago last Fall he secured Edwin C. King, head of the Eastern Paramount Studios—generally regarded as the most competent studio manager in the business. And now William LeBaron is coming out.

And King will welcome him with open arms.

of the Production Situation

The F. B. O. schedule is not increased in volume over last year. But, last year, more than half the product came from outside sources. Now the entire slate of seventy pictures,—including the Witwer two reel features, is being made within the F. B. O. lot. And King has borne the brunt of this heavy schedule.

A most interesting schedule is presented.

Pictures founded upon ideas—especially exploitable ideas—that is the general policy of production with F. B. O. It has proven successful in the past and this year is still more closely adhered to.

The second test is that the stories and treatment shall be melodramatic—action, thrills, comedy situations, as opposed to the sophisticated type of picture.

"The Wind Jammers of Gloucester", by John Pell, who wrote "Down to the Sea in Ships" will tie up with the well advertised local industries of Gloucester.

"The Legionaire in Paris" will be filmed in connection with the trip to Paris in August of 30,000 members of the American Legion.

"Crooks Can't Win" will glorify the American police; also "Chicago After Dark," a mystery melodrama of the night life of Chicago's cabaret world.

The great success of Henry Irving Dodge's recent rejuvenation story in the Saturday Evening Post will be taken advantage of, from the exploitation angle, by a series of pictures based upon the theme of youth. The insurance companies, Y.M.C.A., etc., have distributed millions of pamphlets containing Dodge's story.

Beatrice Burton's "Little Yellow House" will be released along with the publication of the book by Doran, and the conclusion of the serial in McCall's Magazine. This same scheme, by the way, of contemporaneous picture and magazine serial publication will be used by Mary Pickford in her next picture. Colliers will carry the story in advance of picture release under the title of "Cash and Carry."

Other F. B. O. specials are:

"The Gingham Girl" with Lois Wilson, and also with George K. Arthur who has scored so well in "Rookies."

The Red Grange special, with a notable cast, including Jobyna Ralston, Trixie Friganza, Walter Hiers and others.

Two Gene Stratton Porter pictures, "The Harvester" and "Freckles." The recent release "The Magic Garden" ran two weeks here at the Figueroa. The Porter pictures have made money for the first runs.

Leo Meehan's picture of the Kentucky Mountains "Down Our Way" with Virginia Vailli, Frankie Darrow and Orville Caldwell of "The Miracle"; "a gem of a picture" Edwin King calls this.

"Clancy's Kosher Wedding" with George Sidney. Charlie Murray was also slated for this, but in lieu of himself suggested William Armstrong as "The only man I'm afraid of on the screen."

A good deal is expected of "The Great Mail Robbery." It is modern mail robbery picture with the Marines and radio as safeguards.

F. B. O. will go in strong for Westerns this year. Particular attention will be paid to the Tyler series; and I judge that the object is to groom Tom Tyler for the popularity of Fred Thomson who now goes under the Paramount banner. Robert Bradbury has been put at the head of the Western production units and has just returned from a trip to British Columbia with a report more important than his mission after locations and story material; an interesting announcement from F. B. O. in this connection may come later on.

M. H. HOFFMAN, who was here on production matters tells me that Tiffany has perfected a national organization; distribution now covers the United States with twenty-eight exchanges. There are four in Canada and twelve more distributing offices will handle the product in Europe and Cuba. Seven of these offices are in Great Britain.

The Tiffany announcement of twenty features will shortly be made; and from all production angles they seem to rank right up with the best programs. In addition, to these, several specials of extended run calibre will be produced.

Hoffman knows his market with the best of them; he is another producer who has had not only plenty of experience in that field but also in direct contact and importantly so, with the sales and theatre ends.

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION will have to be put down now among the national organizations. Let that fact be known.

I wouldn't be surprised to see the plant moved away soon to the outlying districts of Hollywood, both because more room will be needed and because of the high value of the present location on Sunset Boulevard.

Joe Brandt and Harry and Jack Cohn deserve a lot of credit for their fast and considerable expansion. Of course they had a long and rounded experience in the motion picture business to begin with.

They first learned the picture market top and bottom and consequently they are making marketable pictures; every now and then they make the first run market; but right along they hit the general box office.

This year's schedule calls for thirty features, an increase over last year's twenty-four; and that in turn calls for a sizable plant, lots of resources and plenty of hard work. They are signing up well known names on a contract basis and their distribution is now, practically, a national one.

Casting is under way for "The Blood Ship," a sea story which Conan Doyle pronounces the best, to his liking. Hobart Bosworth will be featured.

The successful "Lone Wolf Returns" of last season will be followed this year with "Alias the Lone Wolf" by Louis Joseph Vance

Priscilla Dean will appear in several crook pictures. Betty Compson is also under contract for a number of specials. Other well known names in the Columbia "Perfect Thirty" schedule are: Johnny Walker, Shirley Mason, Ralph Graves, Helene Chadwick, George Fawcett, Ann Pennington, Stanley Forrest, William V. Mong, Eugenie Gilbert.

George B. Seitz will direct "The Blood Ship". Ralph Ince, Walter Long and Frank Strayer are also under director contracts. I saw some scenes from an East Side, New York, comedy which Ralph Graves is directing and in which he also appears with Johnny Walker; and it looks good and funny.

The Columbia list of titles is striking; and the story material is from such authors and playwrights in the world of melodrama and comedy as: Willard Mack, Channing Pollock, Alfred Henry Lewis, Octavus Roy Cohen, George Bronson Howard, Jack Lait, etc.

GOTHAM, under the leadership of Sam Sax, is making rapid strides. He has a line-up of fourteen, possibly sixteen pictures for the new season. These include stories by well-known authors on a variety of subjects.

Two special offerings will star Mrs. Wallace Reid. As we have pointed out, exhibitors will do well to bear in mind the offerings of progressive independents in making up their bookings.

STILL another contender for national rating among the independent programs is Excellent Pictures, which will shortly announce an imposing schedule for the season of 1927-28. As I say, the exhibitor should give these pictures his thoughtful consideration, first, because he wants as open a production market as is possible; and, secondly, because with the big companies straining at specials these so-called independent producers concentrate more on the standard type of feature.

Their studio resources have paralleled the general advance here and the list of free lance players makes available, although at high salary costs, the desired number of box-office names.

The Week in Review

Comment on Passing Affairs

THE eminent producer-director, Cecil B. DeMille, speaking before the Graduate School of Business Administration of Harvard University on "Directing Motion Pictures," said in part: "To begin with, the director is in the position of the leader of an orchestra. He has to wave a baton in order to get the right tempo. He has to see that the bassoon does not come in while the violin is playing its solo. He has to hold together all the departments and he has to see that they all function on time, to see that everything meets in this little set where he is going to turn a camera for a few minutes. The months of preparation to bring about that moment I will cover first.

"The first thing is the idea. What idea are you going to produce? The sales department will always name to you the last success, whatever it was, and say 'Produce that because it was a success.' Had you named that idea to the sales department before it was a success they would have thrown up their hands in horror and would have said, 'But nobody wants to see that.' That has been my experience in blazing a trail practically from the beginning of pictures, that nobody was in sympathy with the subject I wanted to do until after it was a success."

Mr. Kennedy (the chairman of the meeting) kindly mentioned "The King of Kings." At a time when everybody is producing melodrama, when such pictures as "Crime" and "Broadway" and "The Spider" are intriguing the public, I felt that the world was ready for the life of Christ. When I suggested it, we almost had to artificially resuscitate the financial department. They said, "No, what they want is melodrama." But that is the time to do the other thing.

THEN comes the matter of the treatment, the treatment at least as to whether the subject is big enough to carry on what we call a super-special. When that point is decided, the amount of money to be expended comes next, whether the idea is big enough to carry $150,000, $200,000, $300,000, $500,000, or $1,000,000 as the case may be. In the case of "The King of Kings" the cost was $2,300,000.

Your first treatment resembles the plan of a house. You do not sit down and have a writer write a scenario. You draft a treatment, that is, a plan. You look for a foundation on which to stand your story.

If your treatment is as strong as you can make it, then comes your continuity, the scene for scene scenario.

Next comes the art director, the man who designs the sets. We will say you have a great scene called for—the vision of temporal power in "The King of Kings," which Satan shows to Jesus, where the power of the world is depicted. For instance, in the scene I have just mentioned, the vision of temporal power, we changed the Temple of Jerusalem into a vision of Rome, and because it was an imaginative thing, we had to show Rome even more magnificent than it was; in other words, a hundred Romes piled one on top of another.

Then comes the costume department. If it is a costume picture the research department must start months before. The next point is the camera. The selection of a cameraman is vitally important. In painting, if you were going to do a painting of the battle of Waterloo you would not employ Corot to paint it, because he paints a different type of thing. So with motion pictures—certain cameramen are excellent for the pastoral scenes, while other cameramen are better fitted for drama.

THE next point is cast. Is your story strong enough to be made without using a star? Or is it so weak that you must have a great, well-known personality? We will talk about "The King of Kings" for argument's sake, and say that this subject is big enough, so that it requires no star.

We send for the casting director and we say, "Here are the types that we want. I am going to require Twelve Disciples; I am going to require Mary the Mother; I am going to require Mary Magdalene; I am going to require Simon the Cyrenean—not just people who are merely capable of playing these parts but people who will sit in the frame of such picture, not just actors or actresses but types that are psychologically right."

The theory of casting a picture is a very important and very subtle one. You have got to make a combination that the public wants to see and that will give you the highest point in artistry for the amount of money expended. The direcor has to fit his cast accordingly. He has to consider the general frame of the picture, and by frame I mean the atmosphere.

If possible, select from the screen first before you see the individual, so that you get the screen personality. That is a very, very important point. The same is true in acting a scene. You cannot judge it with the eye. You should see it that night on the screen, before deciding whether it is good or bad.

If he is a wise director he rehearses through the camera and he doesn't stand back and tell everybody what to do. He rehearses through the camera because that gives him the picture he is going to see on the screen.

The element of time is a vital factor. In the case of "The King of Kings," that picture cost $10,000 a day to make for 116 days of shooting time, or $2,225 an hour. You can see what a moment's indecision means.

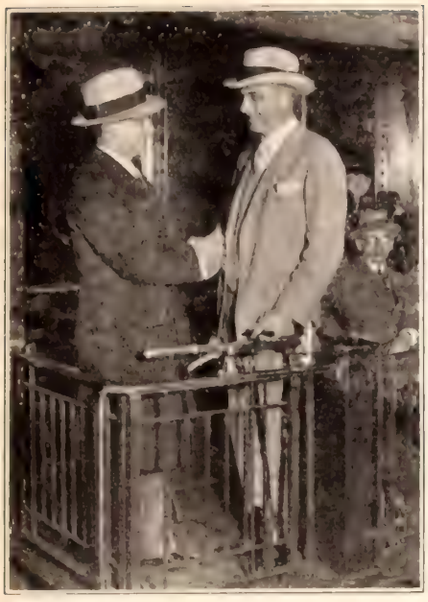
SYDNEY S. COHEN, now chairman of the advisory board of the M. P. T. O. A., and former head of that organization for many years, contributes an interesting and vital article to the May issue of The Rotarian under the title, 'The Photoplay, Its Possibilities as an Apostle of Public Service." Extracts from it follow:

In this era, when public service is in the ascendency, in a moral as well as in a public-utilities sense, it is well to pause and note that no other industry offers greater opportunity for real and genuine public service than does the motion-picture industry. Millions of persons each day patronize photoplay theatres, read photoplay news, and think and dream of "the movies."

The motion-picture—the photoplay—is the great universal entertainer, because it speaks the great universal language of the eye. A Czecho-Slovakian lad will laugh at the antics of a Harold Lloyd with the same unrestrained glee as will the boys of English-speaking countries. A Russian mother or daughter will thrill to the romance and tragedy of a "Stella Dallas" as keenly as will her sisters in the United States.

In the earlier days of American life, the town square, the general store, the post-office, the local drug-store—and the gone, but not forgotten, corner saloon—were gathering places for those so inclined. Public opinion was formulated and promulgated at these places, and they each have played their part in the affairs of nations. Today, we find that the photoplay theatre (and its owner) loom large in the scheme of things economic and social.

Through personal contact with his patrons added to an exhibition of public spiritedness, many a theatre-owner in the smaller community, as well as in the larger cities, has become a vital force and an outstanding personage in his neighborhood. He has joined the various civic associations in his town and entered whole-heartedly into every local program, until today his theatre is truly a civic center. More and more the theatre-owners are commencing to realize the responsibility that is theirs as the custodians of the screen press, because the motion-picture is nothing but the picturizing of the news events of the world printed on celluloid.



The motion-picture theatre-owner realizes full well the great force for public good which is in his hands and is doing his level best to live up to that responsibility. He has in the past enlisted the interest and co-operation of national figures in his work. These men have seen the pertinency of the problems confronting us, and, seeing, have not only felt the urge and desire to help, but have actually helped, realizing that the motion-picture, the theatre and the theatre-owner are powers to be reckoned with, powers for potential good.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

Milton Sills, First National star, leaves for the Coast to start work on "Hard-Boiled Haggerty," and says good-bye to Ned Marin, assistant production manager.

Jacqueline Logan, who is appearing in "For Ladies Only" for Columbia, and will have the feminine lead in their special, "The Blood Ship," soon.

Jean Hersholt, Universal's character star, wants his son, Allen, Jr., to become a banker instead of following in the footsteps of his illustrious Thespian father.

Ufa's Reorganization

OUR Berlin correspondent reports about Ufa's latest Board Meeting, which marked the handing over of the concern to the new financiers. Dr. von Stauss who, representing Deutsche Bank, has been president of the board for several years, has resigned, as was to be expected, his post having been taken by Herr Hugenberg, the new financier, personally. As many as 6 of his men are also represented in the new board.

Dr. Bausback, who has been chief of Ufa for exactly one year, has also resigned, his place in the directorate being taken by Herr O. Gerschel, a new man who entered the concern a few months ago. Bausback is going out of the film business for good and is once more resuming a managership within the Deutsche Bank.

It was generally expected in German trade circles that the new regime would signify the end of the American deal, and it is generally thought that the new men in power were at least toying with the thought of backing out of the American deal. As, however, in view of Ufa's contractual obligations, this would entail bigger financial sacrifice than Ufa could afford, it is now taken for granted that nothing will be altered unless Mr. Zukor's arrival in Berlin should mark the beginning of negotiations tending towards an alteration of the original deal by mutual agreement.

Woman Production Executive

HENRIETTA COHN, who has been secretary and right-hand bower for B. P. Schulberg,

Ambassador Martino of Italy (at the left), with Emanuel Cohen, director of the short feature production department of Paramount, who was recently decorated with the Italian cross, making him a Commander of the Crown of Italy.

George O'Brien, who is in New York to play the leading role in "East Side, West Side" under the direction of Allan Dwan at the Eastern Fox Film production plant.

Director Ernst Lubitsch stops over in New York for a day on his way to Germany to complete "Old Heidelberg" there for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Lon Chaney is not the only one to whom make-up is important. The comedians, too, rely on the grease paint and liners for many of their effects. Here are two of Educational's comedy aces, "Poodles" Hanneford and Lupino Lane, straight and in the make-ups they wear in their silversheet antics

Paramount associate producer, for more than a decade, has been named executive assistant to the production manager of Paramount. In her new capacity, Miss Cohn will have a position of outstanding importance in the studio, Schulberg stated.

Miss Cohn is a genuine pioneer in motion pictures, despite her youth. She became secretary to Adolph Zukor, who was head of what was then the Famous Players Film Company, twelve years ago, in the genuine infancy days of films. She had just been graduated from high school and the position was the first she held.

As the company grew rapidly, her duties were expanded until she was serving as secretary for not only Mr. Zukor, but B. P. Schulberg, the late Hiram Abrams and other executives.

In her new post, as executive assistant to Sam Jaffe, Paramount's production manager, she will be called upon to put into active practice the fruits of her years of experience.

By the Sweat of Their Zoo

FIVE hundred people in Hollywood, who live well, eat regularly, have motor cars and bank accounts are supported by animals, according to Fred Datig, casting director for Paramount studios, who fills calls of the directors for trained pets in motion pictures.

There is a trained skunk sending two girls to college. The skunk is in constant demand for comedies and for comedy relief scenes in dramas and he brings his owner a comfortable living.

Of course dogs lead the list of four-legged actors who proved they are man's best friend by supporting him. There are several hundred trained dogs in pictures.

A trained goose is one of the biggest wage earners in the pet line, according to Datig, but there are bears, deer, canaries, parrots, cows, horses and nearly every other specimen of field, stream and other, supporting an owner in the style to which he is accustomed.

A former property man who trained his white mouse to run up a man's pant leg has had no harder work since than keeping the mouse in training.

Paul Terry, creator of Pathe's Aesop's Film Fables cartoons, suggests that television be made available for artists to sketch models miles away. This is his idea of how he might sketch Mary Ann Jackson if she were phoning him from the Mack Sennett studios in Hollywood

Ray Lewis Praises Ad Men

PUBLICITY and advertising men in the motion picture industry are as much entitled to bonuses for the creation and execution of good ideas that help to sell films as the salesmen in the field who have long been receiving such awards, according to Ray Lewis, editor of the Canadian Daily Review, author of some thirty photoplays and a book of poems, who addressed the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at a luncheon in Janssen's Hofbrau Haus, Thursday, May 4th.

"I have never known of a bonus being given for advertising and publicity that not only does just as much but often more to sell a picture than the salesmen do," declared the speaker. "This is wrong. The salesman in the field is often deserving of a bonus, but, by the same token, so is the publicity and advertising man. And so these bonuses should be split up with the advertising and publicity departments, which should be encouraged in that way to create markets and achieve sales through their particular mediums. I can see no particular difference between the salesman, the advertising man and the publicity man. Each, in his own way, is striving toward the same end and each is entitled to the same consideration and encouragement.

"Send out ten of your crack salesmen on a picture, without any advance publicity, and let them talk until they're black in the face, but the chances are they'll find the job too much for them and they will be forced to admit that the publicity men are just as necessary in selling a picture as they are themselves."

Joe Quittner, exhibitor, of Middletown, N. Y., who also spoke, subscribed to the views of Miss Lewis. "It's not the salesman who sells the picture," he declared, "it's the driving power of the organization, the publicity and advertising, that does it. If a salesman came to me cold on a picture he couldn't put it across."

Mr. Quittner was introduced by Walter Eberhardt, president of the A. M. P. A. He gave an interesting talk detailing his experiences as U. S. military attache in Switzerland during the war and explaining how the German espionage system was broken up.

Ernest B. Schoedsack, co-producer of "Chang," the Paramount jungle melodrama, was introduced by Blake McVeigh, and gave an absorbing account of the production of that much-discussed film.

Zellner Wed

HELEN LOVETT BIESEL, whose father was the late Albert H. Lovett, war correspondent and editor of the Washington Post, was married Thursday, May 12, at 1:30 p. m., at the home of the bride's mother, 260 West 71st street, New York, to Arthur Julian Zellner, former member of the staff of the Memphis Commercial-Appeal.

Mr. Zellner is now Eastern representative for Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.

Miss Dorothy Comer attended the bride, and the groom's brother, Henry Hayes Zellner, acted as best man. Reverend Thomas E. Potterton officiated.

Up from Vagabondage

FIFTEEN years ago two "hoboes" stood under a water tank on a railroad siding in Kansas, waiting for a California-bound freight train. When the train rumbled along the pair "hopped" it, ultimately arriving in the land of conventions and roses.

One of the vagrants was "Jim" Tully. The other was Edwin Carewe.

In the years following the arrival of that freight train in Los Angeles Carewe became well known as a film producer and director, his latest creation being the screen version of

"Eloise," one of the Paris taxicabs which took place in the original rush to the front, and which was brought to America to take part in Fox Films' "Seventh Heaven," will be driven from Chicago to New York between April 25 to July 3 to exploit the film.

Tolstoy's "Resurrection," with Rod LaRocque starred and Dolores del Rio featured. It opens at the Mark Strand Saturday.

Tully's two books, "Beggars of Life" and "Jarnegan," have whirled him into the center of raging discussion. (Especially in the principal suburb of Los Angeles!)

Jetta Goudal Arrives

JETTA GOUDAL, Cecil B. DeMille star, arrived in New York Saturday, May 7th, from Chicago, where she was official hostess at the ball following the exhibitors' convention.

Miss Goudal is here on a vacation, and will probably return to Los Angeles the latter part of the week.

Although "Fighting Love" is scheduled for an early showing, also at the Roxy, Miss Goudal is undecided as to whether she will be able to remain for the New York premiere.

Roxy Entertains Booksellers

IN connection with the Convention of the American Booksellers' Association, a luncheon was given at the Roxy theatre, Tuesday, by S. L. Rothafel (Roxy).

The full convention attended the performance at the Roxy theatre on Wednesday, and Roxy was a speaker at the Booksellers' banquet at the Commodore Hotel on Thursday night.

Louise Fazenda displays the three sets of twins used in "The Gay Old Bird," her next starring vehicle for Warner Bros. Director Herman Raymaker is the gentleman at the right, directly behind the double shadow.

Among Roxy's luncheon guests were Gertrude Lawrence, of "O Kay;" Arthur Guiterman, poet; Homer Croy, author of "West of the Water Tower;" Dorothy W. Carmen, novelist; and Dr. Henry Seidel Canby, editor of the Saturday Literary Review.

Rushes to Mother's Bedside

MAX ALEXANDER, young studio manager of the Stern Film Corporation, sailed from New York early this week aboard the Aquitania after a record-breaking trip from Hollywood en route to the sick-bed of his mother in Fulda, Germany.

She is Mrs. Sigmund Alexander, a sister of Julius and Abe Stern, president and vice-president of the Stern Film Corporation, and of Mrs. Carl Laemmle, the deceased wife of the Universal president. Mrs. Alexander was stricken about a week ago.

Mussolini Aids Italian Films

OUR Berlin correspondent sends us a report he has just gotten from Rome to the effect that Mussolini has had a lengthy conference with the leading Italian film producer, Signor Pittaluga. It seems to be generally understood that Pittaluga has succeeded in selling the "Duce" on the urgent necessity of giving some governmental help to Italian film production, and it is generally expected that some practical consequences of that that interview are due before long.

The Continuing Idea

THE surest and safest money-making plan in motion pictures, according to Hal Roach, Pathe comedy producer, is to get a "continuing idea" involving the same characters and story ideas and bank heavily on it—the same plan that newspaper syndicates follow in looking for a "winner" in comic strips and then pushing it for all it is worth with publicity and exploitation.

The foremost successful demonstration of the "continuing idea" has been made by the Hal Roach organization, so this producer can speak with authority. "Our Gang" is the subject.

Frankly, when Hal Roach conceived the idea of "Our Gang," a group of children to exploit the human interest of childhood for juvenile and grown-up audiences alike, he wasn't so perfectly sure of it. He felt certain that the series would be good for six two-reelers—Perhaps, with unusual sucess, twelve might pay.

Recently the sixtieth "Our Gang" picture, "Love My Dog," ending the first five years of the history of "Our Gang," was completed by Robert McGowan.

Of course, no idea or venture in the motion picture field can ever become a "cinch," not if those who are in the business know anything about it. But Hal Roach feels that the one unfailing appeal of "Our Gang" comedies lies in their humanness, and the fact that the public enjoys the privilege of watching a group of children growing up, changing in a tooth or a freckle in every picture, growing a little taller or a little wider as every new story comes to the local screen.

The public might "little note, nor long remember" that Mickey Daniels, Mary Kornman, Johnny Downs and Sunshine Sammy are no longer in the "Gang," for Farina. the ebony prodigy of six, Joe Frank Cobb, the heavyweight champ of childhood comics, Jackie Condon, the boy who combs his hair with an egg-beater, Jay R. Smith, possessor of 1,313 more freckles than Mickey, by Farina's count, and Scooter Lowry, the "toughest" kid who ever left New York, are favorites with the public and rule the "Gang's" destinies today. This is not to speak of Jean Darling, a new little blonde girl of four who has been selected after a year of search to fill the place left vacant by Mary Kornman, and Mango, otherwise Janie Hoskins, Farina's baby sister, possessor of "the brightest smile in the movies." These two are too new to have gained the world-wide favor which eventually will be theirs.

Yet there is no tragedy in Mickey and Mary leaving, or Johnny Downs and Sunshine Sammy. The first two are under three year contract in vaudeville at a high salary. Sammy is still going strong in vaudeville engagements after three years of it. Johnny walked out of the "Gang" right into two or three big parts in features and when his screen work fails he can fall back on vaudeville as an always waiting opportunity. Success is the heritage of every child who leaves after a training in "Our Gang."

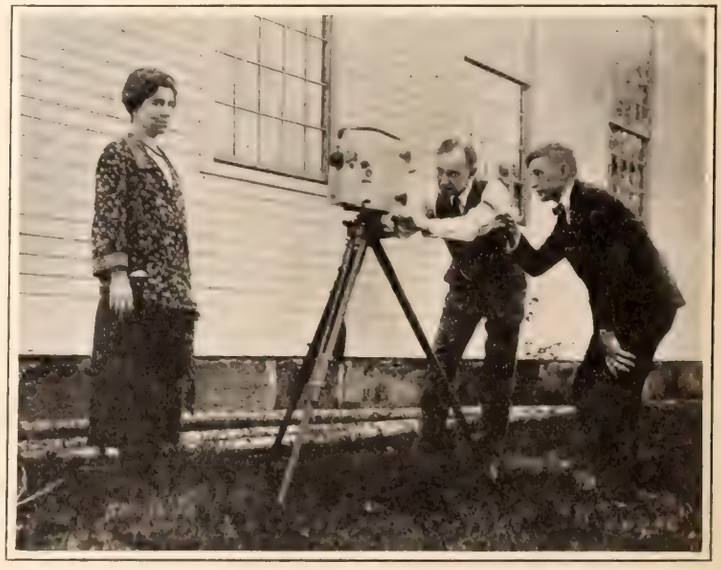
As time goes on the studio picks up an average of one new child every three months for training and prospective fame. One out of four of these children makes good. Each one, chosen at the average age of five or six, has six years' service ahead of him in the "Gang," hence the "Gang" may be kept in favor indefinitely with overlapping tides of favor and popularity for each youngster.

Around the World in Thirty Minutes

WHEN Jules Verne wrote "Around the World in Eighty Days" the world gasped at the audacity of anybody even imagining the globe could be circled in such a short period of time.

Today it can be done in thirty minutes—at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio at Culver City, Cal., where motion picture settings embrace entire streets of most of the principal nations of the world.

Pictures now being filmed include streets of more than a dozen nations, and there still remain standing another dozen huge streets, or structures, erected for pictures produced within the last few months.



The European nations represented, and the pictures which they appear in, follow: Germany, "Old Heidelberg"; provincial England, "Quality Street"; France, "On Ze Boulevard"; Switzerland, "The Branding Iron"; Nova Scotia and South America, "Captain Salvation"; China and the Pacific Isles, "Tell It to the Marines"; London, "The Thirteenth Hour"; medieval France, "Bardelys the Magnificent"; Spain, "The Unknown"; Russia and Poland, "Anna Karenina."

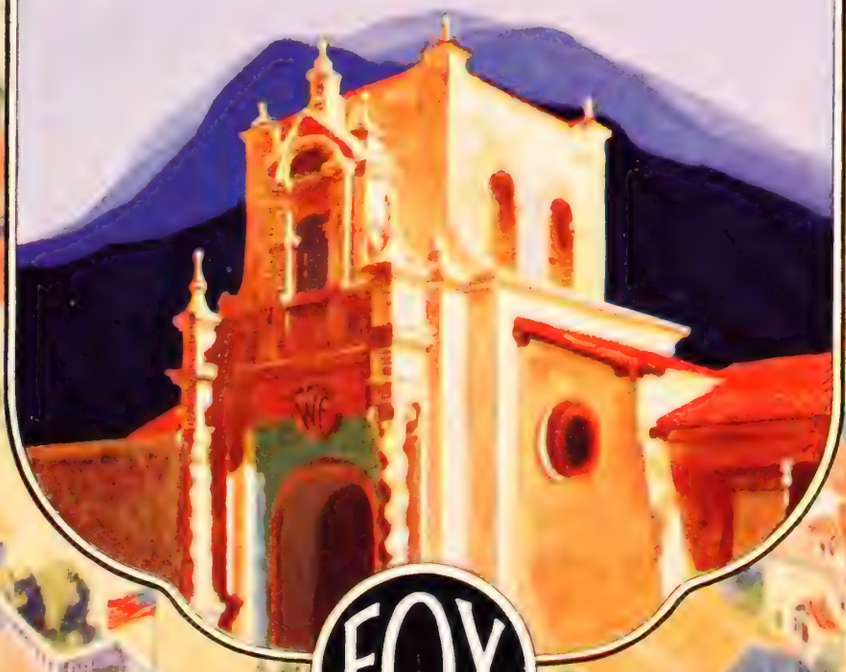
Other colorful locales include Spanish California, Tim McCoy's latest historical Western, as yet untitled; modern California, a civilian training camp comedy; modern New York, "Becky" and "The Mob."

Youngest Cast Enacts Picture

WHAT is declared to be the youngest cast of experienced motion picture players to appear in a feature portrays the principal roles in "The Whirlwind of Youth," Paramount's screen translation of A. Hamilton Gibbs' "Soundings."

Lois Moran, the heroine, is not yet out of her 'teens. Donald Keith, who appears opposite her, has just passed the voting age. Vera Voronina, Paramount's new Russian player, is just past the one-score mark in years. Larry Kent, who also plays an important part, is about the same age as Keith.

Dick Sears (right), Pathe News cameraman in New England, in a still with his friends in the White House, President and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge.



Quality and Accomplishment

Production of screen entertainment upon which the public, through the box office, places its stamp of approval, is the one great ambition,
the outstanding purpose, of the motion picture industry.

The accomplishment of this aim depends upon one, and only one, factor—quality.

Fox Film Corporation, with its quarter of a century of experience in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion picture attractions, stands four-square to the world today with the QUALITY of its pictures and the ACCOMPLISHMENT of public approval as its two pre-eminent attainments. And the momentum of past and present performance is a promise of still higher quality and still greater accomplishment in the future.

Fox Film Corporation herewith announces its program of pictures for the coming season—pictures that are first in quality, first in public appreciation, and hence first in box-office value.

Theatre Flood Benefits Success

Reports Throughout United States and Canada Indicate Big Returns With Cooperation of Local Agencies

IN response to President Coolidge's plea for assistance in behalf of the sufferers from the flood in the Mississippi Valley, early reports indicate that results obtained from benefit performances held in theatres throughout the United States and Canada on the designated day of May 7th have been a big success even though at this writing all returns are not as yet in.

Through the efforts of the various trade organizations the efforts were well mapped out in advance and much credit is due these men for the systematic manner with which the campaigns were handled.

In St. Louis last Saturday, seventy-five theatres in that territory contributed to the fund and during the coming week sixty additional houses are scheduled to present similar shows. Figures for this section will undoubtedly greatly exceed the $3,000 last reported.

Milwaukee, piloted by exhibitors and other amusement industries, has set its goal for what is considered one of the greatest money raising projects in its history. $150,000 is the goal. The showmen have united and will hold a Big Show at the Auditorium, May 16, 11 A. M. to 11 P. M. All Milwaukee is helping, including 100,000 school children who will be released with tickets to be sold at 50 cents each. The five halls of the Auditorium seat 70,000.

Many Benefits in New England

In response to telegrams sent out by the New England Film Board of Trade, benefits were arranged by many theatres, several being held last Friday. Both the Metropolitan and Loew's in Boston were filled to capacity during the midnight shows; likewise, the Palace in Worcester, Mass., where an overflow show had to be held at the Capitol Theatre. Programs were arranged by the Allied Theatres of Worcester. Other benefits were held in Springfield, Portland, Providence, Hartford, New Haven and several other cities.

The Will Hays message to the Michigan M. P. T. O. A. brought a decided response from Detroit exhibitors, E. C. Beatty donating $1,000 in behalf of the W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc.; Bert Williams and Jack Hubb of the Gus Sun offices raised a tidy sum at a midnight show at the Grand Riviera, and the Kunsky-Balaban & Katz organization effected a tie-up with the largest local newspaper and sold quantities of tickets for a special performance at the Michigan Theatre. The Detroit Operators' Union and the Federation of Musicians donated their services.

The Stanley Company of America on Red Cross Day donated all box office receipts of its theatres in the Philadelphia territory taken in from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M. to the general fund. Other Philadelphia circuit theatre owners who have acted in the relief work are Green & Altman, Wilmer & Vincent, Franklin Amusement Company and various other companies. The Board of Trade contributed practically every film available for free use on Sunday and special showings held in various parts of the state.

The Committee of the Oklahoma M. P. T. O., formed of W. Z. Spearman, R. M. Clark and Roy Heffner, have reported 140 theatres as having made arrangements to give benefit shows by Friday night. This was the result of three days' work. Many other theatres are expected to answer the response within the next few days.

Eph Johnson, operating the Orpheum Theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma, a link in the W. M. Smith Amusement Enterprises, advises that at a special midnight performance, $700 was raised and turned over to the Red Cross. Several artists appearing on the Orpheum bill cheerfully donated their services for this performance.

Eleven Reading, Pa., theatres turned in a total of $2,400 to the Red Cross following benefit shows held last Sunday. The houses included the Arcadia, Princess, Rivoli, Rex, Savoy, Strand, Victoria, Queen, San Toy, Royal and Schuylkill Avenue.

At Harrisburg, Pa., a substantial fund was turned over to that chapter of the Red Cross by holding a midnight show at Loew's Regent Theatre. The Broad Street Theatre, also of Harrisburg, raised $53.75 from a collection.

Nathan Levin, Steelton, Pa., manager of the Victoria Theatre, held a free Sunday showing in order to keep within the Sunday ordinance and succeeded in raising a fund of $67.25 for the flood sufferers.

At Cleveland, flood benefit performances given all last week at Loew's Metropolitan Theatre were a great success. Tickets were sold for fifty cents and all acts playing contributed their services.

The Akron Film Guild, Akron, Ohio, held a preview showing of the "Yankee Clipper" at the rate of $1.10 per copy and turned all proceeds over to the relief fund. Th performances were sponsored by Milton Bryer and I. Freedman and were held at the Waldorf Theatre.

About fifteen Denver theatres put on benefit shows and many others in that territory are expected to be heard from during the week. It was predicted that towns ranging in population from 100 to that of the larger key cities would see flood relief benefits last Saturday and Sunday nights.

Keith Theatre Cooperates

More than 1,200 persons filled B. F. Keith's Rialto Theatre, Louisville, during a midnight show and added over $1,200 to the Louisville Red Cross fund. Other theatres and local societies cooperated with the Rialto.

At Jacksonville, Fla., the Palace and Capitol theatres made a substantial contribution to the relief fund by donating the entire receipts from two Saturday night shows. E. J. Spark's Riverside Theatre also donated the entire receipts of a special Sunday matinee. The Junior League sold the tickets at $1.00 per. News reels of the flood proved effective aid.

The Majestic, Loew's Melba, Pantages and Palace theatres of Dallas, Texas, all cooperated in the presentation of a special midnight performance at the Majestic last Thursday night. Over $2,500 was realized on this show, which veteran showmen claimed to be the most elaborate ever staged outside of New York City.

Salt Lake City exhibitors formed a committee made up of Grant Pambianco, manager of the Pantages; George Carpenter, manager of the Paramount Empress, Carl A. Porter, Victory Theatre manager, and C. W. Clogston, manager of the Wilkes, for the purpose of getting up a monster benefit to aid the Red Cross fund. Inasmuch as a big Community Drive was on at the time the officials declined with many thanks the offers of aid made by the exhibitors.

Monster Benefit in Baltimore

A monster benefit performance was given at 58 motion picture theatres in Baltimore, Md., on Sunday night, May 8, under the auspices of the American Red Cross. Fifty-seven of the houses were open through the efforts of the M. P. T. O. of Maryland; Loew's Century was open through the courtesy of Loew's, Inc., and six other theatres in Maryland cities also contributed through M. P. T. O. efforts. Loew's Century took in a total of $4,000 and while the figures for the other houses are not available at present, capacity audiences were reported. The M. P. T. O. of Maryland spent approximately $300 in advertising to good effect. Newspapers carried generous space listing the theatres open for the benefits. The members of the various unions donated their services.

Los Angeles studios are also doing their part with contributions to the flood relief fund; B. P. Schulberg, associated producer of Paramount, contributing $1,000, and Douglas Fairbanks, Fred Niblo and George Eastman, are in charge of a big benefit show to be given at Hollywood Hall. A citizens' committee of 1,000 will cooperate.

San Francisco theatre and exchange men and a citizens' committee of fifty are in back of a large benefit performance to be held at the Civic Auditorium during the first part of May. Edward Barron, general manager of the local Publix theatres, Cliff Work and President Ackerman, of Ackerman & Harris, represented the theatre managers at the Red Cross meeting.

The following wire which is self explanatory has been received by the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc.:

May 5, 1927.

"Will H. Hays,

"Acting your suggestion monster midnight performance will be given Saturday May seventh simultaneously in three largest picture theatres. Entire proceeds donated to local Red Cross for flood sufferers. Members City Parent-Teachers Association one hundred per cent strong having booths leading stores selling tickets. Heartiest cooperation of city bodies and public."

Change in Admission Tax Rates Causes Drop of 5 Million in 9 Months

FOUR states are now paying more than 65 per cent of the total taxes collected from admissions, it is revealed by figures just compiled by the Bureau of Internal Revenue at Washington, D. C., comparing collections during the nine months ended March 31, last, with those of the same period a year ago.

Total collections during the first three quarters of the current fiscal year were $13,352,570.92, as compared with $18,452,568.32. Of the amount collected this year, New York contributed $5,147,483, Illinois $1,440,757, Peensylvania $1,178,849, and California $1,003,162. Reaching their high point in the fiscal year 1924, when $77,712,523 was collected, the admission taxes, as a result of relief afforded by Congress, have since declined steadily, totaling, for the fiscal year 1926, but $23,980,676, and expected, during the current fiscal year which ends June 30, to amount to probably not more than $18,000,000.

Files Monopoly Charge Against Distributors

Thirteen Film Companies, With Offices in Charlotte, North Carolina, Involved in Suit of H. P. Paradis

CHARGES of monopoly and absolute control of distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in North Carolina are contained in a suit instituted in Wilson, North Carolina, by H. J. Paradis of Wilson, against thirteen film companies with offices in Charlotte. The suit charges the film companies with compelling exhibitors to sign contracts contrary to the statutes of the state in an alleged attempt to deprive them of control of their business.

A temporary injunction signed by Judge M. V. Barnhill, resident judge of the second judicial district at Rocky Mount, has been served on the film officials enjoining the defendants from a breach of any existing contract between Mr. Paradis and the thirteen film companies and restraining them from refusing to furnish the theatre owner any films for which he has already contracted.

Summonses were served Tuesday of this week at state headquarters in Charlotte by Deputy Sheriff George Mays. Companies receiving the summons are: Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation, Universal Film Exchange, Inc., Film Booking Offices, Inc., Producers Distributing Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc., Liberty-Specialty Film Distributing Corporation, Educational Film Exchange, Inc., Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, Inc., Enterprise Film Corporation, Eltabran Film Company, Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation.

The defendants are required to appear before Judge R. A. Nunn at the Courthouse in Wilson on Monday, May 16, and show cause why the injunction should not be continued until final hearing of the case under the terms of Judge Barnhill's order. Connor and Hill, attorneys, of Wilson, are counsel for Mr. Paradis.

Prior to the bringing of this action Universal Film Exchange, Inc., Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation, and Pathe Exchange, Inc., made demand on him for amounts totaling $1,150, but Mr. Paradis claims that he did not owe them the full amount and was willing to pay only what was justly due them, according to the allegations in the complaint.

After claims of the three defendants were made on the plaintiff, the three distributors were awarded the full amount of their claims at a meeting held on March 1st, according to Mr. Paradis, who alleges that he was notified the meeting would be held on March 4th.

Mr. Paradis says that he appealed to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and that Mr. Hays set the awards aside because of "the arbitrary and unlawful manner in which the Board acted."

The hearing was then set for March 15th, but was postponed until March 19th at the request of the plaintiff, who was engaged in court at Smithfield, according to the allegations.

On March 19 Mr. Paradis was subpoenaed as a witness in another court case in Greenville and notified the Board of the suitation and requested a further postponement. The Board "arbitrarily and unjustly" refused to postpone the hearing and proceeded with the case, awarding amounts totaling $100 more than was originally demanded, it is claimed.

Immediately after making the award the plaintiff was notified that he not only had to pay that amount of money, but would be required to deposit sums with each of the defendants totaling $13,000 or otherwise they would not send him the films they had contracted to supply him, it is charged.

Mr. Paradis alleges that he was notified by each of the defendants that if he did not pay awards made against him and make the deposits required that no films would be sent to him by any of the defenedants after May 4th, although he claims all defendants are under written contract with him to furnish films at agreed prices.

He charges the defendants with having united in a conspiracy to break their contracts. He further claims that the arbitration is void because three of the arbitrators were interested in the results and sat as members of the Board when claims of the other two defendants were heard.

Bennethum's Will Gives Property to Widow and Son

Under the terms of the will of George Bennethum, of Reading, Pa., promoter of many theatres and other amusement enterprises, who died on April 16, all his property, estimated to be worth between $750,000 and $1,000,000, is equally divided between his widow, Mrs. Estelle Bennethum, and his son, George Bennethum, Jr. The Franklin Trust Company was made executor of the estate with authority to continue the operation of any of the Bennethum business interests. He had interests in theatres in Pottstown, Reading, Soudertown, Boyertown, Lancaster, Allentown and Coatsville, all in Pennsylvania, and in Baltimore and Cambridge, Md., and Ocean City, N. J.

New 3,100-Seat Theatre Started in San Francisco

Excavation work for a $1,250,000 theatre on Mission St., between 19th and 20th, started April 18th in San Francisco. The new house, which will give San Francisco the largest district theatre west of Chicago, will be constructed by Ackerman & Harris, in collaboration with George A. Oppen, and will seat 3,100.

Fox Salesmen Advised of Product

Fifty-Two Features, Including Twelve Giants, and One Hundred Fifty-Six Short Subjects Listed by Grainger at Convention

THE Fox sales forces, in convention at Atlantic City this week, were advised by James R. Grainger, general sales manager, that the company's schedule of product for the season 1927-28 includes 52 feature productions with 12 Giant Specials heading the list in addition to "What Price Glory"; also 156 short subjects comprising 26 comedies, 26 Varieties and 104 issues of Fox News. The field forces were informed that one-fifth of the Fox releases are now completed, three months before the opening of the new season, owing to the production direction of Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president. The completed product includes four of the Giant Specials, one super-Giant, "What Price Glory," and four special features; under the supervision of Mr. Sheehan two more Giants are in production and several features are being prepared for filming.

According to the line-up announced by Mr. Grainger, as planned by Mr. Sheehan, Fox Films will release next season four Olive Borden productions, four with George O'Brien, four starring Dolores Del Rio, four Madge Bellamy, four Janet Gaynor, four Victor McLaglen, four Edmund Lowe, four Charles Farrell, two Greta Nissen, and one each starring Blanche Sweet and Belle Bnnett.

Among the Giant specials are "Carmen," Dolores Del Rio playing the title rôle, directed by Raoul Walsh, a new interpretation of the story in which Victor McLaglen will do the rôle of the bullfighter, Escamillo. Don Alvarado, Fred Kohler, Ben Bard, Nancy Nash, Carmen Costello and Mathilde Comont comprise the supporting cast.

Olive Borden is featured in May Edington's story "The Joy Girl," which was completed under direction of Allan Dwan. In the cast are Neil Hamilton, Marie Dressler, Mary Alden, William Norris, Helen Chandler, Jerry Miley, Frank Walsh, Clarence Elmer, Jimmy Grainger, Jr., and Peggy Kelly.

"Paid to Love," also completed, is an original story featuring George O'Brien, Virginia Valli and William Powell. Howard Hawks directed, and the supporting cast includes J. Farrell MacDonald, Thos. Jefferson and Mank Mann. "Mother Machree," completed, features Belle Bennett and Victor McLaglen. John Ford directed the Rida Johnson Young story, and the cast includes Neil Hamilton, Ethel Clayton, Philippe DeLacy, Pat Somerset, Ted McNamara, Eulalie Jensen, Constance Howard, Rodney Hildebrand and Jacques Rollens.

"Silk Hats," an original story of the underworld, written by Polan Banks. Raoul Walsh will direct, with Madge Bellamy, Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe in the featured rôles. "Hangman's House," adapted from the novel by Donn Byrne, and directed by John Ford. George O'Brien will be featured. "Luna Park," with Victor McLaglen, Greta Nissen and Charles Farrell. It is an original story of Banks, directed by Lou Tellegen. The carnival life and will be directed by Howard Hawks.

"East Side—West Side," from the novel of New York by Felix Riesenberg, featuring George O'Brien, Virginia Valli and J. Farrell Macdonald, is in the first stages of production in the New York studios, under the direction of Allan Dwan. "The Escape," featuring Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell. It is adapted from Paul Armstrong's melodrama of the stage, and will be directed by Raoul Walsh. "The Girl Downstairs," written as an original for the screen by May Edington, and featuring Olive Borden and Edmund Lowe

"Balaoo," from Gaston Leroux French stage play, a dramatic novelty dealing with Paris and the African jungle. Victor Schertzinger is the director. "The Blond Panther," an original story featuring Madge Bellamy and directed by Frank Borzage.

Other specials are: "Jungle Rose," starring Dolores Del Rio, with a cast including Shirley Mason, Walter Pidgeon, Ted McNamara, Leslie Fenton, Anders Randolf, Charles Stevenson and Adolf Millar. It was directed by John Griffith Wray. The story is by Clifford Bax. "Come to My House," the serial story by Arthur Somers Roche, will be directed by Frank Borzage, with a cast including Edmund Lowe and Mary Duncan.

"None But the Brave," a satirical comedy of the London stage, featuring Madge Bellamy and Edmund Lowe and directed by J. G. Blystone. The authors are Bernard Merivale and Brandon Fleming. "Singed!" starring Blanche Sweet, an original story by Adela Rogers St. Johns. The cast includes Warner Baxter, Mary McAllister, Edwards Davis, Edgar Norton, James Wang, Alfred Allen, Howard Truesdale, Clark Comstock, Claude King and Alfred Allen and Ida Darling. It was directed by John Griffith Wray.

"Pajamas," an original story featuring Olive Borden and George O'Brien, directed by Allan Dwan. "My Wife's Honor," starring Dolores Del Rio, is an original story of Biarritz and the Riviera by Polan Banks, directed by Lou Tellegen. The cast includes Ben Bard, Don Alvarado, Paulette Duval, Rosita Marstini and Andre Lancy.

"Sugar Daddies," a story of Broadway, with Charles Farrell, Mary Duncan, Ted McNamara and Sammy Cohen. Directed by Alfred E. Green. "Silk Legs," a comedy featuring Madge Bellamy. Directed by Albert Ray. "Two Girls Wanted," adapted from the current New York stage play by Gladys Unger. Janet Gaynor will be featured and Alfred E. Green will direct. "The Comedian," from the stage play by Sacha Guitry. Janet Gaynor will be featured, and Victor Schertzinger will direct.

"Holiday Lane," featuring Earle Foxe, J. Farrell Macdonald and Nancy Nash. Directed by J. G. Blystone. "Womanwise," an original story as yet uncast, to be directed by J. G. Blystone. "Widow-in-Law," a comedy directed by Albert Ray and featuring Edmund Lowe, Mary Duncan and Sally Phipps. "Manpower," an original story by Polan Banks, in which will appear Janet Gaynor, Barry Norton and Charles Morton, a new Fox discovery. "The Unknown Beauty," featuring Olive Borden and directed by Albert Ray. It is an original story.

"A. W. O. L." (temporary title), a comedy, completed, with Ted McNamara and Sammy Cohen featured, and the cast includes Gene Cameron, Betty Francisco, Judy King, Holmes Herbert, Jerry the Giant and Charles Gorman. Benjamin Stoloff directed.

Others on the list of Fox Films features are "Fleetwing," a horse story, to be directed by Lew Seiler; "Always Faithful," a dog story, also to be directed by Seiler; "Ladies Must Dress," "Soft Living," "Atlantic City," "Earth and the Woman," "Very Confidential" and "The Girl From Havana."

In addition to these Fox will release fourteen super-western productions. Tom Mix will make seven, including "Tumbling River," "Riding the Bandwagon," "The Arizona Wildcat," and "Silver Valley." They will be directed by Lew Seiler, Benjamin Stoloff and O. O. Dull.

Buck Jones will make a series, the first two of which will be "Chain Lightning" and "The Texas Tiger." Scott Dunlap will direct.

George E. Marshall, supervisor of Fox comedies, told the salesmen that the 26 Comedies in two-reel length will be made up of eight Van Bibbers, eight Animals comedies and ten Imperial fun-films. Great care will be exercised in the selection

Jerry Madden and other child stars will be seen in the Animal comedy issues, and a section of the Fox Hills studio has been partitioned off as a zoo, in which are animals from almost every country on the globe. A new type of bathing girl will be seen in the Imperial comedies, stated Mr. Marshall, and in addition an all-star cast of comedians will grace these releases. Pal, the dog, will be seen in many of this brand of stories.

Ten Completed Films Shown at Convention

IT is reported, but not confirmed, that nine pictures, already completed for the 1927-28 schedule, will be shown at the Fox convention at Atlantic City, which began May 12. In addition, the delegates will also see "Seventh Heaven," it is said.

On the new season list which the convention will see, according to reports, are: "Carmen," "The Joy Girl," "Paid to Love," "Mother Machree," "Singed," "My Wife's Honor," "A. W. O. L.," "A Jungle Rose," and "Sunrise."

Six New Theatre Projects, Involving $2,500,000, Planned by West Coast

PLANS for the erection in Seattle, Washington, within the near future of approximately six elaborate suburban motion picture houses representing an investment of $2,500,000 were announced last week in the Northwest city by Abe Gore, vice-president of the newly-enlarged West Coast Theatres circuit, during a visit in Seattle. The houses will be devoted to both first and second run policies, according to location, and will be operated on a minimum top of about 35c, if present plans are carried out.

During his visit in Seattle, Mr. Gore also announced that the executive staffs of the West Coast houses in the Pacific Northwest would remain the same as under the regime of the Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc. Harry C. Arthur, Jr., president and general manager of the latter company, who acted as appraiser for the West Coast deal, will remain in the Northwest as managing director of the houses in that territory. The Seattle theatres included in the West Coast chain at present are the Fifth Avenue, Coliseum, United Artists and Liberty. The Strand Theatre, now closed, will be reopened as a first run house. The Seattle Theatre, 3,600 seat Publix house now under construction, will also be included in the deal and is expected to feature a vaudeville and picture policy.

New M. P. T. O. Attitude on Chain Theatres

Sympathetic Consideration Towards Circuits Evinced in O'Toole Statement on Convention Plans

THOUGH chain theatres and consolidations will be one of the chief topics under discussion at the annual Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America convention at Columbus, Ohio, it is believed that a new attitude, in consideration of them, may be disclosed, according to M. J. O'Toole, business manager of the organization. Mr. O'Toole declared that sympathetic consideration of chains and circuits, as an inevitable circumstance in the evolution of the industry, may mark the convention's attitude.

The organization is opposed to "unnecessary condemnation" of chain theatres but is determined to protect its members, stated Mr. O'Toole. However, these men should "keep their feet on the ground" in consideration of the chain theatre problem, he added. Where theatre owners find that business conditions in their respective territories make necessary affiliation with or sale of their theatres to circuits, they should first communicate with the organization before taking any step, continued Mr. O'Toole, and concluded "We want members to remain independent, but if they find such a course economically unsound, the organization is prepared to aid them in obtaining the best possible terms for their holdings."

In addition to the entertainment plans already outlined for the convention by P. J. Wood it was announced this week that a golf tournament will be held Monday, June sixth at the Elks Country Club, north of Columbus; a fee of ten dollars will cover for the day; lady visitors will be given a sight seeing trip through Columbus and vicinity on Tuesday and on Wednesday will be the guest of Governor Donahey's wife for tea.

Chairman Joseph M. Seider, of the administrative committee of the M. P. T. O., called a meeting of that committee for May 18 at which the report of the general convention committee will be submitted by its chairman, Mr. Harwood, and special arrangements outlined by Mr. Wood. R. F. Woodhull and Mr. O'Toole also will make reports on their respective activities. The final meeting of the Board of Directors, to which the administrative committee will report, will be held at Columbus convention headquarters, the Neil House, on Monday, June sixth, the eve of the national convention.

Arrangements have been made by the M.P.T.O.A. for a special convention train over the N. Y. Central from New York City to Columbus, leaving Monday, June 6th, at 6:30 p.m. daylight saving time, from the Grand Central station. It will arrive in Columbus at 11:45 a.m. June 7. Drawing room fare is $33.95; compartment, $31.70; lower berth, $29.08; upper berth, $27.80. The one-half fare allowance gives a reduction of $11.35 on the return trip. Reservations on this train can be secured through Samuel Stein at Room 908 Times Building, who has charge of transportation arrangements.

"The Rough Riders" For General Release

"THE ROUGH RIDERS" has been added to the Paramount program for general release during 1927-28, according to an announcement by S. R. Kent.

"Beau Geste" is also on the general release schedule, this announcement having been made previously.

Memorial Ceremonies for Mastbaums

Many of the leading executives in the motion picture industry of Pennsylvania, together with other notables, participated in memorial ceremonies for the late Jules E. Mastbaum and Stanley V. Mastbaum, at the Eagleville Sanatorium, not far from Norristown, Pa., on Sunday, May 1. The sanatorium is one of the leading monuments of the philanthropy of the Mastbaums, and Mrs. Mastbaum, mother of the two brothers, and Mrs. Etta W. Mastbaum, widow of Jules E. Mastbaum, were present as were other relatives and personal friends of the family.

The principal speaker, Mayor W. Freeland Kendrick, of Philadelphia, was introduced by Sol M. Schwab, also of Philadelphia. Prominent motion picture men present were John J. McGuirk, president of the Stanley Company of America; A. and L. Sablosky, under whose auspices the observance of Mastbaum day was held; Frank Buhler, general manager of the company, and other officials. Morris Wolf spoke for the Stanley Company of America.

More than a dozen acts, including music supplied by artists from the Stanley and other theatres, supplied entertainment for the gathering.

Exhibitor, Once Newsboy, Builds New House

Harry Dickerman, for ten years a newsboy at Seventh and Hennepin, Minneapolis, has just taken out a permit to build a $35,000 motion picture theatre at 3215 Penn Avenue North, next door to the Alhambra, which he has been operating for the last four years. Dickerman said a real estate man induced him to consider the purchase of the Alhambra four years ago and he finally decided to buy it with his savings from the ten years of selling papers. The theatre paid him well, and he has to have a bigger building now as the 350-seat house is inadequate. The new Alhambra will seat 600 and will be a one-story building of brick and tile construction. It will have the latest equipment and has been designed by O. K. Westphal. Work is to start at once.

Albany Theatre Offering Special Children Matinee

A series of community matinees patterned after the junior movie idea will be held in the Regent theatre, Albany, N. Y., during the next few weeks as a means of keeping the children off the streets and thus lessening the possibility of accidents due to automobiles. Leading men and women of the city are behind the idea, which also has the endorsements of one of the leading newspapers. The idea is to have the children come to the theatre one afternoon each week after school hours when they will be admitted at a very low price. Such children need not be accompanied by parent or guardian if they arrive before 4:30 o'clock, but after that hour they must be accompanied. Society women will assist the theatre management in handling the children.

Fifty-Eight From First National

Thirteen Specials, Forty-Five Features Scheduled, Rowland Tells Sales Force at Hollywood

THE largest array of pictures ever produced by First National will be presented during the coming season, Richard A. Rowland, general and production manager, will state at the four day convention of the company's sales force which will be held at Burbank next week. A total of fifty eight productions are scheduled for the year of which thirteen are listed as specials and forty-five as star and feature productions. Adaptations of stage plays, novels, short stories and original screen efforts comprise the story material from which these attractions will be made.

Production is outlined as follows: Norma Talmadge in a modern version of Dumas' "Camille," produced by Joseph M. Schenck and directed by Fred Niblo, now playing an extended engagement at the Globe theatre, New York City. Gilbert Roland appears opposite the star. This production and Colleen Moore's first for the season, an adaptation of the stage play "Lilac Time," are two of the specials. George Fitzmaurice will produce the latter with John McCormick, general production manager on the West Coast, in charge.

A Constance Talmadge special will be "Breakfast Before Sunrise," a Joseph M. Schenck production from a French play of Andre Baribeau's. Mal St Clair will direct the screen version and Don Alvarado will play the leading male role. Another special will be the Richard Barthelmess starring vehicle. "The Patent Leather Kid" a filmization of the Rupert Hughes novel. Adela Rogers St. John wrote the scenario and Winifred Dunn, the continuity. It is being produced by Al Rockett, Alfred Santell is the director and the supporting cast includes Mollie O'Day, Barthelmess' leading lady, Lucien Prival, John Kolb, Lawford Davidson, Arthur Stone, Matthew Zetz, Raymond Turner and Nigel de Brulier. A Milton Sills special will be made from one of several stories now under consideration.

The picturization of "The Miracle," adapted from Max Reinhardt's production of the stage spectacle by Carl Vollmoeller, is listed as a special. The screen version will be produced by John McCormick. Maria Corda, Hungarian actress, will be seen in the screen version of Professor John Erskine's satire "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," which will be directed by the star's husband, Alexander Korda. Lewis Stone and Virginia Lee Corbin will have prominent parts and the picture will be made by Carey Wilson.

George Fitzmaurice will make a number of specials one of which will be a drama from an original story, produced by John McCormick; also "Louisiana," an adaptation of Edwin Childs Carpenter's stage play, "The Barber of New Orleans," which he himself adapted from his novel "The Code of Victor Jallot." John McCormick will produce, Bess Meredyth will make the adaptation and Billie Dove will have the leading role. Third of the Fitzmaurice specials is a story from the New York stage play "The Barker," written by Kenyon Nicholson; produced for the screen by John McCormick. The Ralph Spence burlesque "The Gorilla," an Alfred Santell production to be directed by Richard Wallace, is also listed as a special.

Many Star Series

Will Rogers will be starred in the Sam E. Rork production "A Texas Steer," a Charles Hoyt farce-comedy which, as a play, has been seen by audiences throughout the country. This will be a special, as also the picturization of the Harold Bell Wright novel "The Shepherd of the Hills," for which a notable cast and director will be utilized.

Aside from her special production Colleen Moore will be starred in three pictures, each produced by John McCormick. Among them are: "Baby Face," an adaptation of the Frederic and Fanny Hatton stage play, "Synthetic Sin" for which Winifred Dunn is preparing the continuity; another is "The Head of the House of Coombs," Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel; the third will be announced later.

Richard Barthelmess will be starred in four productions in addition to the special, but at present only one has been definitely decided upon. This is "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" from the novel by John Fox, Jr., an Alfred Santell production under the production management of Al Rockett. Milton Sills will have three pictures aside from the special, of which two have already been chosen. They are: "Burning Daylight," Jack London's Alaskan novel, which Wid Gunning will produce, and "Just a Sucker," a story of a fake oil well promoter. The third story is under consideration.

Billie Dove will be starred in four pictures outside her leading role in "Louisiana." First is "The Stolen Bride," Carey Wilson producing and Alexander Korda directing from the original by Mr. Wilson. Lloyd Hughes appears opposite the star and Armand Kaliz, Lilyan Tashman, Frank Beal, Cleve Moore, Otto Hoffman and Bert Sprotte are in the cast. Second is "The American Beauty," a story by Wallace Irwin, also produced by Mr. Wilson and in which Lloyd Hughes will again have the leading male role. "The Heart of a Follies Girl," third of the series, will be produced by Al Rockett from Adela Rogers St. John's story, and the last is "Once There Was a Princess," from a story by Juliet Wilbut Tompkins.

Harry Langdon is scheduled for four pictures, stories for two of which are set; "The Butter and Egg Man," from George S. Kaufman's comedy stage play and a golf comedy, "The Nineteenth Hole." Stories for the other two are under consideration. Producer C. C. Burr announces a screen version of Edward Pople's stage farce "A Pair of Sixes," as the first of the farcical comedies for the new season starring Johnnie Hines. Two other pictures are scheduled for this star but stories have not as yet been chosen.

Six productions will star Ken Maynard, the First National Western ace; five of the six are original stories written by Marion Jackson, the titles of which are: "The Caravan Trail," "Captain of the Strong," "The Royal American," "The Upland Rider," and "The Canyon of Adventure." The sixth is "Gun Gospel," from the story of W. D. Hoffman. Charles R. Rogers is the producer of the Maynard vehicles.

Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackaill will be co-featured in a series of four productions the first of which is "The Road to Romance," from an original story by Al Boasberg, which will be adapted by Rex Taylor and directed by John Francis Dillon. Number two is "Lady, Be Good," from the musical comedy by Guy Bolton and Fred Thompson. Both will be Charles R. Rogers' productions. Third of the series will be produced by Edward Small from the Avery Hopwood stage farce "Ladies' Night," and fourth, "Man Crazy," from the story by Grace Sartwell Mason, will be another Rogers' production.

Charlie Murray will be featured in a series of four productions the first of which, "East Side, West Side," will be directed by Richard Wallace and George Sidney will do the Dutchman in this story of the Irish and the Dutch. The second is "Down With McGinty," and the third, "Wine, Women and Song," is an adaptation of the stage play by Mortimer Thiese; George Sidney will also be seen in this film. The fourth story has not been selected.

Astor-Hughes Co-Featured

Mary Astor and Lloyd Hughes will be featured in a series of four productions produced by Ray Rockett. First is "No Place to Go," adapted from Richard Connell's story, "The Isle of Romance," a tale with a South Sea locale; second, "Tell the World," an original by Howard Irving Young; third, "Do It Again," from Dixie Willson's story "Help Yourself to Hay;" and fourth, "Sailors' Wives," from the novel by Warner Fabian.

Five Robert Kane productions are listed in the Showman Group. "Harold Teen," from Carl Ed's comic strip, will be one of these. "The Golden Calf" and "French Dressing," from stories recently published, have been purchased. Two others are yet to be selected from half a dozen stories now being considered.

The Jess Smith production of "The Poor Nut," from the stage play by J. C. and Elliott Nugent, is another 1927-28 release. Henry Hobart directing. Jack Mulhall and Charlie Murray are the featured players, with Jane Winton, Jean Arthur, Henry Vibart and Cornelius Keefe in the cast.

Sam E. Rork's production, recently completed, "The Prince of Headwaiters," from the Liberty Magazine story by Viola Brothers Shore and Garrett Fort, is scheduled for early release. John Francis Dillon directed and Lewis Stone, Priscilla Bonner, Robert Agnew, Ann Rork, Jerome Patrick, Lilyan Tashman, E. J. Ratcliffe are in the cast.

Glenn Managing Director of Circle Theatre; Resigns First Nat'l Position

ALLAN S. GLENN, supervisor of exploitation for First National Pictures, this week tendered his resignation, effective May 28, as, on June first, he becomes managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, where he will be associated with Robert Lieber, Chairman of the Board of Directors of First National Pictures.

Allan S. Glenn

Mr. Glenn has been identified with the picture business for over ten years in an advertising capacity. For the past five years has been associated with First National, first as exploiteer, and, since 1924, in an executive position in the same department. As an exploitation representative working out of the Indianapolis branch of First National, Mr. Glenn attracted attention of the officials of the company and he was summoned to the New York office to launch a plan of national tie-ups which he had conceived and executed on a small scale in the Indianapolis territory.

He is responsible for the First National Syndicate Service, which prepares newspaper serializations on novels to be filmed by First National; another Glenn innovation is the placement by agents across the country of special feature articles suggested by First National releases and tieing up the newspapers directly with local theatres showing the company's product.

No successor has as yet been named for the vacancy created by Mr. Glenn's resignation from First National.

Film Golf Club Plans Broached at Meet

Committee to Discuss It in Detail; Enthusiastic Tournament Held at Great Neck

PLANS for a film golf club for the industry, which would develop also into an association with benefits for needy members, featured the twelfth semi-annual Film Golf Tournament, held at the Sound View Club, Great Neck, L. I., Wednesday.

The plan was proposed by Al Lichtman, who acted as toastmaster at the dinner following the tournament, and it will be taken up in detail at a luncheon to be attended next week by representatives of all branches of the industry.

One hundred and twenty-five golfers turned out for the tourney, which was declared to be the most enthusiastic of the series. It was announced that four players are to be named to represent the East in competition for the E. F. Albee Cup. The four will play any golf team selected by any film golf tournament of the U. S., to play at any designated place within six months after the challenge is issued to holders of the cup. A team must win the cup three time for permanent possession.

In the Spring tourney this year, the winners were:

Million Dollar Merger of Birmingham Circuits

With the filing of final papers of incorporation by the Pan-Ala Amusement Company Thursday, Birmingham's largest theatrical combination, involving interests of more than $1,000,000 was completed.

This combination will include the suburban theatres, known as the Joe Steed interests, the Pantage Vaudeville franchise, and a long time lease of the Bijou Theatre, which will be remodelled at a cost of $200,000. The name of the old Bijou will be changed to Pantage's Vaudeville House.

The officers of the Pan-Ala Amusement Company are: Hunter M. Smith, president; A. Brown, vice-president and general manager; Joe Steed, second vice-president and manager of suburban theatres; and J. W. Andrews, secretary and treasurer.

The directorate of the company includes some of the business leaders of Birmingham. The board is made up of Benjamin Leader, Joe Steed, Hunter M. Smith, D. O. Whildin, Dr. Courtney W. Shropshire, Sam C. King, Henry H. Cobb, A. Brown Parkes, Dr. E. E. May, Karl Landgrebe, A. Page Sloss, and Leo K. Steiner, Sr.

In addition to the Pantage Vaudeville Theatre (the old Bijou) the group of theatres includes the Franklin and Belle, Ensley; Fairfield and Gary, Fairfield; Wylam, Wylam; North Birmingham and the Plaza, North Birmingham and the Five Points Theatre, now in operation.

The Pan-Ala Amusement Company is an all-Birmingham enterprise, as shown by the list of stockholders. It is a closed corporation, the full amount of capital stock having been subscribed to by the following, in addition to those named as officers and directors:

F. M. Joy, Meyer & Engel, H. M. Fulenwider, S. Ginsberg, Hugh Morrow, Reid Lawson, T. S. Henderson, J. W. Peck, Sr., William Holiner, Carl Hess, R. I. Ingalls, Everett Shepherd, Sig Steiner, Bernard Steiner, Lee K. Steiner, Jr., Mamie Steiner, Ed. S. Moore, Lee McGriff, Ben Corenblum, A. L. Smith, A. A. Bond, W. C. Maxwell, E. H. Wreen and Elbert S. Jemison.

Double-Feature Bills Increasing in Toronto

The double-feature epidemic has broken out afresh in Toronto, after having been stamped out some time ago through the efforts of the Ontario Division of the M.P.T.O.

Pa. Governor Signs "Panic and Fire" Bill

Governor John S. Fisher, of Pennsylvania, on April 27, signed the bill passed by the recently adjourned session of the Legislature in Harrisburg, which gives the State Department of Labor and Industry greater powers in promulgating and enforcing rules and regulations for safety in the construction of motion picture theatres and other buildings where large public gatherings are held.

The measure, known as the "fire and panic" law, re-codifies all previous Pennsylvania laws on the subject, which are automatically repealed. It gives the Labor Department power to close theatres which do not comply with its regulations, and provides other penalties for owners of theatres who are guilty of violations.

This was the only bill the 1927 Legislation adopted with relation to the motion picture industry in Pennsylvania. The law becomes effective 30 days after the date of its being signed by the Governor, but will not actually be enforced until later in the year as it is understood Charles E. Waters, head of the Labor Department, wants to give a committee, which he will appoint, more time in which to formulate the new rules and regulations.

Financing Details for House Going Up in Vancouver

Details of the financing of the new Orpheum Theatre which is under construction at Vancouver, B. C., have been announced by Joseph F. Langer, who is building the large house. Financial interests in Portland, Ore., and Minneapolis are offering $650,000 mortgage bonds to the public for the Vancouver Orpheum which has been leased for 25 years to the Orpheum Theatrical Company, Limited, at an annual minimum rental of $70,000.

Six suburban theatres in Vancouver were recently leased by Mr. Langer to Famous Players Canadian Corp. for 10 years at an annual rental of $10,000. This lease, together with that of the Orpheum, have been assigned to the trustees of the new theatre.

Parm't Board of Directors Declare Quart'rly Dividend

At a meeting held today the Board of Directors of Paramount Famous Players Lasky Corporation declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2.00 per share on the common stock, payable July 1st, 1927, to stockholders of record at the close of business on June 15th, 1927. The books will not close.

F. P. Canadian Building New Theatre in Toronto

Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, is proceeding with the erection of a substantial suburban moving picture theatre in the Bloor-Runnymede residential section of Toronto, the cost of the building being $110,000, according to the plans passed by the City Architect's Department.

"'Seventh Heaven' a Winner," News' Man Reports After Coast Premiere

By William MacCormack
West Coast Representative, Motion Picture News

HOLLYWOOD, May 7.—"Seventh Heaven" opened at the Carthay Circle Theatre last night before a brilliant audience, and registered as one of the best pictures of the year and a winner from the box-office viewpoint. In all probability, it will hold the screen at the Carthay for a long run.

As the projection machines ground out the film, history was made insofar as new stars are concerned. Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell popped into the limelight of fame. Frank Borzage came in for the largest share of praise because of his brilliant direction.

"Seventh Heaven" is assuredly a long-run picture. It tops the stage play easily, and the stage play ran for two years on Broadway. This is not a war film; the war serves as a background for the story, whose underlying note is an appealing human quality.

David Butler worked in a good many laughs through his amusing interpretation of Gobin. Gladys Brockwell, as Nana, gave a fine performance. The editing and titling work of Katherine Hilliker and H. H. Caldwell is superb. So is the whole picture.

F. B. O. Will Not Enter Exhibition Field

Statement of J. P. Kennedy at Opening of Chicago Convention; Middle States, Canada Represented

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY, president of Film Booking Offices, stressed the fact that his company, as heretofore, does not intend to compete with exhibitors by buying or building theatres, in his address to the F. B. O. sales force convening at the Hotel Stevens, Chicago, on Saturday of last week. This is the second of the three regional conventions held to acquaint the field forces of product and policies for the new season.

Mr. Kennedy told of the good results expected in production now that William Le Baron is to supervise this department with the cooperation of Edwin King. The general sessions of the convention closed Tuesday evening of this week and Wednesday was devoted to conferences with individual branch staffs. A farewell banquet was given Wednesday evening with professional talent providing the entertainment. Attending the Chicago sessions, in addition to Mr. Kennedy, were J. I. Schnitzer, senior vice-president; Lee Marcus, general sales manager; E. B. Derr, treasurer; C. E. Sullivan, assistant treasurer; and Hyatt Daab, director of advertising and publicity.

Branch managers and salesmen from sixteen middle states and Canada present at the convention included:

Cleve Adams, midwest sales manager; C. E. Penrod, central sales manager; J. J. Sampson, Chicago branch manager; H. J. Michalson, Cincinnati branch manager; Lou Geiger, Cleveland branch manager; L. E. L. Franconi, Memphis branch manager; S. H. Abrams, Milwaukee branch manager; M. J. Frisch, Minneapolis branch manager; Paul Tessier, New Orleans, Sam Benjamin, Oklahoma; S. W. Fitch, Omaha; Tom McKean, St. Louis and Roy Zimmerman, Sioux Falls; P. C. Taylor, general manager for Canada, will also attend the Chicago convention, as will A. E. Ralston, Vancouver branch manager; Vernon Dixon, Calgary branch manager; and T. Newcomen, Winnipeg manager.

Among the midwest salesmen who will attend the Chicago convention are:

E. W. Johnson, A. Hoffman, W. Brown, S. Gorelick, K. L. Eagon and J. M. Lyon, Chicago; S. H. Nesbitt, C. L. Kendall, L. Rosenfeld, J. G. Wilson and G. Davis, Cincinnati; G. Lefko, F. H. Hathaway, G. G. Gregory, R. M. Lauer and R. Levy, at Cleveland; E. Blumenthal, W. S. Hurst, H. F. Morrisson and W. V. Adwell, at Dallas; F. Lea, R. C. McCulloch and J. P. Shea, at Des Moines; R. C. Murphy, H. S. Childs, A. J. Mertz, F. I. Ausman and W. G. Surgess, at Detroit; W. W. Penrod, R. L. Brentliger, A. J. Gelman and S. E. Shane, at Indianapolis; Wm. Benjamin, H. Stulz, D. M. Major, L. Kay and J. T. Graham, at Kansas City; O. O. Flake and F. R. Dodson, at Memphis; A. N. Schmitz and P. McNey, at Milwaukee; R. W. Frazee, A. Harris, D. C. Evanson, B. C. Marcus and S Goldflam, at Minneapolis; C. Clark and C. M. Baker, at New Orleans; C. A. Gibbs, H. Weinberger, S. E. Gibbs and D. D. Cole, at Oklahoma City; F. C. Thortson, W. Miller, J. H. Olseen and D. L. Donelson, at Omaha; M. Thompson and W. J. Foley, at Sioux Falls; and L. F. Brent, J. A. Walsh, T. C. Tobin and R. J. Curran at St. Louis.

Mr. Kennedy entrained for Los Angeles immediately after his address on Saturday at the final session of the convention will be held in the Coast City.

Parent's Signature Gets Children In Theatres

UNDER the terms of an agreement reached between the Long Island Theatre Owners Association and the district attorney's office, it is legal for children under 16 to attend theatres in Mineola, Nassau County, unaccompanied provided that consent cards which are sent to parents for signature authorizing the attendance of the child or children at the theatre bears the parent's signature. Every theatre will have a matron on duty to protect and safeguard the children.

Michalove Assumes Duties as "U" Theatre Chief

Chain Expansion Will Be Policy; Willard Patterson New Southern Division Manager

EXPANSION of Universal theatre activities in many states, with 23 theatres now being built, and 270 in operation, will be continued vigorously. Dan Michalove, late last week, assumed his post as general manager of the entire Universal chain in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Michalove told trade paper representatives that the policy would be "the buying or building of houses anywhere we are convinced money can be made."

"We are in the theatre business to make money," he added. While Mr. Michalove stated that no definite program had been adopted, it is understood that vigorous expansion will be pursued.

Willard C. Patterson, of Atlanta has been appointed by Mr. Michalove as head of Universal theatre activities in the South, filling the position of Southern district manager vacated by Mr. Michalove when he became general manager of the Universal chain.

Discussing some of the Universal theatres in detail, Mr. Michalove said that several deals had been made in Indiana, one with former Gov. Goodrich for a house at Marion; another for two to be built in Indianapolis; and negotiations for a third at Thirty-Eighth and Meridian streets.

In Wisconsin, Universal has houses under way in Racine and Kenosha, and will build in Sheboygan.

At Atlanta, Mr. Patterson will open on June 27 the Capitol, a de luxe house, one of the finest in the country. The Madison, suburban theatre opens June 20, another is being built at Lakewood Heights and a site for a third has been bought on Georgia Ave.

At Grand Island, Neb., what Mr. Michalove termed the first "baby" atmospheric theatre in the U. S.—the Capitol, seating 1,600—has been opened. A house was recently opened at Norfolk, Neb.

Universal theatres in Milwaukee will be reconditioned at a cost of $91,000, and $135,000 will be spent to improve the Hostettler circuit in Iowa and Nebraska.

In Brooklyn, the Universal, a 2,400 seat house at 46th St. and New Utrecht, opens Aug. 1.

Northwest M.P.T.O. Meet

Five Hundred Theatre Owners Attend; Corporate Name Changed and Steffes Re-elected as President

APPROXIMATELY five hundred exhibitors of Minnesota and the Dakotas attended the Motion Picture Owners of the Northwest convention this week which was held in the St. Paul Hotel, St. Paul, Minnesota. Al Steffes, of Minneapolis, was re-elected president of the organization which, owing to a merger of the Northwest M. P. T. O. with the Twin City Theatre Managers' Association, had its name changed to Theatre Owners of the Northwest, Inc.

Some of the highlights of the convention were the decision of the body to take steps to head off a proposed ten per cent gross receipts tax which is scheduled to be considered at an extra session of the South Dakota legislature; also it was announced that plans have been perfected whereby the theatre owners' association would cooperate with the Dunwoody Industrial Institute of Minneapolis in the creation of a school of projection which any operator or person interested may attend to study the latest development in projection and lighting.

The convention was opened by Mayor Hodgson, of St. Paul, and addresses were made by civic and business executives of the city and M. L. Finkelstein and Theodore Hays of the Finkelstein and Ruben circuit.

The delegates attended a ball and cabaret entertainment in the Palm Room of the St. Paul hotel on Wednesday night, with entertainment provided by performers at the various Twin City theatres.

The convention closed with a banquet given to the delegates by the Universal Film exchange in behalf of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, who had planned to be present at the convention, but who was unable to attend.

John Hammell, New Mid West Division Manager for Paramount.

Sunday Show Referendum in Minneapolis Postponed

Residents of five districts in the Twelfth Ward of Minneapolis have been defeated in their efforts to conduct a special referendum at the May primaries on the question of permitting a moving picture theatre to be built in that district. The proposed referendum was to have been unofficial, and for the purpose of instructing the two aldermen how to cast their vote on the proposition in the city council. Other residents of the ward protested, however, because they had been neglected in the referendum plans, and as a result the referendum will be postponed until the election in June.

To Remodel Auditorium, Kansas City's Old Theatre

The Auditorium, Kansas City, which has been thought of recently in the light of its bygone days, will not fall a victim of a wrecking crew, as recently was expected, but will be remodeled into an up-to-date 1,800 seat motion picture theatre. The theatre was sold this week by Robert Taubman to John Dillon, Samuel Carver being retained as manager. The theatre was opened in October, 1887, when Booth and Barrett appeared in "Othello." Mr. Carver has obtained a 10-year lease on the building at an annual rental of $5,600.

Rothacker To Get Post at First National?

Following the resignation of M. C. Levee as executive business manager of the First National Studios at Burbank, Calif., it is understood Watterson R. Rothacker will take over the post vacated by Mr. Levee, who goes to United Artists in a similar capacity.

It is expected official announcement of the appointment of Mr. Rothacker will be made at the First National convention at Burbank next week. Mr. Rothacker is at present in Europe, but will return shortly.

Construction Under Way on Two Minneapolis Houses

Excavation is nearing completion for the two new theatres which are already under construction in Minneapolis. The Publix house, at La Salle and Ninth is progressing rapidly, but it will undoubtedly be a year before the structure is complete. The excavation for the $125,000 house being built at Lake street and Thirty-fifth avenue for the Lake Amusement Company, will be finished this week, and it is expected that the building will be ready for occupancy in about three months.

May Tax Ohio Amusements to Make Up State Deficit

Word has been received that the proposed tax on amusements, cigarettes and recording of mortgages will be acceptable to Governor A. V. Donahey, of Ohio, as a means to balance a state deficit. The bill calls for a ten per cent tax on admissions.

Harry Weinberg to Start New Theatre Chain in Iowa

IT HAS been rumored at several times that Harry Weinberg was to start a new theatre chain in Iowa. This news was authenticated last week when Mr. Weinberg announced that he owns and operates nine Iowa theatres and one in Omaha. These theatres are part of a chain which he plans to place second only to that of A. H. Blank's in Iowa. The most recent additions to the string of theatres are three at Ames, formerly owned by Joe Benjamin Gerbracht. The houses are the Princess and the Twin Star, which are located downtown, and the Ames which is near the Iowa state college campus. Mr. Weinberg announced that Mr. Gerbracht would continue to operate the houses. Another theatre is planned for Ames by the new company which, with headquarters in the Commonwealth Building in Des Moines, is known as the Commonwealth Theatres. The new Ames Theatre will be a 1,200-seat house costing approximately $150,000, and will be started early in 1928. On the present Ames Theatre close to $28,000 will be spent in remodelling and redecorating.

In and Out of Town

ALBERT GREY, in charge of Paramount road shows, left this week for Chicago to make preparations for the opening at the Auditorum in that city of "The Routh Riders."

C. B. Porden, managing director of the Wellyn Garden and Hadfield Theatres, London, England, and a member of the executive board of the British Exhibitor Association, is in New Yok. He will return to England shortly.

SAM E. RORK, after spending several weeks in New York where he signed a contract with Richard A. Rowland, general and production manager of First National, has returned to the West Coast to make a production starring Will Rogers from Charles Hoy's old farce, "A Texas Steer."

Guy P. Morgan, general manager of B. and H. Enterprises, left this week for Hollywood where he will confer with C. C. Burr and Johnny Hines on future productions for release through First National, as well as participate actively in the International Sales Convention of First National. Mr. Morgan will remain on the West Coast for about a month.

H. C. Witwer, novelist and humorist who wrote "The Beauty Parlor" series now in production at the F. B. O. studio in Hollywood, has arrived in New York for an indefinite stay. Mr. Witwer is staying at the Roosevelt.

Texas M. P. T. O. Meets in Galveston, June 7-8

June 7 and 8 are the dates named for the M. P. T. O. of Texas to meet in convention at the Galvez Hotel, Galveston, Texas.

Penn. Theatre Merger Involves 29 Houses

Consolidation Brings Together Four Chains; East Coast Deal Swings Seven Theatres

ONE of the most important independent mergers in the history of the industry in Philadelphia has just been effected, involving twenty-nine independent theatres and representing assets in the neighborhood of ten million dollars. The houses include fourteen theatres controlled by the Franklin Amusement Co., seven houses operated by Green & Altman, four houses operated by Will Cohen and four by Morris Wax. The new company will be known as the Equity Theatres Corporation and will operate as a joint organization, with holdings based on the values of the theatres which the various interests contributed toward the whole.

Plans of the corporation provide for a rapid expansion in this and adjoining territories, with the expectation of building, acquiring or leasing thirty additional theatres within the next calendar year. The real estate activities of the corporation will be largely in the hands of Lewis Korson, of Masterpiece Exchange. Will Cohen will serve as president of the organization, Morris Wax as secretary and treasurer, with Harry Green and Abe Altman handling the finances. The activities of the new corporation are not directed against the Stanley Company. The merger was brought about very largely to effect certain economies and to provide greater buying power as well as to protect the various interests.

With the purchase of the fifty per cent interest held by Gene Marcus in the Eastern States Theatres Company, East Coast Theatres now has control of the seven theatres that were formerly operated under the Eastern States banner. With the acquisition of the other fifty per cent interest of the organization, East Coast will surrender the Eastern States Theatres Company charter and operate under the head of its own corporation. The theatres involved in the transaction are the Karlton and the Palace, Quakertown; the Park and Colonial, Palmerton; the Spielmont and Globe, Marcus Hook; and the Colonial, Trumbauersville. The transaction became effective as of May 9, 1927.

Chicago Exhibs Celebrate

Theatre Men Hold First Anual Ball and Movie Frolic; Will Be Annual Event in Windy City

Jack Miller and Ludwig Siegel

THE most brilliant and successful movie affair in the history of Chicago, was the verdict of the twenty-five hundred theatre owners, film stars, writers, musical celebrities and movie goers who thronged the magnificent ball room and lobbies of the new Stevens Hotel on Wednesday night of this week for the First Annual Grand Ball and Movie Frolic of the Exhibitors Association of Chicago.

From the time the doors of the ball room were opened, at 7:30 P. M., until "Home, Sweet Home" was played in the early morning hours, there was not a dull moment, a continuous array of feature acts alternating with the snappy dance music by orchestras which were at their best under the batons of such leaders as Paul Ash, Husk O'Hare and the veteran, John Phillip Sousa, and kept the crowd on their toes.

Through the co-operation of several important film companies, a number of representative screen stars were on hand, and their tables on the balcony, where the guests of honor were seated, were the cynosure of all eyes.

During the evening President Miller introduced to the crowd Miss Jetta Goudal, who was the official hostess of the evening. Milton Sills, Virginia Valli, George O'Brien, Victor MacLaglen, King Vidor, Eleanor Boardman, Frances Lee, 1927 Wampas Baby Star, Billy Dooley, James T. Murray, and Snookums, all of whom were accorded an enthusiastic welcome.

While the united support of Chicago's motion picture theatre owners, both large and small, made the ball possible, the hard work of the ball committee, comprising Ludwig Siegel, chairman, Jack Miller, Joe Pastor, Joe Koppel, Charlie Kamp, Fred Gilford, Aaron Saperstein, Edward Grossman and Miss T. M. Heraty, secretary of the Exhibitors, who for weeks devoted themselves night and day laboring for its success, deserves credit.

The entertainment features of the evening were staged under the supervision of Harry Beaumont, of Ascher Brothers, with the able assistance of Joe Pastor, and Al Sobler was in charge of the publicity campaign, which preceded the ball.

Hammons Accepts Canada's Invitation to Hold Next Convention in Montreal

THE invitation to Educational Film Exchanges to hold its next annual convention in Montreal, conveyed in a telegram received by E. H. Hammons, has been accepted by him and this announcement formed the closing statement to the sales conference recently concluded at Los Angeles. The invitation was issued by the Right Hon. Mackenzie Ring, Premier of the Dominion of Canada, the Hon. L. A. Taschereau, Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec, the Hon. Mederic Martin, Mayor of Montreal and several other high officials. Educational's acceptance of the invitation establishes a precedent in that it will be the first film industry convention held outside the United States.

M-G-M Conventionees En Route to Coast

Three Hundred Sales Representatives and Home Office Executives in Los Angeles May 19-24

APPROXIMATELY three hundred sales representatives and home office executives of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are on their way to Los Angeles and the Culver City studios of the company, where the annual sales convention opens May 19, and ends May 24. The delegates, representing exchanges all over the United States and Canada, will see the M-G-M pictures scheduled for the 1927-28 season and visit the company's studios as well as the Roach plant, there to see in the making the short product to be sold next season. Meet Dates, June 1-2

THE dates for the semi-annual convention of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri were announced this week by President R. R. Biechale as June 1 and 2 in Topeka, Kans. The Hotel Kansan, Topeka, probably will be the site of the convention. Election of officers, discussion of chain and producer owned theatres, as well as the uniform contract, will be disposed of at the meeting. President Biechale has not definitely announced his intentions of being a candidate for re-election, but the consensus of opinion along Kansas City's film row is that sentiment is so strong for the man who practically "made" the organization that he will be forced to again accept the presidency. The dates of the meeting, which fall on Wednesday and Thursday, will mark an exception to the usual Monday and Tuesday dates on which conventions of the past have been selected.

H. L. Rothchild Reentering Motion Picture Business

Herbert L. Rothchild, who recently sold his theatres in this city to the Publix Corporation, is again to enter the movie game. This time it will be with Nat Holt, manager and one of the owners of the Wigwam Theatre.

The Wigwam will be entirely rebuilt at a cost of $250,000 and Holt and Rothchild both stated no expense would be spared to make it one of the finest of its type. Other theatres also will be taken over and rebuilt, as well as built by these men. The rebuilding of the Wigwam will be done in quiet stages and the audience will not be disturbed. All the pictures will be shown each week, as well as the presentation acts. The Wigwam is at present operated under the control of the Golden State Theatre Corporation.

S. M. Nutt Purchases Two Theatres at Hot Springs

Sidney M. Nutt, Hot Springs business man, has recently purchased the Princess and Lyric Theatres at Hot Springs, Arkansas. The purchase was made from Sam Blumensteil and John C. Wolf, and involved a consideration of $500,000. Mr. Nutt had already acquired the Central Theatre in the same city. Mr. Nutt recently served as president of the Arkansas Motion Picture Theatre Managers' Association. Road attractions will be the policy of the Princess Theatre, which has a seating capacity of 1,100. The Lyric Theatre will be completely remodelled and will reopen to high class vaudeville.

Studio Briefs

Max Kimmich, who recently graduated from scenario writer to director, will direct Arthur Lake in a series of Universal two reel comedies which will present the youthful comedian in the guise of a worldly wise drug store cowboy. A supporting cast is now being selected. As soon as Lake has finished with his featured part in "Betty's a Lady" he will begin work on the new series of comedies. Kimmich both wrote and directed "The Shanghai Jest," a Universal short.

Victor and Edward Halperin, now producing "Dance Magic" in conjunction with Robert Kane for First National, announce the purchase of motion picture rights to "Samuel Brohl and Company," by the Frenchman, Cherbuliez. It will be produced as a special with Victor Halperin directing.

Universal Pictures has renewed the option on the long term contract of Eddie Phillips, the college heavy in 18 of Carl Laemmle, Jr.'s, "The Collegians." Phillips will continue to give vent to his malicious feelings in the series, which will run to 20.

Now that the majority of the interiors of "White Pants Willie," Johnny Hines' newest comedy venture for First National, have been taken, the comedian is busily engaged on location doing the important exteriors under the direction of his brother, Charles Hines, with C. C. Burr supervising the entire production. A polo match, for which crack members of Hollywood polo teams have been recruited, will form one of the laugh sequences.

On Charley Chase's set, at the Hollywood studio, a regular beauty tournament is in progress, as there are forty-two girls in the comedian's latest comedy; they are headed by Lupe Valez and Viola Richard, Roach's two new finds. Prominent roles in the Chase comedy are also played by Eric Mayne and Gale Henry.

The world film rights to "Tell the World," an original screen story, by Howard Irving Young, has been purchased for First National by Richard A. Rowland, the company's general and production manager.

Hal Yates, writer and director, has been signed to a long period contract by the Hal Roach Studio. His assignments will include writing, directing and collaboration. Yates directed Mabel Normand in several of her comedies.

Frederic and Fanny Hatton will title "The Bugle Call" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The picture stars Jackie Coogan in a "near-grown-up" role. Edward Sedgwick directed a cast which included Claire Windsor and Herbert Rawlinson.

Mitchell Lewis enters the comedy field in Charley Chase's "Forgotten Sweeties." In addition to Lewis, Chase receives support from Shirley Palmer, Anita Garvin, James Parrott, the brother of Charley Chase, directed "Forgotten Sweeties."

New Cosmopolitan Lineup

Ten Films Make Up Large Schedule; "Bringing Up Father" and "The Lovelorn" on List

COSMOPOLITAN's output for the new season will be ten pictures, three Marion Davies films, stories of Blasco Ibanez, Peter B. Kyne, and screen adaptations of the cartoon scripts of George McManus and Chic Young. All of these productions will receive newspaper publicity and advertising in the Hearst publications.

First on the new schedule is "Becky," an original newspaper serial by Raynor Seelig. It has already been made under the direction of John F. McCarthy. Probably the Cosmopolitan production that will be given the most publicity next season will be "Bringing Up Father," the cartoon strip by George McManus which appears in newspapers throughout the world. A third Cosmopolitan picture will be "Business Wives," an original newspaper serial by Winifred Van Duzer which the Hearst papers and others will shortly publish by arrangement with King Features Syndicate. "The Lovelorn," by Beatrice Fairfax, with screen story by Hazel Livingston, is also included among the forthcoming Cosmopolitan productions and will also appear in serial form in the Hearst newspapers under the same title.

The fifth picture will be a screen transcription of "White Shadows in the South Seas," Frederick O'Brien's book which will be known on the screen merely as "White Shadows"; it, too, will be serialized in the Hearst newspapers. Besides the five pictures mentioned an original story by Peter B. Kyne to be published in the Cosmopolitan Magazine will probably be produced as a special. A story by Blasco Ibanez of Cosmopolis and his discovery of America will also be made into a picture. Finally, three Marion Davies productions, "Quality Street," "Dumb Dora," Chic Young's comic strip, and a third vehicle still to be selected, will complete the company's plans for the new season.

The majority of the Cosmopolitan productions will be serialized; they will run for a period of from one to two months and will be proceeded by elaborate advertising campaigns of quarter page, half pages and full pages. Through arrangements with the King Features Syndicate, "Becky" will be published by a large group of newspapers in United States and Canada.

Paramount Studio Busy

Approaching Peak of Summer Production Activities; Seven Starring Vehicles Going Into Work

LAST year's record at the Paramount studios, when 16 pictures were in production at the same time, may be exceeded this year, as Paramount has nine pictures under way and six more ready to be placed in work within a few weeks. Present studio plans indicate that seven films will be in simultaneous production.

James Cruze is about ready to begin direction on "We're All Gamblers Now," an adaptation of Sidney Howard's stage play, "Lucky Sam McCarver," which will be Thomas Meighan's first picture on the West Coast in three years. Selection for the supporting cast for Clara Bow in "Hula," her next picture, is now in progress and with the filling of the various roles shooting will begin. Clive Brook will act opposite the flapper star. Eddie Cantor's next vehicle will be "The Girl Friend," an original story by Jules Furthman, which is about ready to go into production. Preparations are being made for Pola Negri, who upon returning from Paris will make one more picture before beginning work on "Rachel," to be based on the life of the famous Continental actress and directed by Rowland V. Lee.

Josef von Sternberg, who is now directing "Underworld," has been assigned the direction of Adolphe Menjou's new picture, "With Their Eyes Open," a story by I. A. R. Wylie, which has appeared in the pages of the Saturday Evening Post.

Scheduled to go into production soon are "The Last Outlaw," starring Gary Cooper, who has Betty Jewel as leading lady, and "Ten Modern Commandments," in which Esther Ralston will receive direction from Dorothy Arzner, Paramount's woman director.

Jack Luden to Star in Paramount Pictures

JACK LUDEN, a graduate of the Paramount Pictures School, will be a featured player on Paramount's line-up for 1927-28. Jesse L. Lasky announced at the Eastern sales convention of Paramount that the young player, who during the past year was featured in F. B. O. shorts, would star in five Westerns. The title of three of them are: "Dude Ranch," "Shooting Irons" and "The Cactus Kid." Productions will start on the first in a short time.

Five Pictures for June Release by First Nat'l

Five new productions bearing the First National trade-mark will be released during June. "Naughty But Nice," a Colleen Moore picture, is scheduled for general release on May 19. Milton Sills' starring picture, "Framed," formerly titled "Diamonds in the Rough," will be issued on June 12. "The Land Beyond Law," Ken Maynard's newest Western vehicle, and "The Sunset Derby," with Mary Astor and William Collier, Jr., are scheduled for June 5. On June 26 "Dance Magic," Pauline Starke and Ben Lyons in the leads, will be released.

Gotham Franchises Being Rapidly Closed for '27-28

Sam Sax, president of Gotham Productions and Lumas Film Corporation, is rapidly closing distribution franchise contracts for the coming season of 1927-28 for the fourteen pictures that Lumas will release. The greater New York and Northern New Jersey territory will be handled by the First Division Pictures, whose president, Harry Thomas, has signed a distribution agreement with Mr. Sax. Likewise Jerry Abrams, of the Gotham Pictures Exchange, Inc., of Chicago, has again signed up for the new Gotham product; the same situation applies to Denver, St. Louis and Salt Lake City, the same franchise holders continuing. Jack Graumam, of Celebrated Players Film Corp., of Milwaukee, will again represent Gotham in Wisconsin.

Jack Weil, of the Gotham exchange in St. Louis, remains as distributor for Missouri and Southern Illinois; J. T. Sheffield continues with the Columbia Pictures Exchange as franchise holder for Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and the localities supplied from the Denver and Salt Lake City offices. In Indianapolis a new franchise holder is Irving Mandel, of Security Pictures Corporation, who has acquired the 1927-28 Gotham franchise for Indiana.

Five Stern Comedies for Current Market

Five two-reelers from the studio of the Stern Brothers, comedy producers for Universal, are being offered exhibitors this month. "Buster Don't Forget," directed by Gus Meins and featuring Arthur Trimble, Doreen Turner and Pete the dog, is the first release for May. "The Newlywed's Shopping Tour," with Sunny McKeen, Sid Saylor and Ethlyn Clair, is the Newlyweds comedy for the month and it was also directed by Gus Meins. "Keeping His Word," starring Charles King, is the latest of the Excuse Maker series. Scott Pembroke directed. "Jane Missed Out," of the What Happened to Jane series, is scheduled for the next week or so, while "Kid George" of the Let George Do It Series is another current Stern offering. Sid Saylor takes the part of George and Ethlyne Clair is girl in the picture.

Lya de Putti in "U's" "Buck Privates"

Lya de Putti is the choice of the casting officials at Universal City for the principal feminine role in "Buck Privates," a post-armistice comedy feature which Stuart N. Lake, former newspaperman and army officer, wrote. Mel Brown is to direct. Miss de Putti is now playing with Kenneth Harlan in "Midnight Rose;" she is also to play in "He Knew Women" with Ivan Moskine under the direction of Stuart Paton.

"Yankee Clipper" Becomes "British Clipper" in Can.

Rupert Julian's "The Yankee Clipper" has become "The British Clipper" for Canadian consumption. This P.D.C. feature is being distributed in Canada by Regal Films, Limited, Toronto.

Eight More Join First Nat'l's K. O. Club

THE membership of First National's K. O. Club of honorary salesmen with the best records for each quarter of the year has been swelled from the original ten to the present number of eighteen. At the end of the present quarter, April 2, the membership now consists of eighteen men wearing bronze buttons, and the two who were re-elected, thus winning the silver button.

The winners for the second quarter are: A. P. Bibber, of the Boston exchange; R. J. Morrison, of Denver; F. A. Loftus, of Philadelphia; Jack B. Magann, of Boston; A. S. Bailey, of Los Angeles; John Pavone, of New Haven; Edwin C. Walsh, of Buffalo; W. J. Brandt, of Cleveland; W. A. Burke, of Kansas City; and Ralph Kinsler, of Cincinnati. Messrs. Van Bibber and Morrison are the two salesmen who will wear the two-time insignia.

The salesmen who win membership in the K. O. Club once are awarded a second week's salary; those who win a second time are awarded another extra week's salary and given $1,000 of added insurance; those who win a third time get another extra week's pay and an additional $1,000 of insurance; those who win four times receive another additional week's salary and a trip to New York City at the company's expense.

Leaves for L. A. to Confer on "Sorrell and Son"

Herbert Brenon, accompanied by Ray Lissner and Julian Fleming, his assistant director and technical director respectively, left for Los Angeles, Thursday, May 5, on the Lake Shore Limited. After conferring with Joseph M. Schenck, president and chairman of the board of directors of United Artists, the director will decide whether "Sorrell and Son," his first independent production, will be filmed in England or in California or partly in each place. The names of film actors suggested to Mr. Brenon by readers of the Warwick Deeping novel for the role of Stephen Sorrell will also be considered.

Rudolph Schildkraut Signs Contract With De Mille

Rudolph Schildkraut, one of the De Mille players, signed a new contract with the studio this week when he was called from the set of "The Country Doctor" to affix his signature to the agreement. During his stage and screen careers, Schildkraut has appeared in over 400 characterizations. He has just finished "Turkish Delight," and is now working under Rupert Julian's direction.

Loos and Roche Stories Bought by Fox Films

"His Picture in the Papers," a story from the whimsical pen of Anita Loos, and "Come to My House," a current Liberty Magazine story by Arthur Somers Roche, have just been purchased by Fox Film Corporation. Both of the stories will be produced during the coming season.

New Tiffany Branch Heads

Many Changes in Personnel of Exchanges, Announced by Ed. J. Smith, to Take Effect Immediately

SEVERAL new shifts and appointments in the personnel of the exchanges of Tiffany Productions, Inc., which have just been instituted and taken effect, are a preparatory measure to a sales drive which is to be inaugurated for the new production schedule of the company, a list of Twenty Gems, the 24 Tiffany Color Classics, and the three dimension pictures, according to General Sales Manager Ed. J. Smith.

The Tiffany exchange in Philadelphit has a new manager in Al Blofson, who has established his headquarters at 1313 Vine Street. He will take charge over the territory embracing Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware. Replacing Harry Goldstein, who has been given the post of special representative for the central territory, George P. Jacobs has been given an appointment of manager of the Tiffany branch office in Cincinnati. For several years Mr. Jacobs was with Universal and with Sol Lesser, and he is well known throughout the Cincinnati territory, as he had his own distributing exchanges in that city and Cleveland.

George Jefferies has been appointed special representative, supervising the New England territory, with headquarters at Boston. Abel Davis has been engaged as manager of the new Tiffany exchange established at Denver and Salt Lake City. The branch in Denver, located at 2040 Broadway, is in full swing, with Davis covering his localities personally and with a staff of salesmen.

J. E. Huey, who comes to Tiffany after eight years as manager of the Vitagraph Company in the Texas territory, has been placed in charge of the Tiffany exchange at Dallas, Tex., located at 308 S. Harwood Street.

Columbia-Cooney Deal

Chicago Circuit to Exhibit Product for Next Five Years Through Arrangement With Henri Ellman

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week by Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, that his company has signed a contract with Cooney Brothers, Chicago, which assures all Columbia releases for the next five years play dates in fourteen houses in the Windy City controlled by the Cooneys or National Playhouses, Inc., as the firm is known.

Negotiations were arranged by Henri Ellman, general manager for the Columbia franchise in the Chicago territory, and the contract was signed while J. J. and B. J. Cooney were in New York City lining up product for next season. The Cooneys have been playing Columbia pictures for the past two years; they expressed themselves as well satisfied with the new deal.

The new arrangement embraces showings in both first-run and neighborhood houses. The theatres are the Capitol, Avalon, Stratford, Paradise, Cosmo, Highland, West Englewood, Colony, Chatham, Grove, Jeffrey, Victory, Cicero and Egyptian.

Reginald Denny Starts on "Out All Night"

REGINALD DENNY, whose comedy dramas were recently elevated by Carl Laemmle to super productions at Universal City, has launched his unit into the production of "Out All Night," originally known as "I'll Be There." This will be the comedian's first special for 1927-28 and will be made under the direction of William A. Seiter, who has chosen Marion Nixon, Wheeler Oakman, Dorothy Earle, Alfred Allen, Robert Seiter, Ben Hendricks, Jr., Lionel Braham and Dan Mason for the supporting cast. Gladys Lehman wrote the story for the farce-comedy, which will be followed by "Good Morning Judge," "Ask Me Another" and "Watch My Speed." Carl Laemmle, it is said, is personally devoting a large portion of his time to the Denny unit.

Sam Sax to Make His Headquarters on Coast

In the future, Sam Sax's permanent headquarters will be made in California, and the Gotham and Lumas president is now making preparations to move his family and home to the West Coast. The reason for this move is Mr. Sax's desire to keep close personal supervision over the production department. He will make several trips a year to New York in connection with distribution and will confer with Budd Rogers, the Lumas vice-president, who is now touring the Gotham exchanges; the latter will remain in charge of the New York branch of the organization while Mr. Sax is away on the Coast.

Upon the return of Mr. Rogers about the middle of this month, Mr. Sax will leave New York and will go to Los Angeles to start work on "The Woman Who Did Not Care," one of the last Gothams on the current program. Three new productions for the coming season will be placed in work after the present schedule is completed.

L. F. Nathan, Cameraman, in Paramount Home Office

Lewis F. Nathan, motion picture and still photographer who was formerly associated with the company's Astoria studio, is now stationed in the home office of Paramount. He has installed a modern photographic plant in the Paramount Building to facilitate the handling of stills by Paramount and Publix. A number of experts in still work and enlargements are associated with Mr. Nathan.

Exhibitors Service Bureau

Circus Atmosphere Proves Draw for "Spangles"

Cambridge, Ohio, responded to the appeal of real circus atmosphere when the Strand theatre there presented "Spangles" to the accompaniment of a special stage act and exploitation which featured the "big top" style of show. The Strand presentation was arranged by Fred E. Johnson, manager.

"We offered as a special added attraction," Johnson reports, "a troupe of trained dogs. The entrance to the theatre was done in circus tent style, with a covering over the main entrance and side tabs which made a realistic setting. A banner over the entrance read: 'Main Entrance to the Circus. See Spangles.' We had sawdust all over the lobby floor to give the setting more atmosphere."

Cast of 30 in Prologue for "The Better 'Ole"

With a cast numbering 30 artists and an elaborate setting in the atmosphere of the picture, Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand, Brooklyn, N. Y., presented an especially colorful prologue in connection with "The Better 'Ole."

The company included a chorus of twenty, costumed as British Tommies, ten girl dancers, and two solo artists, Caroton Gerard, basso, and Jack Durant, eccentric dancer. The number opened with the male chorus singing "Pack up Your Troubles" on the orchestra stage. At the conclusion of the song the curtains over the presentation stage parted, disclosing a French village scene.

Contest Introduces New Orchestra Leader

Director Selects Juvenile Violinists to Compete For Portland Theatre Prize

A NOVEL contest which Manager Floyd Maxwell, of the Broadway Theatre, Portland, Ore., originated for the purpose of introducing his new violinist-orchestra director, Georgie Stoll, to the public of the city, proved to be a money getter and a real attraction.

The contest covered five weeks' time—four weeks for the semi-finals and one week for the finals, and was called a "Juvenile Violinist Contest." All violinists 16 years of age or under were eligible to compete. Arrangements were made for Stoll to listen to aspirants privately, in the parlors of the theatre, two afternoons each week, and to choose three of the best to compete on the stage during the week following. This eliminated poor players, and limited the length of time consumed on the stage to a minimum of 15 minutes.

The winners of each of the four weeks' semi-finals competed in the same manner during the final week. A silver cup, bearing the legend—"best juvenile violinist in Portland"—and a series of ten violin lessons from Stoll were offered as first prize, with theatre passes for the second, third and fourth prizes.

The talent brought to light in this contest was sufficiently good so that it aroused much enthusiasm among the patrons of the theatre. In addition, the natural interest created by the effort of the youngsters to win gave the contest an angle of civic pride. In fact, in many cases, the contest stopped the show.

A tie-up was made with The Portland News and generous publicity, much of it on the front page, was received during the five weeks' duration of the contest. Maxwell received many congratulations from music-lover patrons on the dignity and character of the contest, as well as its avowed purpose to stimulate musical interest among the youth of the city.

Victrola Accompaniment for "Mr Wu" Showing

Manager T. Y. Walker arranged something new and novel when he used an Orthophonic Victrola for the music of the comedy film in conjunction with the showing of "Mr. Wu" at the Publix Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala.

The music store which furnished the Victrola also aided in advertising the feature picture by running an ad in the newspaper, and by having a most attractive window display.

Key City Reports

New York City

THE summer business bogey began getting in its nefarious work last week, with the result that show business, both legitimate and flicker, was off materially all over town. Even the roadshows, which have been pulling fairly well, felt the pinch.

The most notable instance of the slump was the Paramount, which set a new house record—low, not high—when "Cabaret" failed to do even $60,000, whereas the house has been averaging close to $70,000, week in and week out.

The Roxy had the big gross of the street, of course, at a figure above $100,000, but this, too, means a tapering off from the sweet grosses which have ruled here. ("Yankee Clipper.")

The Capitol and Strand, both which have felt the pinch of the Roxy, despite what anyone may try to tell you, didn't create any furores "Venus of Venice" and "His First Flame," respectively.

"Rough Riders" and "Old Ironsides" are both badly off. "Children of Divorce" not so strong. "The Big Parade," "What Price Glory," "Chang" and "When a Man Loves" are going along to steady business. "Chang" faring particularly well.

Chicago

THIS week's business at the Chicago Theatre was excellent, John Phillip Sousa and his famous band heading a program which included "Evening Clothes," as the screen attraction, and H. L. Spitalny in his extra orchestral feature, "Chopiana."

Normal business was done at the Oriental, "Senorita" being the screen feature and Paul Ash and his Merry Mad Gang playing "Jazz Baby." At the Roosevelt "The Fire Brigade," which was in its last week, continued to play to fair business. McVickers also had a hold over picture, "Slide, Kelly, Clide," which showed no signs of having worn out its welcome.

The Uptown with "Casey At the Bat" proved a good business getter. The Granada did average business with "The Heart of Salome" and the singing director, Charles Kaley with his stage band and the Vitaphone.

On the northside, houses showing "Casey At the Bat," was the Senate, where business was reported normal, with Mark Fisher and his stage band furnishing the musical feature. The Harding had a strong attraction in "Knockout Reilly," and with Art Kahn and his syncopators on the stage, did a good week's business.

The Tivoli, on the southe side, had "Venus of Venice" as its feature picture and popular Bennie Kreuger and his band, as well as the stage production, "Milady's Perfume," the combination drawing well. At the Capitol, with "The Love Thrill" and Del and his Capitol Merry Makers and Vitaphone, business was very good.

Many of the neighborhood houses were disappointed in the week-end business.

College Men Interested in Campus Screen Tests

THE plan recently put into effect by First National and College Humor Magazine to find screen talent among college men is meeting with intense enthusiasm on the part of students of the leading American universities, it is reported.

The Western First National unit making the tests—Ned Holmes, Ned Connors and Melvin Burns—registered 182 men at the University of Chicago, the first stop on the tour. At Ohio State 196 men reported, and at Michigan 287 turned out for the tests. The Eastern unit—J. L. Johnston, Fred Bentley and William Stron—registered 143 men at Yale, 220 at Brown, more than 400 at Harvard, and over 450 at Cornell. Syracuse registered 350, Pittsburgh and Carnegie more than 200 each.

Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES Theatres enjoyed good business last week because of a strong line up of picture entertainment.

"What Price Glory" closed at the Carthy Circle Theatre after a six months' run. "7th Heaven" moved in with an opening night more spectacular than any in the history of the theatre.

"Resurrection" at the Criterion is continuing to play to good crowds and is now in the fifth week of its run. At the Forum, where "Mr. Wu" is playing, the management reports satisfactory business over a period of five weeks. "Old Ironsides" closes this week at Graumans Egyptian and will be replaced with "Camille."

Loew's State report good attendance for "Captain Salvation," a John Robertson Production, and "The Fire Brigade" at the Million Dollar is playing to crowds in its second week.

Bebe Daniels in "Senorita" caught on immediately. Heavy box office returns are reported for this picture.

Neighborhood houses are doing well. "McFadden's Flats," a First National picture, is now making the rounds of the outlying theatres and wherever shown is click-

Cleveland

THE Metropolitan Opera Company's local eight-day engagement at the Public Auditorium which drew an attendance of over 80,000, materially cut into the local movie business last week. None of the lines of entertainment were able to stand up against such strong competition.

"Children of Divorce" did just fairly well at the Stillman. "Rookies," in its third week at the Cameo suffered less than the bigger houses which get greater admission prices. It did well enough to justify being held over for a fourth and last week.

"Knockout Reilly" at the Allen was the outstanding film success of the week. Dix' popularity is ever on the increase here.

Keith's Palace and Loew's State theatre both took their patrons' vote for the week's entertainment. "The Mysterious Rider" was moderately successful at the Palace and "The Understanding Heart" just got by at the State with average attendance. "Mr. Wu," doing a second run at the Park, did better than most second runs following an unusually successful first run. "White Gold" went over satisfactorily at Keith's East 105th St., where it played all week, but was only moderately successful at Reade's Hippodrome, where it was offered the last half of the week. "Hey! Hey! Cowboy," the attraction the first half of the week, was better liked at the Hippodrome. The Circle continues to draw well with Vitaphone specialty numbers and second run pictures. Last week's picture was "One Increasing Purpose." The feature is secondary to the Vitaphone at the Circle.

St. Louis

ASIDE from that this historically incorrect version of the 1926 baseball classic, played to nice business at the Loew's State Theatre the week ending on May 6. Even if it was an insult to the loyalty of Cardinals rooters.

"Afraid to Love," with Florence Vidor as the starette, enjoyed a good week at the Missouri. Across the street at the Grand Central "White Flannels" was on the screen. Business was fair. The St. Louis also had a fair week with "Love Makes 'Em Wild" as the chief film attraction.

"Three Hours," with Corinne Griffith, was at the Ambassador. Business was fairly good.

In the neighborhood houses business continues decidedly off, although there has been some indication of improvement. It is hoped the airdome season will help in that section of the local film world.

Kansas City

A WEEK of inclement weather left its mark on the attendance records at most first-run Kansas City houses this week, although the decrease was only slight, the matinee business being larger than the average and the night attendance smaller.

"Lovers?" at the Newman did a business which was about normal, but Constance Talmadge, in "Venus of Venice," did not come up to the anticipated attendance mark, unusually cool weather which followed the rains keeping many patrons at home.

Milwaukee

STRONG attractions marked the programs of down-town theatres, yet the activity of the theatre-going public was only about average. This was the first week of baseball in Milwaukee, and thrillers out on the diamond cut into the theatre business somewhat. Business over the week-end was a bit slow, due to the incomparable weather, with the decided spring urge which sent folks out into the big open spaces.

"What Price Glory" at the Davidson, its second week's showing, held its popularity and played to gratifying houses. Sam'n Henry, the jovial radio entertainers, helped to swell the Monday night patronage of the Wisconsin Theatre, which is showing "Knockout Reilly." "Fashions for Women" proved very popular at the Alhambra. Filming of the interior view of "Trapped by Radio," a local movie, was another attraction.

The Garden, showing "Mother," found business very good during the entire week. "The Demi Bride" was a popular attraction at the Merrill. The Strand did very good business with "The Telephone Girl" and "Shoulder Arms." "The Little Adventuress" added greatly to the bill at the Orpheum.

Milwaukeeans like their neighborhood theatres, and where the pictures are good the patronage is always good. "Forever After" at the Milwaukee was very well received, and the Colonial showing, "What Every Girl Should Know," was unusually well attended. The clientele of the Venetian was apparently well pleased with "Love Makes 'Em Wild." "A Kiss in a Taxi" was popular at the Tower, as was also "An Affair of the Follies" at the Modjeska.

Philadelphia

DAYLIGHT saving continued to make itself felt during the second week of its operation in Philadelphia.

The bill at the Stanley, a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer feature, "Lovers?", with Ramon Novarro and Alice Terry in the title rôles, did fairly satisfactory business. The picture was augmented by Vincent Lopez himself and his Casa Lopez Orchestra.

The Fox had a good week with Marion Davies in "The Red Mill," supported by an enjoyable list of presentations, including Lloyd Hoffman and Harry Rose.

The "Fire Brigade," with a liberal amount of exploitation, did fairly well at the Stanton, but there was general belief that "Slide, Kelly, Slide" should have been held over for a longer engagement.

"Venus of Venice" continued at the Arcadia with only fair business. The Karlton reported none too good a week with "Too Many Crooks," with Mildred Davis and Lloyd Hughes. The Palace offered "New York," a picture that had already played the Stanley. It held up fairly well. "Jim, the Conqueror," with William Boyd and Elinore Fair, did not break any house records at the Victoria.

Boston

LAST week could be called spotty, for while most of the down-town houses had both good and bad days, from a box office standpoint, the suburban houses appear to be enjoying as heavy receipts as at any time this season.

This week marks the closing of three legitimate house shows. Because of these closings, business in the down-town motion picture houses should allow a considerable gain during the next few weeks.

Business is apparently right in the mood for musical offerings. Metropolitan Theatre's adoption of a jazz orchestra, the "Met Merry Makers," under the leadership of Gene Rodemich, has proven, in its three weeks to date, one of the best innovations the Metropolitan has made. It shares honors with the George Murray Anderson productions, which, by the way, is this week a comedy offering, "The Samplers." "Afraid To Love" is the film feature, winning much approval.

The same musical balance is found at Loew's State, where Wendall Hall, vocalist and composer, and Tommy Christian's Orchestra provide the entire presentation program, with Norma Shearer in "The Demi-Bride," making a heavy box office attraction.

"Moulders of Men" is the feature at both the Scollay Square Olympia and the Fenway Theatres, drawing large audiences. "Michael Strogoff" continues to draw as the leading feature on the long bill at the Bowdoin Square Theatre. "The Notorious Lady" has proven a big attraction at the Washington Street Olympia, while the Keith-Albee Boston Theatre continues to prosper under its recently adopted feature film policy, with "Getting Gertie's Garter" as the feature. "The Show" at Loew's Orpheum proved a big attraction. The twin houses the Modern and the Beacon, feature "Little Adventuress" and "The Broken Gate" on their double feature bill.

Fitzmaurice to Direct Moore's First Special

COLLEEN MOORE'S next production for First National, which has been announced as "Lilac Time," the stage play in which Jane Cowl starred several years ago, will be a Colleen Moore-George Fitzmaurice special production and the first special of the star since she came under the First National banner. "Lilac Time" was written by Miss Cowl in collaboration with Jane Murfin.

Albany

THE weather continued cool in Albany, Troy and Schenectady during the past week, with the result that many an extra dollar came the way of the motion picture theatres in these three cities.

At the Mark Strand, "The Love of Sunya" played to excellent business, with Vitaphone presentations doing their part in the way of entertainment. While the theatre filled rather slowly between seven and eight o'clock, owing to the daylight saving, which apparently nothing can overcome, no matter how good the entertainment, the theatre was well filled with standing lines before nine o'clock. The Strand is endeavoring to overcome, as far as possible, the effects of daylight saving by showing Broadway pictures at a 50-cent admission.

At the Leland Theatre, "The Sea Tiger" ran well during the entire week. At the Clinton Square, "Josselyn's Wife" did only fair business. At the Mark Ritz business was nothing to brag about, with the Tom Mix picture "The Last Trail." Those who saw the picture liked it, but Tom Mix, who packs other houses in Albany, does not seem to bring the crowds to the Ritz.

In Troy, "Casey at the Bat" opened good, but did not hold itself up any too well at the Troy Theatre, although running only four days. The last three days of the week were given over to "Love's Greatest Mistake," without any great amount of business being done. "The Understanding Heart" played to fair business at the Lincoln in Troy.

Minneapolis

MOVING picture business in Minneapolis showed a slight slump during the past week. The weather remained cold and cloudy for a long stretch, and many people evidently preferred to stay at home than to journey forth to the cinema houses.

"The Fire Brigade," with Charles Ray and Mae McAvoy, did a rather disappointing business at the Strand. Its showing did not warrant holding it over a second week, although the Strand is a small house.

At the State Adolphe Menjou in "Evening Clothes" did an average business, but nothing to enthuse about, this in spite of the fact there was an unusually good program to accompany the picture. The Vitaphone attraction included several well known artists.

Harry Langdon, who ordinarily is good for full houses, was seen at the Garrick in "Long Pants," but he went over to just an average business.

Joan Crawford in "The Taxi Driver" pulled in good crowds at the Lyric, and Ken Maynard in "Somewhere in Sonora" attracted quite a few customers at the Grand.

The Pantages theatre advertised Rin-Tin-Tin heavily in "Tracked by the Police," and this picture undoubtedly did much to make the week a good one. At the Hennepin-Orpheum Harry Myers and Helen Chadwick were seen in "The Bachelor's Baby."

The Garden theatre was still drawing the crowds with "The Naked Truth." This picture was shown "to women only" for three weeks, and this week it was advertised as exclusively for men.

There were practically no counter-attractions of merit to pull the business from the movies.

Indianapolis

MOVIE business was slightly off here the past week due to heavy attendance at two stock company houses and the other special entertainments including Sells-Floto circus Tuesday night.

The Colonial recently opened under new management with Royal Peacock orchestra as a feature, and the Ohio with "Ritzy" led in business for the week. "Wolf's Clothing" was the Colonial film. Richard Dix in "Knockout Reilly" at the Circle failed to do expected business because the film was not appealing to women.

The Circle was crowded Friday night at flood benefit midnight show presented by all theatres. Weather conditions good. Neighborhood houses fair.

Des Moines

REPORTS on shows in Des Moines in the past few weeks have been quite consistently "very well" and "very nicely" through quite a variety of types of pictures.

"Knockout Reilly," showing at the Des Moines this week and "Evening Clothes," showing with the "Paper Revue" at the Capitol, did well, probably owing part of its success to the Publix Show, which is quite a drawing card.

"Long Pants" gave general satisfaction, being funny enough in spots to smooth over the bits where the fun was forced. "Resurrection" had a great deal to commend it and was enthusiastically received by the audiences in general. "Slide, Kelly, Slide," very good. "Children of Divorce" did nicely, as did the "Magic Garden" and "Moulders of Men," showing for half week runs at the Strand with Doc Lawson's orchestra from Iowa City. "High Hat" was good and "Flaming Forest" held well for a half week.

Seattle

DECIDEDLY pleasing weather last week apparently had its effect on theatre business, and as a result several houses played to very good house grosses.

Outstanding was the opening week of "The Better 'Ole" at John Hamrick's Blue Mouse Theatre. This picture, in conjunction with the second Vitaphone program, packed the house day and night, and went into the second week with flying colors.

At the Coliseum, "Blonde or Brunette" did a very good business, hitting a steady high average every day. An original "Blonde vs. Brunette Contest," staged by Manager Al Raleigh, was good for an added share of business.

Manager Bob Bender at the Columbia Theatre offered his patrons "The Gorilla Hunt" after a delay of several weeks in bookings, and consequently reaped the benefit of advance trailers that ran some time ago. The picture did a very good business for the entire run.

At the United Artists, "Casey at the Bat" failed to live up to advance expectations, and was pulled off after ten days of a proposed two weeks' engagement. Gloria Swanson's "Love of Sunya" was substituted and filled the house. It is going into a second week.

At the Fifth Avenue Theatre, "The Understanding Heart" did just a fair business, being a disappointment to the audiences. A mediocre Fanchon and Marco Revue called "The Musical Comedy Idea" did not get by.

"The Devil Horse" at the Embassy, and "The Night Bride" at Pantages, did good and fair business, respectively. At the Egyptian, leading neighborhood playhouse, "It" played to large houses for the usual run. Vera Gordon appeared in person at the Orpheum Theatre in her newest vaudeville sketch, but was no box office attraction. Business fair.

Detroit

WARM weather and the baseball season opening brought a decline in ticket sales.

"Slide, Kelly, Slide," with William Haines, failed to draw normal receipts at the Adams.

Average crowds gathered at the Michigan to witness the screening of "Senorita," Bebe Daniels' amazonian vehicle.

The State, offering Jack Mulhall in "See You in Jail," did good business during the early part of the week, dropping off near the end.

Roy D'Arcy and Sally O'Neill, at the Capitol in "Frisco Sally Levy," drew fair money throughout the entire week.

The Madison attraction, "Don Juan," starring John Barrymore, entered a final week of dollar making. It was well received during a run of four weeks.

Title Changes for Nine Universal Pictures

IMPORTANT changes in the titles of Universal productions scheduled for release in the summer and fall are: "Lea Lyon" to "Surrender," "The American Eagle" to "War Eagles," "Patents Pending" to "Hot Heels," "Back Wash" to "Midnight Rose," "Let's Go Home" to "Buck Privates," "Counsel for the Defense" to "Honor and the Woman," "Arm of the Law" to "The Shield of Honor," "Polish Blood" to "He Knew Women" and "Thunderhoofs" to "Wild Beauty." The Ernst Laemmle production starring Neil Hamilton and Francis X. Bushman is to be called "The Eternal Silence."

San Francisco

THE weather was ideal during the past week for the showing of movie acts at the first run houses, as well as the residential districts.

The St. Francis Theatre drew a large crowd with "The Night of Love," in which the acting was exceptional and the plot interesting. Many were surprised to find it so good. "The Magic Garden" drew well at the California Theatre, some going to hear the orchestra. "Moulders of Men," was considered a good picture at the Granada. The presentation by Partington took well.

"Three Hours" was considered an average picture by some and some not liking it at all, and stating so in some cases. Fanchon & Marco's presentation act was not as peppy as usual. "We're in the Navy Now," shown at the Cameo, proved popular. "Three Weeks in Paris," shown at the Union Square Theatre, was fair, the majority going because of the acts.

"Jim the Conqueror," shown at the Golden Gate Theatre, was a fairly good picture, the acts drawing in this case. At the Pantages Theatre, "The Ranger of the Big Pines," took well, as did the acts.

At the residential houses the Coliseum did very well with "The Scarlet Letter" and the Wigwam did excellent with "The Cheerful Fraud."

Baltimore

TOPPING the list for excellent business in the Monumental City for the week beginning Monday, May 2, was "See You in Jail," at the Rivoli, with Warren's Pennsylvanians as the added stage attraction.

"The Fire Brigade," at Loew's Century, went over very good and the picture was aided by a publicity stunt arranged by Charles Winston of the Loew interests.

While at Keith's Hippodrome "The Masked Woman," and five acts of vaudeville, went very good, at the Garden, "The Outlaws of Red River," with five acts of vaudeville, only went nearly fair.

At Warner's Metropolitan "The Better 'Ole," did fair business during its third week with the Vitaphone accompaniment. At Loew's Valencia, atop the Century, "Slide, Kelly, Slide," went into its second week with better business than during the [illegible] throughout the week.

At the New Theatre "The Yankee Clipper," proved a pretty good drawing card, but not strong enough to be held for a second week. Two pictures were given their first runs at the Embassy: "The Cheaters," during the first three days, and "Yours to Command," during the latter three days. Business at that house was not good.

Ottawa

OTTAWA, Ontario, theatres had it pretty much their own way during the week of May 2. With excellent pictures all around, little or no competition from other sources, practically no sporting counter-attractions, and favorable weather, the local exhibitors all put in a good week.

The Regent Theatre, with Ray Tubman in command, led off neatly with "Children of Divorce," big crowds being in evidence all week. It was a picture that was talked about. Joe Franklin had his best picture in a month at B. F. Keith's Theatre with "Evening Clothes," starring Adolphe Menjou. The Centre Theatre also had a great run with "The Waning Sex," as there is a good local following for Norma Shearer whose native town is the nearby metropolis of Montreal.

The Imperial Theatre picked up considerably under the new management of Ray Tubman for Paramount, the presentation being Bebe Daniels in "A Kiss in a Taxi." An excellent short subject here was the Our Gang Comedy, "Around the World," which had old and young enthused.

The Francais enjoyed a good week with three pictures in a row, "Conquering Power," "Watch Your Wife" and "The Phantom Bullet."

Over in Hull, Quebec, the Laurier Theatre cleaned up with "The Fire Brigade," while "Sensation Seekers" at the Eden Theatre, Hull, proved to be attractive to the French-Canadian patrons.

Central Pennsylvania

TWO film plays, distinctly different in character, "Slide, Kelly, Slide," and "Monte Cristo," drew the cream of the patronage of the Harrisburg picture houses during the week. The Kelly picture, which was shown at Loew's Regent, was particularly well timed as it was booked the same week as the opening of the Harrisburg professional baseball season, and it was noticeable that the audiences contained much more than the usual percentage of men patrons.

"Monte Cristo," at the Colonial, drew perhaps a shade better even than the baseball classic.

The Eddie Cantor film, "Special Delivery," was a distinct disappointment to the Harrisburg admirers of this clever stage comedian, and proved a very poor drawing card at the Victoria.

The photoplay offering at the State, which is devoted in part to vaudeville, was "Whispering Wires," featuring Anita Stewart, and it received favorable comment.

Gloria Swanson Outlines Production Plans

A TELEGRAM dated Friday, May 6, received at the United Artists' home office in New York, contains Gloria Swanson's first production announcement since arriving in Los Angeles a month ago. The first of her next three independent productions for United Artists, according to Miss Swanson, will be "The Woman and the Puppet," based on a romance by Pierre Louis. The second will be "Cleopatra," based on an original story of the Egyptian queen. The third, which was to have been been Miss Swanson's second picture, and which is now deferred, will be "The Battalion of Death."

Big crowds saw and enjoyed "Summer Bachelors" at the New Rialto, a neighborhood theatre, notwithstanding this was not a first-run picture in Harrisburg. This was attributed to the fact that "Summer Bachelors" made a big reputation when it was first shown some weeks ago in one of the downtown theatres.

The Broad theatre did good business with a repetition for Harrisburg of "Love of Sunya," with Gloria Swanson.

Tampa

THE closing of the Victory, and an excellent line-up of pictures the past week, pulled business that could be classed as BIG for the three big downtown houses. The Victory closed for its annual cleaning and renovating, and will not open again until Sept. 15th.

"The Love of Sunya" opened the week for the Tampa with an immense Sunday, and the following three days were big. "Let It Rain" pulled fine for the last three days. "White Gold" proved a good card for the Strand for its two days' showing, and "The Sensation Seekers" did big for three days, with "Special Delivery" closing the week to good business.

"Somewhere in Sorona" pulled fine for the Franklin for three days, then "All Aboard" kept the ball-a-rolling for two, with "Riders of the Law" holding it up for the rest of the week. A fine week for all three of the big first-run houses.

Portland, Oregon

RAIN and cold weather over the week-end helped the boys along wonderfully this week. "The Better 'Ole," with Vitaphone, opened at the Blue Mouse to flourishing business last Friday and continued to draw well throughout the week. It looks like another five-week run for "The Better 'Ole."

"Special Delivery" was assisted at the Broadway by a postman-popularity contest, and the results were entirely satisfactory. Fanchon and Marco's "Operatic" idea helped to please the customers, although it was not quite up to their standard.

The Liberty got fair returns with "The Mysterious Rider," as also did the Rivoli with "Midnight Lovers." The latter picture received better reports from the patrons than the former.

"The Love Thrill" proved a pleasant surprise at the Columbia. It drew well all week and was well liked.

The Peoples played another split-second-run week, playing "Casey at the Bat" for the first three days, and "The Show" the last four. Satisfactory business was reported, although there were expressions of disappointment in "The Show."

The big noise of the week, however, was at the Music Box, where Rin-Tin-Tin and his master, Less Duncan, made personal appearances in conjunction with Will King's musical comedy stock. The King shows have been very popular here, but the canine star packed 'em in for every performance. Absolute capacity business was reported.

The recent showing of "Ben Hur" aroused sufficient enthusiasm among the fans so that W. T. Pangle is returning it for three days on May 24-5-6, at the Auditorium.

Salt Lake City

THEATRE business at the down-town houses has been good during the past week, with fair weather having been enjoyed.

Richard Dix in "Knockout Reilly" drew capacity houses to the Paramount Empress Theatre, as well as did the added stage attraction billed as Gipsy and Marta, "KPO Radio Artists."

"The Taxi Dancer" is reported to have gone over fairly well at the Victory, and the American's offering of a two-feature program, consisting of "The Fourth Commandment" and "Butterflies in the Rain," was also received with a fair amount of enthusiasm. An unusually strong drawing card at the Pantages Theatre was "The Desert's Toll." The Gem management reports great business to have been enjoyed during the showing of "The Yankee Clipper," which production is to be run during the coming week also. "Wandering Girls" topped the vaudeville program at the Orpheum, and is reported to have been well received. "Faust" was the outstanding feature being shown at the neighborhood houses, having drawn good crowds to the Mission. A double feature bill was advertised at the Kinema in connection with "Boys' Week," featuring the western picture "The Duke of Black Butte" as the drawing card, and the second showing of "Kiki" also. This having also been National Music Week, large crowds have been drawn to the down-town section, due to the various parades and entertainments in this behalf.

Oklahoma City

"White Gold" was probably the best picture on the local programs last week, but it failed to please the mass of the people, and so was "pulled" at the Empress in midweek, and "For Wives Only" substituted. We understand that the audiences understood and liked the later picture.

"Knockout Reilly" brought good crowds to the Criterion all week. "The Love Thrill" was popular over at the Liberty, keeping the seats filled for its entire stay. "Down the Stretch" ended the week there to about the same business. "Special Delivery" proved itself a good comedy at the box office of the Capitol Theatre the first of the week, and pleased the audiences. "Matinee Ladies" did about the average business for the week-end at the Capitol. Nothing unusual, yet a satisfactory picture. The weather was good all week.

Jacqueline Logan Signed for "The Blood Ship"

Jacqueline Logan, who was recently signed by Columbia Pictures for the feminine lead in "For Ladies Only," has according to Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of Columbia production, signed a contract whereby her services are acquired for the chief feminine role in "The Blood Ship," the Norman Springer novel of the sea, which Director George B. Seitz will convert into celluloid. Fred Mynton is now busy with the scenario. It is said that Columbia Pictures already has a quarter of a million dollars scheduled for "The Blood Ship."

Stahl to Direct "In Old Kentucky" for M-G-M

John M. Stahl has been assigned the direction of "In Old Kentucky," one of the stage melodramas of the past generation by Charles Dazey. Work has started on the script and the director expects to put the picture in work within the next two months. "In Old Kentucky" was produced several years ago by Louis B. Mayer, with Marshall Neilan as director and Anita Stewart in the leading role. Much of the present production will be photographed in the blue grass region of Kentucky.

Lubitsch Sails for Europe to Finish "Heidelberg"

Ernst Lubitsch, now making "Old Heidelberg" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, arrived in New York Tuesday, May 10, on the Twentieth Century Limited, preparatory to sailing on May 12 for Germany, where he will take final shots for the picture on the original site of "Old Heidelberg." No cast members of the picture which co-stars Ramon Novarro and Norma Shearer accompanied him abroad, just his wife and small son and a few members of his technical staff.

"U" to Remake "Won in the Clouds"

"Won in the Clouds," a Universal production which was made in 1911 as the first air picture made, according to Universal, is to be remade with Al Wilson, stunt aviator, in the featured role. Carl Laemmle, the Universal president, has ordered the script of the practically forgotten picture taken from the files and rewritten from a present day standard. In the present version, the adaptation of which has just been finished by Karl Krusade, Wilson will be supported by 22 players.

Phyllis Haver Cast for "Brigadier Gerard"

In "Brigadier Gerard," the A. Conan Doyle story which the De Mille organization will shortly attempt as one of its most pretentious productions, Phyllis Haver will be the chief feminine player opposite Rod La Rocque, who will take the central character and title part. The Doyle story was groomed for the screen by Douglas Doty; Donald Crisp has been assigned to its direction and C. Gardner Sullivan to the supervisory position.

Examples of the ads adapting press book material used to exploit presentations of "The Love of Sunya" (United Artists) at the first run theatres, are illustrated above. Displays shown are those featured by the following houses: Loew's Valencia, Baltimore; Loew's Aldine, Pittsburgh; Family, Buffalo; Poli's, Waterbury, Conn; State Theatre, Hartford, Conn.

"Tired Business Men"
(Our Gang-Pathe—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

"ME FADDER'S a cop," but the rest of Our Gang lacked this information when they proceeded to inflict a cruel initiation on Fatty who desired to become a member of the "Club." The tortures of the Chinese Inquisition would be considered mild in comparison to what Fatty goes through; the spirit was willing but the flesh rebelled, although the poor novitiate suffered ninety-five per cent of the torture before he decided that life is much sweeter without a club membership, but a whole body, than a mangled carcass bedecked with Orders.

Swift retribution follows when Fatty discovers the fear-compelling obedience one may exact from one's fellow-beings when one's father sports brass buttons and a blue coat. He brow-beats the Gang and makes 'em like it until his little party is broken up through the utterly unsociable action of a bank-burglar who picks the Gang's meeting place as a hide-out from the pursuing police. Anthony Mack and Charles Oelze directed.

More fun, more eggs thrown and more children nearly annihilated! Don't miss this one.

"That's No Excuse"
(Universal-Stern Bros.—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

THIS is one of the Excuse Maker series built around the familiar theme of the number 13, but even though it be a little time worn, a lot of spookish gags have been cleverly put together into the making of an amusing two reeler. A couple about to be married are handed a certificate bearing number 13. They go to the summer cottage of the groom's and that house also bears the same number. In addition to the growing superstitions there is a crazy caretaker in charge, black cats and all kinds of things to upset newlyweds. The police finally have to be called upon to solve the situation.

"Red Suspenders"
(Universal Bluebird—One Reel)

SLIM SUMMERVILLE and Fanny, the latter a trick mule, carry off most of the honors in this one reeler directed by B. Smith. Granting that the old fire gag—having to do with the lost key of the fire station is still good for laughs, this one may do, for most of the action centres around this and the rescue of the girl Susie, who is caught in the flaming tower of the village church. Fanny, the mule, performs valiantly.—E. G. JOHNSTON.

"A Bird of Flight"
(Hodge Podge-Educational—One Reel)

THE current issues of the Hodge Podge series shows scenes from all over the world, Polynesia, Bavaria, Scotland, Cuba, Holland, Peru, etc., and is embellished with some trick shots and clever animation. It is an excellent subject for school-children, and should also entertain the elders.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Breezing Along"
(Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THERE are a number of amusing gags in the latest Lloyd Hamilton comedy in which the star plays the role of chauffeur and butler with dire results to the family he serves due to his clumsiness and the pranks of the family pet. The story opens with Hamilton seated in an employment agency awaiting a call for his services and, in the interim, he manages to disrupt the agency because of an altercation with a brother down-and-outer.

His call comes and as his first duty he drives the family home where they arrive considerably bruised and upset. He then goes into the "butling" scenes causing discomfiture to the house guests and laughter for your patrons.

Hamilton's supporting cast includes Al Thompson, Eva Thatcher, Estelle Bradley and Vincent Cullen. Norman Taurog directed.

"A Kangaroo Detective"
(Fox Animal Series—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

HERE is a weird mixture of mystery and slapstick dealing with the capture of the "Mouse Man," a creature which is terrorizing a hotel by a series of jewel robberies. "Buttons," a new bell hop and his pet kangaroo detective are determined to run the crook to earth and capture the reward. Two "social climbers," inmates of the hotel, and Dolly, their daughter, are visited one night by the "Mouse Man," and after plenty of running around the thief is finally brought to terms by "Buttons" and his pet. The kangaroo, by the way, is of the boxing species and puts up quite an exhibition. "Buttons" wins Dolly's affection, taking care of the romantic end. It's a very fair two reeler.

Pathe Review No. 21
(Pathe—One Reel)

A PARTICULARLY interesting issue of the Pathe Review is on the Pathe release schedule for May twenty-second due to the instructive subject matter unreeled which likewise proves entertaining. The manufacture of silk, from the time the silkworm finishes spinning its cocoon up to the stage where the thread is drawn from the machine, occupies the opening frames of film; the silk mills shown are those in Russian Turkestan. Following are Pathecolor shots of Blue Ridge Mountaineers, "true children of the soil," and, winding up the footage, is the fourth installment of the picture record of the Putnam Expedition to Greenland which provides views of a country and people seldom filmed.

Worth showing in any theatre.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Buster's Frame Up"
(Universal-Stern Bros.—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

HERE is a good Buster, Mary Jane and Tige picture that ought to please. Buster and May Jane smugle Tige into a motion picture theatre where a "Western," with a dog hero, is being shown. Tige is very much affected by both the love scenes and those of the other dog and succeeds in stopping the show. All are thrown out. The scene shifts to the wide open spaces where an Indian picture is being shot. Buster and his friends attempt an attack and the Indians playfully enter into the fun. They awake and find that it was all a dream.

"Racing Fever"
(Educational—One Reel)

HORSE RACING is burlesqued in this number of the Life Cartoon series which shows the citizens of animal-land arriving at the track and their novel means of gaining entrance to the paddock. Nibbins and his pal construct a fake horse and, through trickery and chicanery, win the contest but are disqualified when the judges discover the method utilized.

A fair amount of entertainment in store for the spectators.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"The Pipe Rock Blaze"
(Universal Western Comedy—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

TAR-PAPERING the roof of a ranch house is no easy job, even for two such versatile and courteous gentlemen as Pee Wee Holmes and Ben Corbett, and their trials and tribulations are many. Down in the kitchen the ladies are cooking and our two heroes deciding that fire might be dangerous while engaged in roofing, close the top of the chimney. Clouds of smoke pouring out of the house, a fire alarm is turned in and this brings forth the usual antique fire department. Oh, yes, the same old gag of not being able to find the key to the fire house is again used, and while it's all very fair, it's not too good.

"Horses, Horses, Horses"
(Fable-Pathe—One Reel)

THERE'S more story and better continuity in the latest number of the Aesop's Fables series than ordinarily incorporated, and the funny business shows greater ingenuity. This week Milton Mouse stages a round-up of his horses and, having safely coralled them in the barn, calls on the rancher's daughter. While he is spooning Terrible Thomas steals up and swipes the horses, barn and everything; but a swift vengeance overtakes him in the form of the irate Milton, who, having retrieved his stock, resumes his romance.

They should get a giggle out of the various gags.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Reflections"
(Fox Variety—One Reel)

A FINE, little subject for this time of the year when thoughts are taking a turn toward vacation time, is this 775 feet of river scenery which will take you from the Spanish moss-covered banks of the Suwanee to the streams of the North country, where snow-capped mountain peaks and evergreens are much in evidence. Poetic subtitles are blended throughout—E. G. JOHNSTON.

"Ethelbert Nevin"
(Music Master—Fitzpatrick Pictures—One Reel)

THE name of one of America's foremost composers forms the title of this Music Master film. As was the case in other of the series a brief cinematic sketch of the career of the musician is not presented, rather more attention is devoted to the presentation of scenes choreographic and otherwise thus enabling the theatre's orchestra to extract the last amount of melody from several of Nevin's compositions which are incorporated in the film. Such world famous tunes as "Narcissus," "Oh, That We Two Were Maying," "Mighty Lak' a Rose" and "The Rosary" are visualized by aesthetic dancing, a man and a maid strolling through the woods, a coal black mammy putting a little one to sleep, etc. It is a presentation of the better grade and it will find a response from those whose tastes are finer and more appreciative than those of the average. It has a worthwhile subject and the musicians, on whom the picture naturally leans for support, undoubtedly will find ample opportunities for putting it over from the musical score wherein are contained some of the finest inspirational outbursts of a sensitive and poetic soul.—RAYMOND GANLY.

Pirates of the Sky

Serial Stuff in It Should Entertain

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

CHARLES HUTCHINSON and Wanda Hawley co-star in this effort effusive with "Lone Wolf" and serial business. Probably some of its thunder has been heard before or its thrill inflated highlights are a trifle recognizable, but even so it boasts several moments when the tension becomes high strung and the escape of the heroine and hero from the dangers that threaten overwhelm them are watched with an eye of interest. Hutchinson has done many things like this before even in his old Pathe serial days and his feats in "Pirates of the Sky" are just a workout for him. He puts a lot of athletic wallop into his role which calls for several tight situations. At one time he is alone in a burning shack tied hand and foot. Again, he transfers from a speeding motorcycle to a rope ladder dangling from an airplane and from the plane drops off into a haystack. There are audiences for this type of picture, though they are not too blase.

Enlisting his aid in unraveling the mysterious disappearances of a mailplane, the Secret Service send Hutchison to unearth the crookedness beneath the complication. As a coincidence Wanda Hawley, a reporter for a newspaper, receives an assignment to cover the story. The two had once been engaged but had parted; after they have shared danger together and through their concerted efforts rounded up the gang of thieves three things occur: they are reunited, Hutchinson wins his case and the girl gets her story for the paper.

The Cast: Charles Hutchinson, Wanda Hawley, Crauford Kent, Jimmie Aubrey, Ben Walker. Directed by Charles Andrews.

THEME: Estranged couple work on the same crime, the disappearance of mailplane, and both are successful in getting to the truth of the matter and coming to an understanding.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The punch sequences and Hutchinson's stunts.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: The usual campaign for thrillers, dynamic posters, action, etc.

DRAWING POWER: For the neighborhood and second run houses.

Presented by Productions, Inc. Distributed by Pathe. Length, 4,828 feet. Released May 22, 1927.

The Cat and the Canary

Leni Scores with Superlative Mystery Drama

(Reviewed by Oscar Cooper)

HERE'S the long-awaited screen version of the thrilling mystery melodrama which was a big hit on the stage. Reports about the unusual technique employed by Director Paul Leni have been drifting in from the Coast for months; also there has been much talk to the effect that this picture would set a new pace for subjects of the kind.

In every respect both Leni and the picture live up to the advance notices. With surprising ease and little preliminary footage, the all-important spooky atmosphere is created by swinging the camera this way and that; and making furniture, hallways, sliding doors and the like, actual characters in the plot.

The action is rapid, and is stepped up nicely to the thrill and horror moments, and then stepped down with humorous touches, in just the right proportion. A superb piece of direction.

This is far and away the best melodrama of its kind. It will prove a genuine thriller to picture audiences.

The Cast: Laura La Plante, Creighton Hale, Forrest Stanley, Tullev Marshall, Gertrude Astor, Flora Finch, Arthur Edmund Carewe, Martha Mattox, George Siegmann, Lucien Littlefield, Joe Murphy, Billy Engle. Director, Paul Leni. Cameraman, Gilbert Warrenton.

THEME: Mystery melodrama of haunted house with young heiress saved from maniac relative after a murder has been committed and a series of baffling events spread before the spectator.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The remarkably fine atmosphere, which is the picture's outstanding achievement. Fine acting by a cast of well-known names headed by Laura La Plante. Humorous moments alternating with thrills.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up as thriller based on stage hit. Will score best when presented mostly with mechanical sound effects rather than customary musical accompaniment.

DRAWING POWER: First-class. For any type of theatre, anywhere.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Length, 7713 Feet. Released, Sept., 1927.

The Missing Link

Fairly Funny But Lacks New Gags

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

SUCH pictures as "The Better 'Ole" don't come along every day. Which accounts for Syd Chaplin trying to accomplish the impossible with something that can't be mentioned in the same breath. It looks as if it was "shot" as it went along as there is scarcely any semblance of plot. And the director has employed several gags which have decorated comedies before.

The star is way over in Africa with a fear complex toward the animals but he becomes chummy with them eventually. And he has plenty of opportunity to create laughter with his high jinks. But where the comedy in "The Better 'Ole" seemed to spring from situations, in this picture it springs from gags—many of which have lost their timeliness. The picture boasts a chimpanzee—a well-trained one—and also a fake gorilla. Then there is a lion who plays hide and seek with Syd—to say nothing of other jungle kings who scamper about, in and out of long shots and close-ups.

The older Chaplin is a good comedian, but he can't rise above his material. In this picture the stuff is not there except on fleeting occasions. When it does usher in a laugh it is one which comes straight from the diaphragm.

The Cast: Syd Chaplin, Ruth Hiatt, Tom McGuire, Crauford Kent, Sam Baker. Director, Charles Reisner.

THEME: Comedy of high jinks in Africa with hero registering fright over the animals. Becomes very chummy with them.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The gags and incident. The comedy with the ape. The lion sequence. The atmosphere. The captions.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up Syd Chaplin as fine comedian. Tell that he has a rollicking comedy here. Tease the title.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for average houses. Star should draw them.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers
Length, six reels. Released, May, 1927.

His First Flame

Langdon's Done Better Since Making This One

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS picture, marking Harry Langdon's first and last five-reeler for Mack Sennett, comes as a belated release. Since the comedian has blossomed out into Higher Celluloid his pictures are carrying a spontaneity which this earlier effort lacks. The piece has an uneven continuity—there being none of the rhythm and sparkle which accompanied "The Strong Man" and "Long Pants."

The chief weakness is its length. It would click far better if condensed into two reels. Still it has its moments—moments in which the round-eyed Langdon indulges in plenty of highfalutin action. He is inimitable, as always, in his role of a youth who is frustrated in his effort to win the girl. She prefers his fire-chief uncle. A good deal of the comedy centers around Harry answering a fake fire alarm—and running away with the girl in his arms. He also provokes merriment when dolled up in antiquated feminine clothes and gewgaws.

"His First Flame" is gagged all the way. Langdon does his baby act which was used in "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," and casts his innocent stare into the camera time and again. Yes, the man knows his stuff. The picture is good here and there.

The Cast: Harry Langdon, Ruth Hiatt, Natalie Kingston, Vernon Dent, Bud Jamison, Dot Farley. Director, Harry Edwards.

THEME: Comedy of boobish youth whose sweetheart is stolen away from him by his fire chief uncle. But he wins her back.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The titles. The gags. The scene of Langdon running around in feminine attire. The fire alarm sequence, etc.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Be sure to run stills of Langdon in his various disguises. Play up his air of innocence which has made him a star. Bill as sure-fire comedy stuff.

DRAWING POWER: Will please Langdon fans. O. K. for any type of house.

Produced by Mack Sennett. Distributed by Pathe.
Length, six reels. Released, May, 1927.

The Understanding Heart

Old Idea Is Made Colorful

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE primeval forest takes up the background of this picture—which you might guess releases a deal of melodrama in its journey across the screen. The story revolves around a raging fire in the Sequoia forest, and it is this climax which gives the film its punch. Otherwise it is old stuff—which has not been very expertly handled.

The picture is rugged, however, not only in its settings, but also in its characterization. They have gathered a lot of he-men who fit right into the atmosphere. The central figure is a forest ranger and it is his job to win the heroine after overcoming various obstacles—some of which are placed in his path by old Mother Nature or perhaps old Dame Fate. The ranger takes plenty of punishment before he succeeds at his heroic tasks. Also in the picture is an escaped convict who has been wrongly accused and jailed for murder.

It all works out according to the best screen traditions. But before its finish one is in for some picturesque shots of the fire which envelops the characters—and several more which concern the tall sentinels. They grace the scene from all sides. There is an effective rescue via the parachute route before the conclusion is reached. Altogether its appeal rests with the eye—after a couple of thrills are taken into consideration. It is competently acted.

The Cast: Joan Crawford, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Francis X. Bushman, Jr., Carmel Myers, Richard Carle, Harvey Clark, Jerry Miley. Director, Jack Conway.

THEME: Romantic melodrama of forest ranger and a girl who is rescued with others from raging forest fire.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The forest fire. The rescue via parachute. The backgrounds. The heart interest. The color and thrills.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up the title and tell how it figures in story. Feature the forests of the Northwest. Play up the forest fire. Capitalize the thrills, etc.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for any locality. Good for average trade.

Produced by Cosmopolitan. Distributed by Metro-Goldwyn. Length, seven reels. Released, May, 1927.

Rich But Honest

Light But Amusing

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

LIGHT in plot and light in atmosphere, but with a generous helping of just the kind of entertainment that should prove good fare for the Tired Business Man or Woman, is what we think of this picture. It is also an excellent example of how one or two fairly well known players may be combined with several others more or less obscure to produce good results. Albert Ray's direction is commendable and so is the work of the principals, Nancy Nash, Clifford Holland and Charles Morton. It may not be amiss to say a few words in behalf of one of the more obscure members of the cast. We refer to Majorie Beebe, who seems to be a natural born comedienne. Her work is fine. Also that of J. Farrell MacDonald's in the stage rehearsal sequence.

How two girls graduate from a department store to the stage and their adventure en route, is what the story of Arthur Somers Roche deals with. One of them, a Charleston prize cup winner, arrives ahead of the other and on proving a flop, is given the role of Lady Godiva. The other makes good as comedienne. With a better choice of mates in view, they have given their regular boy-friends the icy stare and the Lady Godiva business brings things to a climax. The two erstwhile lovers work in a garage and are called to Lover's Lane to tow the crippled auto driven there by blond Minnie and her new steady, an "angel" of the show business. Vengeance in the shape of a wild ride follows. The "angel" proves he's a regular fellow by whipping the former suitor in a rough and tumble fight. Everything is smoothed out in the end.

The Cast: Nancy Nash, Clifford Holland, Charles Morton, J. Farrell MacDonald, Tyler Brooke, Ted McNamara, Marjorie Beebe, Ernie Shields, Doris Lloyd. Directed by Albert Ray.

THEME: Comedy drama dealing with adventures of two shop girls en route to footlights.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The stage rehearsal, the auto tow ride, work of cast and direction.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up amusing comedy angle, also Charleston. The Lady Godiva stuff also offers some weird possibilities.

DRAWING POWER: First class neighborhood patronage.

Length, 5480 feet. Released May 22, 1927. Produced and distributed by Fox Films.

Lively Moments for Bebe

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

BEBE DANIELS got off on a good tack when she frowned upon those serious stories and decided to cater to satire and burlesque. Take her latest for example It is nothing to make much of a fuss over, but it has its rollicking by-play—all of which is indulged in with a fine zest and spirit by the bubbling Bebe and her assistants.

It may be that the loud pedal becomes overplayed here and there, but no one should carp over this amusing trifle—which has been produced for the one purpose of creating laughter. Bebe Daniels plays a tomboy of the pampas. She masquerades with a tiny moustache and all the native trimmings. And once she starts cutting the didoes there's no stopping her. She must please her grandfather who thought he had a grandson instead of a granddaughter. Of such stuff is "Senorita" built. To look for the plot you'd have to look in vain. But it does establish that as the leader of one warring family the girl must conquer the enemy. She ends up by fighting a duel.

It is all mad merriment—but done in a refreshing manner by the star who is beginning to give Constance Talmadge a run for her money. It should please the majority of theatregoers.

The Cast: Bebe Daniels, William Powell, James Hall, Tom Kennedy, Jerry Mandy. Director, Clarence Badger.

THEME: Light comedy of South American girl who, because she is a tomboy, carries on a masculine masquerade and conquers the rivals of her family.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The fine acting. The incident. The duel. The romantic scenes. The pursuits, etc.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Go after your smart adjectives for this one. Play up its tomfoolery. Treat your copy lightly. Emphasize the breezy vein. Bill as a rollicking adventure.

DRAWING POWER: Should do well wherever shown. Title and star should attract the crowds.

Produced and distributed by Paramount.
Length, six reels. Released, May, 1927.

Convoy

More About The Late War

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY'RE still taking the Hollywood boys into the trenches and over the high seas. It seems that the late unpleasantness in Europe cannot help being glorified in celluloid. The latest entry is "Convoy," which is advertised as the "Big Parade of the Navy." It packs away a deal of stirring adventure—what with its naval atmosphere—and the sea battles, not forgetting the exploitations of the spies.

As for the plot it is not so much. It is nothing more than a skeleton upon which hangs the spectacular trimmings. The submarines, the sub chasers—and the operations of the German Secret Service—these all help in carrying out the realistic touch. The central figure is a girl whose brother and best pal have enlisted in the navy. It is her job to discover the plotting by the enemy spy who is tipping off the German fleet. The story develops some pathos and some misunderstanding. Meanwhile the picture releases some genuinely authentic shots of the combined American and British fleets repelling the attack of the German fleet off Jutland. These new shots (for that's what they are) lend conviction to the story.

"Convoy" doesn't carry the big human note of some of the war films. Yet it is spectacular and appealing.

The Cast: Dorothy Mackaill, Lowell Sherman, William Collier, Jr., Lawrence Gray, Ian Keith, Gail Kane.

THEME: Drama of naval participation in Great War—with American girl frustrating enemy plotting and saving the fleet.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The naval battle. The suspense. The spy sequences. The sincere acting. The destroyer's fight with the submarine. The atmosphere of the high seas.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tie up with Legion, etc. Play up title and make feature of Navy's activities during the war, etc.

DRAWING POWER: Should do good business in every type of house.

Produced by Robert Kane. Distributed by First National Length, eight reels. Released, May, 1927.

J. F. McCurdy, former manager of the Harding theatre, Chicago, arrived in Kansas City this week to succeed Bruce Fowler as manager of Newman theater, first-run downtown Publix house of Kansas City. Mr. Fowler will go to California. William Jacobs, former house manager of the Royal theatre, another Publix house, has been appointed general director of publicity and advertising for the Publix theatres in Kansas City.

Oddly enough, Will Hays' reason for being in Kansas City Monday was not in the interest of the motion picture industry, but in behalf of his church—the Presbyterian church. Mr. Hays is chairman of the Presbyterian service pension fund, which seeks 15 million dollars in providing pensions for ministers. Mr. Hays was on his way to Hollywood, where he will work on the matter, prior to attending the semi-annual convention of the producers June 1 at Hollywood.

Why have a "dark" theater while building a new one on the same site? Construction work on the new Colonial theater, suburban house of Kansas City, will proceed until the four walls and the roof of the new structure have been completed. Then, and not until then, will the present theater be dark—but only for a few weeks. The seating capacity is being increased from 660 to 1220 persons without the addition of a balcony, although provision will be made for an eventual balcony. H. H. Barrett is the manager of the theater.

The Garden theater, Colony, Kan., has been purchased by W. J. Dehler and an Arctic-Nu-Air cooling system installed.

Albany

IT was rather quiet along Albany's Film Row last week owing to a large number of the salesmen and managers being out of town attending conventions.

Universal certainly did itself proud in Albany on Monday of this week in the screening of its product during the entire afternoon at the Hotel Ten Eyck, followed by a banquet in the evening. Many exhibitors were on hand while Julius Singer and Harold Hodes were up from New York to see that everyone was being well looked after.

Albany's Film Row was sorrowed last Saturday in receiving news that Claude Wade, an exhibitor in North Creek, had died on the day previous, following an illness of several weeks. Mr. Wade was a familiar figure along the road and was very well liked by both managers and salesmen.

William Smalley, of Cooperstown, owner of fourteen motion picture theaters in central New York, might be said in one instance to do things by halves. When the call came last week from the Red Cross for funds, Mr. Smalley stepped up and donated fifty per cent of the receipts of each house in his circuit, for one day. And Mr. Smalley's houses always play to good size crowds, which means that the Red Cross received several hundred dollars.

There is talk of a new theater in Corinth. The chamber of commerce of the village has received an inquiry from a New York City theatre manager, whose identity is not being disclosed, but who is seeking a site in the village for a theatre.

William Mansfield, running the Delaware Avenue theatre in Albany, does not have any trouble in keeping the children quiet. He is a former member of Albany's police force and the children remember that fact.

William Benton, of Saratoga Springs, owner of several theatres in Northern New York, is very active these days, in the work of the chamber of commerce in his city. As a result of one of Mr. Benton's ideas a booth will be placed in one of Saratoga's parks for the purpose of disseminating information to the summer visitors.

Murray Ross, P.D.C. salesman, blossomed forth last week with a brand new car.

The Schine Brothers of Gloversville, were in New York City during the week.

In Schoharie this summer, the merchants will show motion pictures one night a week on an outdoor screen for the purpose of attracting visitors from out of town.

"Pop" Linton, of Utica, veteran exhibitor, took a few hours off last week to spend in his garden at his home. Mr. Linton boasts of having the best theatre in Utica, and likewise the best garden.

The foundation on Nate Robbins' new residential theatre, in Utica, has been completed.

The Avon in Boonville will close on May 23 for two weeks for alterations.

J. S. Burnham took over the Hippodrome in Ogdensburg on May 2. He plans to increase the seating capacity. The name of the house will be changed.

South East

THE operating room, office and entrance of the Palace Theatre, Maryville, Tenn., were damaged by fire and water last week, the blaze originating in the operating room. The fire was discovered by Homer Wrinkle who was operating one of the machines. The two machines were damaged beyond repair, together with ten reels.

Mr. Wrinkle received burns on the arms and scorches on the face and a sprained ankle, but remained in charge until the arrival of the fire department.

New York and New Jersey

LAST week's issue of the NEWS carried a paragraph in these columns which stated that the firm of Rosenzweig and Katz, circuit theatre owners operating in Brooklyn, N. Y., had been dissolved and that in the future David Katz would carry on the business affairs of the company.

We find that this report was erroneous, in so far as naming Mr. Katz as successor to the business, is concerned. Mr. Rosenzweig did the buying and it is he that now owns the controlling interest in the ten theatres which go to make up this circuit.

The above named company is also at present putting the finishing touches on the new Embassy Theatre, Liberty avenue, Brooklyn, in order to have that house complete for a Decoration Day opening and have another new theatre under construction at Liberty avenue and 135th street. The latter will be ready in the fall.

The erroneous report referred to above also carried the information that both the Cross Bay and Rugby theatres had been taken over from Edw. Speigel by Mr. Katz. This also seems to have been in error. We are informed that the Cross Bay was the only one of the two to change hands, and to David Rosenzweig instead of Mr. Katz.

The new organization of Long Island theatre owners recently held a meeting at Calderone's Strand Theatre, Hempstead, where the question of the admission of minors to motion picture theatres was thoroughly discussed. Plans for the circulation of a printed form among parents granting permission to place children in the care of a competent matron were gone into and from all reports the future adoption of this means looks very favorable. At the theatre men's next meeting, officers for the ensuing year will be elected.

The last meeting of the season for the Motion Picture Film Salesmen, Inc., will be held at the Hotel Astor, May 22, when a luncheon will wind up affairs until Fall. At that time the meetings will be resumed.

At a recent meeting of the above organization at the Hotel Manger, a resolution was adopted which would bestow honorary membership upon certain former salesmen who have "arrived" in the industry. A certain "metallic substance" is already in the process of being prepared for one celebrity who is at present unnamed.

Mergers of smaller theatre groups with the larger circuits continue to help fill the air around the film curb and other places, most of the transactions serving to expand the already large and powerful Stanley-Fabian Circuit.

Finishing touches, whereby the Rivoli Theatre of East Rutherford and the Regent Theatre of Kearny, both houses belonging to the Harry Hecht Circuit, will be added to Stanley-Fabian, are to be put on about June 1, it is said. Other theatres of the Hecht circuit are reported not involved in the deal.

Stanley-Fabian have also taken over the Wellinbrink circuit of three theatres in Montclair: the Wellmont, Montclair and Bellevue.

It is also rumored that Ragowsky's Strand at Portchester is about to be transferred to Exhibitor Gottesman.

Some Practical Considerations of the High Intensity Arc Part III

IN view of the general activity among manufacturers, it would seem logical to believe that a high intensity arc, constructed on the mirror arc principle, is a thing of the near future.

At least one lamp of this type has already been tried out in theatres, and although it represented but little more than the first crude stages of evolution, it is quite likely that the difficulties which now surround the problem will be cleared up to the point where the device will become a practical reality.

There is some question, however, as to whether such a lamp is at all required. From a purely economical standpoint it is, since it is hoped, by means of it, to obtain, with approximately 50 amperes, screen results which are comparable to those now produced by the present type of lamp operating at 150 amperes.

A reduction to 50 amperes of the current required to operate the high intensity lamp at its fullest advantage would certainly be desirable if for no other reason than that it would place all light projectors now used for motion picture projection within the same current field instead of having this field range from 25 amperes to 150 amperes as is the case at present.

Effect on Film

The item of operating economy is not, however, the only thing to be considered in this connection, for it is possible, and, indeed, even probable, that this economy may be obtained at the expense of the film so that the resultant savings in cost of current would be counteracted by an increased rate of destruction of film.

The same thing was true of the reflector arc using low intensity carbons and there was, for a time, considerable agitation in certain quarters to curb the use of these lamps. Lately, however, little has been said of this.

Just what effect a reflector arc high intensity lamp will have upon film is largely a matter of conjecture and must remain so for some time, even should this principle be found practical, since the results of even the present mirror arc in this respect are not yet clearly understood in spite of the fact that this lamp has now been in use for some four or five years.

Danger of "Over-Shooting"

In the meantime, theatres must continue the use of the present type of lamp, which is satisfactory in all respects but that of current required for operation. There is another angle to this problem of the reflector are high intensity lamp and past experience leaves no doubt but that a recurrence of the over-lighting of screen will take place, following its availability, such as happened when the old reflector arc was brought out.

The conditions in the case of the widespread adoption of the high intensity form, however, will be so much worse since this source then will be made available for even the small theatres, which would have no more use for such an outfit than they would for a triple console organ.

The Logical Field

It was pointed out in another article that some theatres are reaching for still higher screen intensities for the reason that their long projection distances made it difficult to obtain the same level of screen illumination as is enjoyed by many smaller ones.

There is good reason to believe that a reflector arc high intensity lamp will assist these theatres by enabling them to obtain the maximum illumination possible with the high intensity source and here would seem to be the logical field for the new lamp. This field, although now somewhat restricted, is rapidly becoming larger, due to the trend toward de luxe houses in all large cities.

Attention also was called to the fact that the projectionists in some of these large houses were overloading the carbons in a mistaken effort to force them and so obtain more illumination and that the ordinary result of such efforts was a dark screen of frequent intervals.

It is necessary to bear in mind that high intensity electrodes are designed for one specific current and should be operated neither above nor below the rated current capacity. When efforts are made to force them much above the proper current, the arc becomes increasingly unsteady as the current is raised. This unsteadiness is caused, principally, by the rapid boiling of the gas in the crater, which causes it to swirl about.

Since the gas really constitutes the source of light, any marked unsteadiness of the gas will naturally be evident upon the screen.

Magnetic Action in Arc

The most serious effect, however, comes from the magnetic action of the arc and it is the joint action of two magnetic field, present in the arc when it is in operation, that is responsible for the snuffing of the arc.

One of these magnetic field surrounds the carbons when current is flowing through them, in the same manner that a magnetic field is established around a wire carrying current.

The second field is the result of the arc stream and the combined action of the two fields is to tend to force the arc stream upward so as to break it. This action is the same as that in a magnetic arc snuffer as used on large circuit breakers to prevent the establishment of a continuous arc.

Now the intensity of this upward thrust will depend upon the strength of the magnetic field and the amount of current flowing through the arc. The intensity of the field is also proportional to the current so that the intensity of the force which tends to break the arc will increase as the square of the current. Thus, if the current is doubled the arc-breaking force will be increased four times.

A relatively small increase in current, therefore, will cause a large force to be exerted on the arc stream. In the case of a 150 ampere arc, using a 16 mm. electrode, an increase of 20 amperes (to 170 amperes) is sufficient to snuff out the arc as was experienced in one large Broadway house.

Incidentally we have since learned that the manufacturer of the lamps used in this theatre was blamed for this failure of the arcs, as it was believed by parties who, presumably, should have known better, that the fault lay in the lamps rather than with the projectionist.

The principal thing to remember in the case of all high intensity lamps is that the electrodes are constructed for one, and only one, specific current and if the particular electrode is operated below its rated current the arc will decrease in steadiness and the screen illumination will drop. The loss of light will increase rapidly as the current is lowered.

If, on the other hand, the electrode is operated above its rated current, the arc will become unsteady, no increase in screen illumination will be obtained and if the current is raised too much the arc will be frequently wiped out.

National Theatre Supply Reduces Prices

That the National Theatre Supply Company is living up to its avowed policy of making every possible reduction of prices on theatre equipment and supplies is evidenced in a statement issued last week by H. A. R. Dutton, president of the organization. In pointing to a number of reductions recently made in general supplies, Mr. Dutton attributes this move to economically correct principles enabling attractive prices through quantity buying power. It is further said that the trend of prices of the smaller items of equipment and supplies is also downward.

Festival Week Attends Opening of Illinois Theatre

MAKING its bow as one of the largest, most modern and most beautiful theatres in the middle west, the New Orpheum theatre, Springfield, Ill., magnificent two million dollar playhouse, opened April 30.

State officials, city and county officials of the Great States Theatres, Inc., and the Orpheum circuit took part in the celebration. A flag raising ceremony was also held in which National Guard units, the American Legion, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and Girl Reserves participated.

Among the prominent theatrical people who arrived in Springfield for the opening were J. J. Rubens, general manager of Great States Theatres, Inc., which built the theatre, and M. J. Leonard of this company who with the committee of Springfield business men conceived the theatre project originally and promoted it to a successful culmination.

The Orpheum circuit was represented by Hugh Flannery, divisional manager; Asher Levy and Mort Singer, general managers; B. B. Kahane, of the legal department; Joseph Finn, vice president of the circuit; George Brown and J. R. Reeves of the construction department of the circuit; LeRoy Brown, personnel department; Samuel Kahl, booking department; and Samuel Thall, transportation department.

These officials joined Manager Byron F. "Dinty" Moore of the New Orpheum theatre in receiving Springfield at the opening performance of the theatre.

The New Orpheum theatre has been built at a cost of two million dollars. It gives to Springfield not only a large and beautiful theatre, with a magnificent auditorium and thoroughly modern stage of fine size, but a building with eighteen stores and fifteen suites of offices, a ball room, cafe, bowling alley and billiard and pool room.

It fills a long felt want in Springfield for a new and larger theatre, and is the successful fruition of the efforts of a group of business men in the vicinity where the theatre has been built who first worked out the plan, started its promotion and have worked untiringly to unite the necessary forces and bring it to completion.

If Your Theatre is Modern Tell 'em, Says Typhoon

"Not only must you have an up-to-date equipped theatre," says J. F. Dailey, vice-president of the Typhoon Fan Company, "but you must let the public know about it," and as an aid to the pursuance of this policy the Typhoon organization has inaugurated a service which consists of supplying the exhibitor with banners, one sheets, newspaper cuts, publicity stories, slides and other materials.

Contracts recently received for Typhoon installations include the Amityville Theatre, Amityville, L. I.; the Acme Theatre, New York City; and the Folly and Empire Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Marine Barracks Open for Bids on Chairs

Studio Briefs

The title role in "The Clown," a drama of circus life which is scheduled for early production by Columbia, will be played by William V. Mong. The picture will mark Mr. Mong's second appearance for Columbia this season as he also has one of the principal parts in "The Price of Honor," a March release from Columbia.

Garrett Fort will write the screen version of "The Crystal Cup," Gertrude Atherton's novel, which is to be produced by First National under the supervision of Ray Rockett. The director or producer is now making "Lonesome Ladies" and has recently completed "Framed," a new vehicle for Milton Sills.

Charles F. Reisner, director of Syd Chaplin's recent films, has formally entered into a contract with Joseph M. Schenck to direct Buster Keaton's third feature comedy for United Artists, the story and title for which have not been selected. Keaton is now comleting "College," his second picture for United Artists.

Charles Edward Bull will play the role of Abraham Lincoln in the forthcoming Delores Costello vehicle, "The Heart of Maryland," which the Warner Brothers will produce. Lloyd Bacon is the director.

Production on "Shanghai," a picture of the sea and ships, was started this week under the direction of Ralph Ince at the F. B. O. studio in Hollywood. The director and his staff spent several weeks of preparation on the production in which Ince will star as well as direct. The cast chosen to date include Patsy Ruth Miller, Walter Robbins, Tom Santschi, H. L. Jacobson and others.

Ralph Graves, whose initial effort in the directorial field was "Rich Men's Sons" for Columbia, has been assigned by that company the direction on "The Kid Sister," which Harry Cohn, the Columbia vice-president in charge of production, plans to place into work at the company's studio on the West Coast; Malcolm McGregor will have the male lead.

Harry Langdon gave the signal this week which started the cameras grinding on the first scenes of his new story for First National. The plot is laid in the slums of a large American city, and is said to be in many ways different from any of Langdon's previous films. So far no title has been determined upon for the picture, which, it is estimated, will take more than two months to make.

Orville Caldwell will enact the title role in "The Harvester," one of the late Gene Stratton Porter's novels which her son-in-law, J. Leo Meehan, will place in production shortly at the F. B. O. studio. Mr. Caldwell also interprets a role in "Judgment of the Hills," upon which Mr. Meehan is now working; when the director has finished his present assignment he will complete the casting for "The Harvester."

Three more Warner productions were completed this week at the Warner Bros. studio on the West Coast. The first to be finished was "Simple Sis," Louise Fazenda's comedy, which Herman Raymaker directed; the second was "Dearie," the featured player, Irene Rich, worked under the direction of Archie Mayo. The last of the trio was "What Happened to Father," in which is presented Warner Oland in a unique character part.

David Butler has signed a contract with Metropolitan to play opposite Marie Prevost in her next starring vehicle. The production, yet without an official title, will also have Harrison Ford in the male lead and E. Mason Hopper directing.

Hal Roach, comedy producer for Pathe, is reinforcing his comedy organization, his latest contractual affiliation being with Henry Lehrman, comedy constructor, who has been placed in charge of the Roach story department, and Louise Gasnier, who will direct a series of two-reel Western comedies.

Olga Printzlau, scenarist, has signed a contract with the De Mille organization, by the terms of which she will be associated with that studio for a lengthly period of years. Her latest work for the screen, "Help Yourself to Hay," is scheduled for early filming by First National.

Reed Heustis, journalist, has joined the Hal Roach story department as has Lige Conley, who will collaborate upon the construction of comedy stories.

The "heavy" role in "His Dog," in which Joseph Schildkraut and Julia Faye are working for De Mille, will be portrayed by Clarence Burton.

The dancing girl in "The Chinese Parrott," now being filmed by Director Paul Leni for Universal, will be interpreted by Anna May Wong. The cast has also been augmented by the addition of Slim Summerville and Dan Mason.

Stuart Paton, directing short subjects for Universal, has been signed to direct a feature length production for that organization. eH is now completing the fourth of a series featuring the dog, Dynamite, with Edmund Cobb in the leading role. The picture is of five reels, and is called "The Hound of Silver Creek."

Johnny Downs, one of Pathe's "Our Gang," who has been playing in "The Trail of '98," was welcomed back to the Pathe lot by his fellow "rascals." In a current Hal Roach comedy featuring the "Gang," he plays the magician and leader of a kid's circus. Anthony Mack and Charles Oelze are directing.

Polly Moran is another screen actress to sign a long-term Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract. She will join "The Thirteenth Hour" company shortly and has also worked in two current M.-G.-M. productions, "The Trail of '98," and "The Callans and the Murphys."

William Cohill, for the past five months casting director for Universal, has resigned from that post in order to enjoy an extended vacation before taking up independent duties, the details of which have not been made public. His successor at Universal City will be Victor Nordlinger.

Gwen Lee, of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company of players, will play one of the chief roles in "Liberty Bonds," which Monta Bella will direct.

Photography has been completed on "Naughty But Nice," a First National Picture which stars Colleen Moore. Carey Wilson wrote the scenario. Millard Webb directed.

Louise Lorraine has been given the feminine lead in "The Frontiersman," Tim McCoy's next starring vehicle which is now in production at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio. Reginald Barker is the director.

Monty Banks has assembled a strong supporting cast for his new Pathe feature comedy, "A Perfect Gentleman," which follows his current release, "Horse Shoes" on the Pathe program. Ruth Dwyer has the leading feminine part and others in the cast will include Hazel Howell, Ernest Wood, Arthur Thalusso, Edgar Dearing, Agostino Borgato, Syd Crossley, Harry Darrows, Nicholas Caruso.

Drew Demarest, former stage actor, has joined the cast of "The Callahans and the Murphys," the Kathleen Norris novel which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is filming. Frank Currier, Pollya Moran and Eddie Gribbon are in the cast which is headed by Sally O'Neil and Lawrence Gray.

Patsy Ruth Miller has been engaged to appear in "Lorraine of the Lions," a Norman Kerry vehicle which Universal will make. The actress has also been engaged to act with Glenn Tryen in "Patents Pending," which William Craft will direct.

Frank Currier will remain under contract to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company, according to an announcement from Irving G. Thalberg. In point of service Currier is the oldest stock player at the M-G-M studio. He was the first man signed by Metro at the time of its organization, and was retained for a time of the tri-interest merger.

Felix Adler has returned to work for Mack Sennett after an absence of a year and a half. Prior to 1925 Mr. Adler was associated with Sennett for five years as title writer and gagman. He has been signed by Sennett to write and direct for the Pathe series of domestic comedies called "The Jimmy Smith" in which are featured Mary Ann Jacison, Raymond McKee and Ruth Hiatt.

Humberstone Wright, English actor, will have one of the important parts in "The Garden of Allah," which is being produced by Rex Ingram with Alice Terry and Ivan Petrovich in the leading roles. Some of his latest work on the stage was in Barrymore's production in London of "Hamlet."

"Camille"—First National, Globe Theatre, New York City

World: "Norma Talmadge, loveliest of illustrious actresses who have worn rags and royal raiment of la dame aux camelias.... After so altogether exquisite a figure as this young woman one finds it difficult at this date to imagine even a Bernhardt, a Duse, a Rejane, a Modjeska, a Barrymore, a Sorel or a Nethersole who would have lent to it so great a charm, so distinctively Camilleish a grace and beauty. Miss Talmadge is a positive delight."

Mirror: "Norma Talmadge, one of outstanding figures in cinema, achieves personal triumph. Is superb in latter part of film. A fascinating picture. A sympathetic, appealing story. Niblo has dressed production beautifully. Sets lavish, yet quiet. Gowns exquisite."

News: "As beautifully photographed a heart-rending romance as has brought forth a theatreful of tears this cinema season. Credit Norma with another screen portrayal which more than does justice to her art. All-absorbing, poignant, exquisitely sad, with performances sincerely convincing. Niblo has done intensely sympathetic treatment. Talmadge screen Camille is most touching yet offered."

American: "Norma Talmadge won new acclaim as Camille. Invests romantic character with tenderness that appeals to sympathy of audience. Nothing in way of intimate luxury is left unscreened. Photography is beautiful and Norma's wardrobe exquisite. 'Camille' will unquestionably find its way on your list of 'pictures to see.'"

Times: "Miss Talmadge lovely and sincere in her performance. Every effort has been made to reveal opulency of screen . . . lavish scenes, gorgeous photography."

Herald Tribune: "Miss Talmadge is lovely Marguerite Gauthier and Gilbert Roland is romantic and attractive Armand."

Telegraph: "Luminous beauty of Norma Talmadge glorifies 'Camille.' No greater romance was ever penned; throbs with poignant pathos. . . . Miss Talmadge . . .one of most intelligent and talented players of cinema."

Sun: "Received last night with evident pleasure by large audience. Great movie audience will shower box-office presents on Lady of Camelias for many months. . . . Photography is soft and excellent."

Evening World: "'Camille' a good picture, excellently acted and superbly photographed. Miss Talmadge and Gilbert Roland take every advantage of their opportunities."

Journal: "Norma exquisitely lovely and does superb work. Tragic story is faithfully followed. Highly romantic photoplay and striking background for Norma's beauty."

Evening Graphic: "Exquisite 'Camille' came to the Globe Theatre last night, a 'Camille' of exquisite loveliness, beautiful artistry, and she thrilled first-night audience as Norma Talmadge has not done in years. Marks a new screen standard for those who make celluloid records of romantic love. No one should miss it."

Telegram: "Talmadge version of Dumas' old play is most intelligently filmed love story to reach Broadway in many years. You may safely walk mile to see this Camille. Splendid acting by Miss Talmadge."

Brooklyn Eagle: "Ranks easily among most beautiful pictures ever made. Miss Talmadge's portrayal magnificent."

"Lovers?" — Metro - Goldwyn-Mayer, State Theatre, Los Angeles

Record: "Absorbing film. One of wide-spread interest for many reasons. Novarro gaining in popularity in every picture. Has personality, and real ability. Vivid story. Holds interest with many high spots of dramatic tension. Action moved forward rapidly. Sufficient comedy relief to offset more somber scenes. The photography is one that makes an impression."

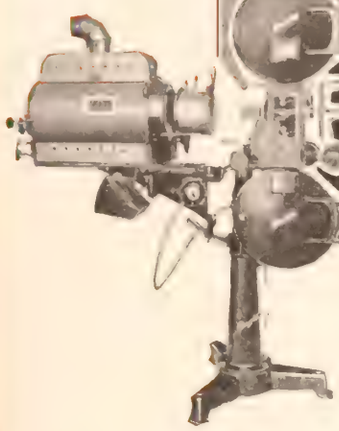
Herald: "Strong moving study in pure love and jealous scandal. Dramatic values of story have been well exploited. Suspense unusually well sustained. Duel ranks among best I have seen. Titles clever and sophisticated. Photography has the mark of distinction; direction has polish and effectiveness."

Express: "Picture entertaining. Novarro's clear-cut characterization one that only he could give so adequately. Director Stahl did his work well. Production that for smoothness and directness is not often equalled in program pictures."

Examiner: "Motion picture of exceeding interest. Story plausible and typical of human nature. Good to see Ramon Novarro again. He presents finely etched characterication. All are excellent in their various roles. I can conscientiously recommend 'Lovers?'. A picture whose entertainment value is above par."

Times: "Cleverly photographed. Scene wherein Jose takes up sword quite as effective as duel scene in 'Flesh and the Devil.' Atmosphere well sustained. Ramon Novarro accounts for some splendid scenes."

"Rookies" — Metro - Goldwyn-Mayer, Cameo Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio



News: "No heralding and a veritable knockout. There's as many good, honest, soul-stirring laughs in 'Rookies' as were ever crowded into film comedy, more if you limit the comparison to comedies built about the war, soldiery or navy. This comedy will have Cleveland in a panic before the week is out."

Plain Dealer: "Karl Dane and George K. Arthur, newest and one of best comedy teams in screenland, furnish laughs. Pair furnish more and better thrills than I've ever seen in comedy. Great sport. Highly recommended."

Sunday News: "If you have any dolefulness you wish to get rid of don't let anything stop you from buying your way into Cameo. This one is funny. Our personal word for that."

It's time for improvements

To keep pace with the continually advancing standards of entertainment---to anticipate and provide means of meeting keener business competition---these are vital requirements which no exhibitor can afford not to observe. Knowing to what quarter public attention is directed; playing up to popular appeal; replacing and improving with timeliness and logic---is not only good showmanship but good business as well.

No phase of the motion picture theatre business is occupying greater interest today than projection. Nothing is more deserving of attention. That is why an investment in better projection is a most logical and profitable one to make. Why not decide now to make first class projection your objective? You will be rewarded with greater earnings and greater profits. Whether your present projectors need to be partly or entirely replaced, the requirements are worth their cost.

In America's finest theatres

The supremacy of Wurlitzer music is best manifested in the impressive list of theatres equipped with Wurlitzer Organs. Many of America's finest theatres are included in this list. The box office value of the Wurlitzer has proved to be of such great consequence that owners have given them the most enthusiastic endorsement ever accorded any musical instrument. Theatre owners seeking a musical attraction can do no better than following the example of the leaders in their field by installing a Wurlitzer. They are built in various sizes and styles to comply with the requirements of all types of theatres.

The STAIRWAY to the STARS

In the year of The Big Parade and Ben Hur

NOT alone the power of its pictures, but the drawing-strength of its stars makes Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer the first choice of motion picture theatres in 1927-1928.

In these days when you are planning a program for a season in advance, the guiding factor in your transactions must be your faith in the organization with which you are dealing.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has earned the implicit confidence of exhibitors. Its record of consistency and quality in production is unrivalled. The producing brains back of the organization are admittedly far and away the superior of all contenders for show-making honors.

But, if anyone tells you that you can live on mere promises, send him out of your office—and don't do it with a smile.

Take the M-G-M organization on its record—and take its underwritten schedule of star pictures as a guarantee of a week-in, week-out revenue at the box-office.

In the following pages you will read of the product that awaits you for dates commencing with September first.

There you will find no loose ends, no pictures dangling in mid-air without the anchorage of a drawing card—no, indeed.

There you will find volume — and value—virility and vitality.

One week you may date a Marion Davies Picture, the next a Lon Chaney, the next a John Gilbert, the next a Ramon Novarro, a Lillian Gish, a Norma Shearer, a William Haines, a Jackie Coogan, a Dane and Arthur, a Greta Garbo, a Cody-Pringle, a Tim McCoy and so on.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is the Highway to Happiness, a Pathway to Paradise—

A Stairway to the Stars!

And as a crowning glory to the greatest season any motion picture company has ever known, we announce that both "The Big Parade" and "Ben-Hur" are ready for you.

M-G-M

AT the outset of 1927-1928, I wish to assure my friends, the exhibitors, that prospects were never brighter for our business than right now, and it is my earnest desire that they share in the certainty of success that is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's.

MARCUS LOEW

Lillian Gish

The Screen's Foremost Artist

TO question the dramatic talent of Lillian Gish would be akin to questioning the beauty of Caruso's voice.

Among performers on the screen she is truly set apart — always the artist — a star that reaches greatness with a gesture, tragedy with an enigmatic smile.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer features her because she is great. One would be hard put to it to name a player who has glorified more outstanding successes or one who more rightly deserves the title of "first lady of the screen."

From "The Birth of a Nation" to "Annie Laurie," Miss Gish has ever graced the boards as an attraction of high quality and an entertainment name worthy of double or treble the customary admission charge.

The first M-G-M production starring Miss Gish in 1927-1928 is "Annie Laurie," a gay, colorful photoplay that ranges all moods and emotions. It is—confidentially—a rather different type of Lillian Gish vehicle. For one thing it is pitched in a key of merriment, and while it ranges to a strong, rugged climax, it might well be classified as a story that touches the sunny, rather than the seamy, side of life.

FOR Release STARTING September

Marion Davies

QUALITY STREET—A delightful comedy of love and war such as could only be written by the great James M. Barrie. Gay, colorful, and stirring to a martial glamor, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer presents this first of the 1927-1928 Marion Davies Pictures as an intimate, but ambitiously produced picture that takes one back to the happy history of "Little Old New York." Directed by Sydney Franklin, continuity by Albert Lewin and Hans Kraly, with a supporting cast that includes Conrad Nagel, Helen Jerome Eddy, Flora Finch, Kate Price, Marcelle Corday and others.

DUMB DORA—An original and highly amusing story based on Chic Young's nationally syndicated comic strip and written for the screen by the famous scenarist Agnes Christine Johnston especially for Marion Davies. Naturally the story has been fitted out to take advantage of the wide range of comedy ability which Miss Davies has portrayed so successfully to audiences. They love to laugh at Miss Davies' merry capers, and in "Dumb Dora" the story of a girl who exasperates everybody to the point of distraction, she has the grandest opportunity of her career for a box-office natural.

A third production will be announced shortly, making in all
3 MARION DAVIES PICTURES

Lon Chaney

THE HYPNOTIST—In "The Unholy Three" Lon Chaney's performance as a ventriloquist will be remembered for many years and once again a fragment from the side show of life is thrown on the shadow stage with an insidious but insistent melodrama in which magic plays an important part. Chaney, the man of a thousand faces and a thousand arts once again will delight audiences with a role that has within its range all the curious and the novel, the fiendishness and the sacrificial redemption that has gone with his greatest efforts. M-G-M is banking heavily on the power in "The Hypnotist." Just as in all Chaney stories the surprise elements make the plot, and it is difficult to divulge them in a cold brief paragraph.

HATE—Based on "The Four Stragglers" by Frank Packard, the author of "The Miracle Man," which gave Lon Chaney his first big part, "Hate" will be one of the sensational pictures of 1927-1928. Lon Chaney has a tremendous part in this one. As the feared and brutal leader of a band of Apaches he roams and dominates the underworld of Paris, and woe to the foe who sees a flash of his quickly-drawn knife. The fortunes of war throw Chaney and his enemies into an intimate entente, and finding themselves comrades in the same regiment, there is a war within a war that leads to drama of a most intense order. Count on this one.

SEVEN SEAS—The production sagacity of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer can not be better illustrated than in this choice of vehicle for the master, Lon Chaney. Gaston Leroux' world-famous Cheri—Bibi stories take the great actor far from any locale or situation in which he has ever appeared and plunges him into a swirling action that seethes aboard a convict ship on its way to Devil's Island. A revolt among the prisoners throws into his hands the man who was responsible for his plight, and Chaney's sardonic revenge is tempered only by the softening influence of the girl who is the one redeeming breath of beauty in his life. Power and tenderness mingle together in a great narrative whose tense drama is heightened by the surging background of the Seven Seas.

3 LON CHANEY PICTURES

John Gilbert

I'M THE MAN—Here is a great vehicle for a great star—up to the last minute of to-day—a snappy, devil-may-care screen narrative. Written and directed by the inimitable Monta Bell, this story of a man's first and greatest love is laid against a background of Washington newspaper and social life. The culminating sequences portray the gala presidential inaugural ball. M-G-M has exercised particular care in the vehicles selected for Gilbert and this one is a worthy successor to his many past and current triumphs.

NONE BUT THE BRAVE—Here is a great war story, and how the fans will love to see their hero go through hell again, just as he did in the immortal Big Parade. This time Gilbert plays the part of a dashing gorgeously uniformed officer of the Austrian guards and his performance is a bit of a throw-back to his gallant role in "The Merry Widow." He is betrayed through the machinations of a charming woman spy of the Russian Czar and as a consequence is caused to suffer humiliation and degradation. Through an ironic twist of Fate he falls in love with the very woman who betrayed him, a situation which packs a wallop to the final fade-out.

Lon Chaney

The Man of 1000 faces

IT was M-G-M who developed Lon Chaney into the great Lon Chaney. "He Who Gets Slapped," "The Unholy Three," "The Blackbird," "The Road to Mandalay," "Tell It to the Marines," "Mr. Wu," "The Unknown." Everyone outstanding, all money pictures.

In 1927-1928 Lon Chaney will first appear in "The Hypnotist," a role which tells a story in itself.

Marion Davies

Comedienne Extraordinary

THE number of genuinely fine comediennes on the screen today may be counted on the fingers of one hand. Foremost among these ranks Marion Davies.

There is no star in the industry who receives the publicity promotion, no star that gets the production effort back of her name so consistently.

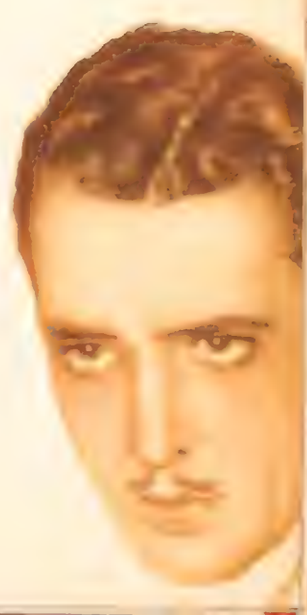
Perhaps the most outstanding picture that Miss Davies has appeared in to date is "Little Old New York." We predict a similar success for "Quality Street" which will be the first of her 1927-1928 screen plays.

"Quality Street" is one of the most valuable story properties ever entrusted to a producer. From the pen of the world's leading creator of deft sympathetic comedy, James M. Barrie, this play will, without doubt, prove that its present popularity as a narrative must be deserved.

Following "Quality Street" Miss Davies will star in "Dumb Dora" a travesty based on the comic strip that has achieved nation-wide fame and successful syndication.

JOHN GILBERT

The Man of the Hour



THIS season you will play Gilbert in "The Big Parade." And after that you will play him in "I'm The Man" and "None But The Brave."

1927-1928 is truly a John Gilbert year. He will emerge a star as great as the screen has ever known, a name that will be spoken from Maine to Texas, from New York to the Barbary Coast. Beloved by women and men alike, a star of stars. Made so, by M-G-M, star-maker.

One cannot question the drawing power of Mr. Gilbert's pictures. He is an asset that is worth-while at any price in any showplace.

His following is vast, varied, and the response to his name in lights is immediate.

The industry is fortunate to have such an attraction. M-G-M is proud to present him.

Norma Shearer

THE BRIDAL NIGHT—Probably one of the most ingenious original stories ever handled by the M-G-M Studio has been especially written for a Norma Shearer starring triumph. How it fits the sparkling, genial personality of this beauty! Miss Shearer, who can play the innocent more convincingly than anybody on the screen, takes the role of a beautiful but unsophisticated young society girl whose adventures in the marriage market furnish a series of screamingly funny situations. The story not only gives this star opportunity for the mischievous activities which her admirers eagerly expect of her, but in addition allows Miss Shearer plenty of chance to display beautiful clothes, jewels and other accoutrements of society. There are few actresses on the screen who can wear clothes like Norma Shearer. Wait 'till you see the creations that she'll bring to your audience! M-G-M has been particularly fortunate in its choice of vehicles for Miss Shearer. . . . "Upstage," "Waning Sex," "His Secretary," are pictures that audiences think back on with pleasure. "The Bridal Night" will add additional lustre to her box-office fame!

There will be two additional Norma Shearer productions making in all
3 NORMA SHEARER PICTURES

IN OLD KENTUCKY—The announcement that M-G-M is going to make a tremendous stellar picturization of "In Old Kentucky" has brought hundreds of congratulatory messages from theatre owners. Anybody who knows show business is aware that from the point of view of the gate there's no bigger, melodramatic bet in the world than Charles Dazey's famous legitimate show. The M-G-M studio is on its toes about this one. John M. Stahl, noted action director, has been engaged to put it on the screen and a cast of sparkling electric-light names will immortalize this famous drama for the motion picture. What material to work with! The intrigue for the valuable coal lands, the intercepted bomb, the blown-up bridge spanned by the hero swinging on a rope, the girl who rides Queen Bess to victory and endless other thrills! Here is the action picture of all time. M-G-M will spend real money on it to give you an attraction to set the folks cheering!

Cosmopolitan Productions

BECKY—The Hearst nationwide newspaper chain is looking forward eagerly to the appearance in its pages of the serialization of "Becky." The reason is that "Becky" has everything that a modern audience wants in the way of excitement, suspense, laughs and love interest. Becky is a nervy little lass who works her way from department store drudgery to the stage, and on the way meets various personalities from crooks to society gentlemen. Her adventures are breath-taking, but through them all she maintains a happy-go-lucky, brave little attitude toward life and its uncertainties. In the end she gets the man she sets out to get and finds it was worth all the trouble. "Becky" is audience joy all the way through. Directed by John F. McCarthy, it has in the cast Sally O'Neil, Owen Moore, Gertrude Short, Claude King and others. Rayner Seelig wrote the story.

BRINGING UP FATHER—At last it will be on the screen! This famous comic strip narrative which is so familiar to newspaper readers everywhere will be brought to life by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as a special Cosmopolitan production. How the public loves all the laugh-provoking situations of the family that tries to crash society's gilded salons only to find that the difficulty lies in bringing up father! His mistakes of etiquette are the mistakes that are so human and understandable and they carry a long, merry laugh for a public which finds great humor in society climbers who don't know how to climb. This production comes to theatres backed by a nationwide newspaper promotion in the Hearst papers that money could not buy. A great bet. Watch for this Big Money attraction.

BUSINESS WIVES—The Hearst papers know what builds circulation! They've got Winifred Van Duzer's story "Business Wives" all tucked away ready to appear next Fall through the country in their papers just about the time you get ready to flash M-G-M's "Business Wives" on your screen. Hearst officials believe this story is one of the neatest, modern social studies they've ever printed. Think of the thousands of wives who go to business every day, the adventures they have, the temptations which contact with men throw in their paths! Miss Van Duzer took a juicy section of the colorful life of our times and skillfully molded a tense, throbbing drama out of it, with characters and situations palpitatingly alive! The Hearst papers will go after this Big as a serialized Cosmopolitan feature and M-G-M will extend itself on cast, director and production values, so all around it looks like the kind of a proposition that means top money for box-offices next season.

WHITE SHADOWS—Remember what Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer did with "Never The Twain Shall Meet," another Cosmopolitan production. Here comes a follow-up sensation that will positively beat the wonderful record established by the earlier South Seas hit. Why? Because "White Shadows," one of the best-selling books of our time, is written from Life itself by Frederick O'Brien, the celebrated author, explorer and adventurer, who went down to those fair, sun-kissed isles and lived with the natives. What a drama he brought back with him! More breath-taking, more crammed with action and interest, more vivid with blazing color and beauty than any story ever conceived in that locale. M-G-M has some startling additional story ideas to be worked into this subject that will give it every element necessary for audiences. History is going to repeat. Cosmopolitan's "Never the Twain" will be outdistanced as a box-office prize by Cosmopolitan's "White Shadows." And M-G-M production enterprise will do it!

THE LOVELORN—By BEATRICE FAIRFAX—Screen story by Hazel Livingston—You can always depend on M-G-M to keep a couple of leaps ahead of the field in showmanship and this one is more than a couple of leaps ahead. Everybody knows about Beatrice Fairfax and her advice to the lovelorn, a syndicated newspaper feature that has been famous everywhere for years, but it takes M-G-M to dramatize this valuable asset into a great box-office attraction. In the story of "The Lovelorn" a beautiful society girl has left home to make a name for herself, and after achieving success as a fashion model, she finds herself in a puzzling matrimonial dilemma, not knowing which of two men to take. She writes to Beatrice Fairfax and the latter's advice is confirmed by a series of thrilling adventures that lead her to the right man. Showmen! This is the opportunity of a lifetime. The promotion angles will be plugged 100% by the Hearst newspapers in which Beatrice Fairfax is a leading feature. They are making this feature into a story to be run serially in addition to the regular Beatrice

That Popular Girl

THE rise of Norma Shearer has been steady, consistent, certain. Today there are few stars among the ladies who are as strongly intrenched in the hearts of the public. Norma, under the M-G-M banner, has a career ahead of her that will be ever more brilliant with each new picture.

The secret of Norma Shearer's acknowledged success may be found in her true-blue American beauty, her simplicity in acting technique, and in the vehicles which the astute Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio organization selects for her.

Miss Shearer's first photoplay in the new season will be "The Bridal Night." It is a modern, breezy, sympathetic, but not over-sentimental, comedy of an airy quality that from time immemorial has been a source of pleasure to those out front.

One of the big specials that is destined to rank with "The Big Parade" and "Ben-Hur" is "Old Heidelberg" which Ernst Lubitsch is now directing at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. Miss Shearer and Ramon Novarro are co-starred in this great screen work, which is bound to add many points to the stock of all players concerned.

Fairfax column. The theme is tuned just right for modern audiences, and with a great, all-star production to deliver on your screen you can chalk up another victory for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's box-office-wise showmanship.

5 COSMOPOLITAN PRODUCTIONS

Ramon Novarro

THE PRINCE OF GRAUSTARK

—This famous George Barr McCutcheon novel provides one of the most fascinating stories you have ever read and one that will screen like nobody's business. And what a part for Novarro! It's as colorful as the Merry Widow, as swashbuckling as "Scaramouche" and despite all this gayety and royalty it's a modern story. It concerns the effort of a Prince to avoid a forced royal marriage. He comes to America and falls in love with the daughter of a billionaire who proceeds to do some tall trading on the international market and practically controls the government of which Novarro is near-ruler. Novarro has been styled "the Prince of Romance." The Prince of Graustark gives him every opportunity to more than live up to this reputation.

1 RAMON NOVARRO PICTURE

New Dog Star (BONAPARTE)

THE THIRTEENTH HOUR

—Ever since M-G-M delivered "The Silent Accuser" to theatres, exhibitors have asked us to make another picture with a dog theme. And now having waited for the right story M-G-M feels "The Thirteenth Hour" will more than duplicate the success of its earlier hit. This time an even more amazing dog has been obtained. His name is Bonaparte and the industry will marvel at his almost human intelligence. He will thrill audiences in this exciting mystery, wherein with his master, a young detective, he reveals the incredible activities of a King of Crooks. The latter is living a double life and through his ability to adopt the disguise of both an old and a young man, the master thief has succeeded in winning an innocent girl. Breathless episodes take place before the thrilling rescue of the girl by Bonaparte. A great cast has been assembled for this attraction headed by Lionel Barrymore and including Jacqueline Gadsdon and other important names. Chester Franklin is the director. The story is by Mr. Franklin and Douglas Furber.

There will be one more production featuring "Bonaparte" title to be announced, making in all

BODY AND SOUL

—Reginald Barker, whose directorial punch you know from "The White Desert" and more recently "The Flaming Forest," has now come through with his greatest, virile, out-door action epic. He had a marvelous story to begin with, Katharine Newlin Burt's novel, which is considered in this country one of the most thrilling best-sellers ever published. What a story! Beautiful girl sold by drunken father. She escapes in storm to middle-aged doctor who marries her. Her beauty makes her aging husband jealous and he brands her to prove his possession. The girl is rescued by young mountaineer. The mountaineer later requires medical aid and the girl swears she'll return to the doctor if he will cure the young man. What a situation! But that's not all. There are even greater thrills. All built up against Nature's own rugged mountainous background. M-G-M has given this production some cast: Aileen Pringle, Norman Kerry, Lionel Barrymore, T. Roy Barnes. M-G-M delights in handing out this kind of box-office picture to showmen!

NAPOLEON

—The eyes of the world are centered on France where the Super-production "Napoleon," the most gigantic enterprise in motion picture annals has just been completed. Officials of M-G-M were quick to recognize the importance of this work. Representatives of M-G-M went to great lengths to obtain this production for release. It now becomes apparent that M-G-M has annexed the most astounding attraction of modern times. The vivid, brilliant career of Napoleon has been immortalized for the screen. Two years in actual production. Many years in research. Armies of men employed. Thousands of soldiers and sailors utilized. Battles on land and sea reproduced in their real locations. The resources of all France liberally given to this crowning dramatic epic of that nation. Abel Gance, Europe's genius, was selected to be Chief Director. He assembled a cast of principals numbering 175, among whom are the most famous and talented actors and beauties of all the Continent. There is no story in the world so resplendent with adventures as Napoleon—no character in history or fiction whose loves were so intriguing—no period in ancient or modern times so fascinating in its political and social pageantry! At last the story of Napoleon is told in fitting magnificence and glory on the screen. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, whose activities span the world, was not asleep when the great opportunity came. M-G-M proudly brings to you the picture that the world waits for—"Napoleon."

BETWEEN NINE AND NINE

—Exhibitors know from the experience of three years that the M-G-M studios in Culver City are capable of turning out as fine and profitable attractions as have been found anywhere in the world. So that when M-G-M reaches into the production wealth of the UFA organization in Europe you may be sure that it is going after something distinctly worth while. We have pulled out a real plum in the picture, "Between Nine and Nine." It is an ingenious story of a handsome, devil-may-care student in Vienna who gets into an escapade with the police and manages to get away from them handcuffed. Between the hours of nine in the morning and nine at night he goes through some amazing adventures with his hands linked by steel underneath his cape. The possibilities of such a predicament are marvelous. Love offers itself to him, but what can he do? He is in a position to accept a quantity of money, but his hands are tied, literally! Humor, thrills, romance are abundant in this unusual narrative and the final unravelling leaves the spectator with a pleasurable thrill. The most famous of European directors, F. W. Murnau is directing this great story from a screen adaptation done by Frances Marion, the highest paid woman writer in pictures. No expense is being spared to capture the ever delightful atmosphere of capricious Vienna at its merriest period. "Between Nine and Nine" is indeed an interesting prospect of something delightfully different next season.

RAMON NOVARRO

The Prince of Romance

RAMON NOVARRO will be in the full flower of his glory in the season to come. For four reasons: (1) Ben-Hur, (2) The Prince of Graustark, (3) Old Heidelberg and (4) Ramon Novarro himself.

Here is a star who possesses all the qualities that go to make the true star. Handsome to the nth degree, Novarro is at the same time a most talented performer. His technique is that of the artist, and he is at the same time an athlete of sturdy proportion, a quality which puts an element of strong manly action into all his achievements.

In "The Prince of Graustark" this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer made star, will give a varied performance ranging from poetic romance to mirth-making drama.

WILLIAM HAINES

The Smart Aleck

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER has groomed William Haines for star parts in some of the most important vehicles on its ambitious program of pictures for 1927-1928. The first of his productions will be "The Smart Aleck" which is a story of the prize ring. Haines plays a swaggering young pugilist who thinks he can lick any man alive—and does.

William Haines

THE SMART ALECK

In this one William Haines is his typical screen self, wise-cracking and smooth-working. He's a pugilist—or rather a "pug"—and he gets into a peck of trouble only to battle his way out with two strong fists. There's always a heap of fun for the fans when a good fight picture comes along, and when William Haines is the one who does the fighting you know the public knows that it's breezy, topical and of the minute without any angle that you could object to. This one will be a woman's picture all the way as a strong love story has been built by the authors, F. Hugh Herbert and Florence Ryerson.

The subsequent Haines vehicles will be SPRING FEVER and WEST POINT.

3 WILLIAM HAINES PICTURES

Jackie Coogan

THE BUGLE CALL

—Here is a stirring story of American prairie life and one that has been tailored and measured for The Kid. It is the most ambitious picture that Jackie has ever appeared in and he has been surrounded with a strong supporting cast. The tale centers around the Indian ravages in the post-war days of General Grant and Jackie and his bugle manage to scare off a massacre and to bring his father and mother together by a heroic stunt in a great crisis. Those who have watched the picture in production are thoroughly sold on its aptness and exhibitors may well expect a most exceptional picture. Claire Windsor, Herbert Rawlinson, Tom O'Brien and others are in the cast. The picture is directed by Edward Sedgwick, creator of "Slide, Kelly, Slide" and the story is by C. Gardner Sullivan.

BUTTONS

— Showmen will be delighted with M-G-M's choice of story for Jackie Coogan, for "Buttons" truly covers the range of human emotions and gives sturdy young Jackie glorious opportunity for moments of stirring courage, self-sacrifice, boyhood devotion . . . intermingled with hearty laughs and pathos that no one may resist. Jackie plays the part of a trim little page-boy aboard an Atlantic liner. His devotion to the Captain leads him to accept discharge and disgrace rather than tell how his unselfish acts have really been done to help the Captain's romance. "Buttons" later gets back aboard ship, proves himself once more a little hero and survives a spectacular wreck at sea to return proudly to his sick mother at home. George Hill, director of "Tell It to the Marines", wrote this story and it is one of the greatest pieces of showman writing the M-G-M studio has ever handled.

2 JACKIE COOGAN PICTURES

Tim McCoy

THERE has been decided exhibitor approval of the Tim McCoy series, as exhibitors have appreciated the extra production effort that has gone into this unusual type of outdoor picture. In 1927-1928 added production values will be included, and the first Tim McCoy will be directed by Reginald Barker, one of the greatest of them all. In the supporting cast are Claire Windsor, Russell Simpson, Dorothy Sebastian and Tom O'Brien. The authors are Ross Willis and Madeline Ruthven. The next productions will be "The Gallant Gringo," "El Americano" and three others, the titles of which will be announced shortly.

6 TIM McCOY PICTURES

MADAMOISELLE FROM ARMENTIERES

— Look who's here, Madamoiselle from Armentieres . . . parlez-vous! Millions of our soldier boys know the verses of that most famous of all the comedy war songs. And they brought back the fame of the song to America so that practically everybody knows it now. And when M-G-M learned that this title had been used by England to make "The Big Parade of the British" a fast cable was sent to obtain "Madamoiselle from Armentieres" for our customers. Maurice Elvy is director. Victor Saville wrote it. Beautiful Estelle Brody and John Stuart, England's handsome idol, are the leads. These are the topnotch names of all Britain. And they've made a great picture, packed with big dramatic moments, plus a love story that's tender and powerful, and in addition to all these elements there's humor and plenty of it. That sounds like a good bet for any theatre. And you bet it is! And remember, next Fall thousands of American Legion boys come home from their visit to France, the papers will be full of it. They'll be whistling that famous tune and you'll agree that "Madamoiselle from Armentieres" will be the most up-to-the-minute subject you could put into your theatre.

Karl Dane and George K. Arthur

RED PANTS

—The sensational new comedy team that so delighted the world in "Rookies" will be seen in a series of sparkling slapstick stories destined for a lot of laughs in these serious days. The first of their 1927-1928 output will be a post-war comedy that finds the two boys on the Paris boulevards, Dane as uncouth as he was in "The Big Parade" and "Slide, Kelly, Slide" and Arthur his slightly lisping self, swaying a bit at the hips. The two make a wonderful combination for the gags which the authors Edward Sedgwick and Lew Lipton have concocted. Sedgwick is the director and Richard Shayer, author of "Tell It to the Marines" made the adaptation.

Two additional to be announced

3 DANE AND ARTHUR PICTURES

Greta Garbo

LOVE—The question as to Greta Garbo's next vehicle to follow "Flesh and the Devil" was happily answered by Tolstoi's immortal novel "Anna Karenina," to be called "Love" on the screen. It is as though this drama had been written especially for Miss Garbo's unique personality. No one in the world could better portray the languid beauty of Anna, pretty wife of the wealthy diplomat. Into her life comes the dashing young officer. Society warns them to respect its edicts, but love intoxicates them and they flee to Italy's blue skies. What drama is here, memorable, unforgettable, bathed in the glory of magnificent Russia before the revolution. Dimitri Buchowetzki will direct "Love" from the scenario of Lorna Moon. In the brilliant all-star cast are: Ricardo Cortez, ZaSu Pitts, Helene Chadwick, Lionel Barrymore, Dorothy Sebastian and Mario Carillo. Some cast! Some picture!

THE DIVINE WOMAN—What a title for a star like Greta Garbo! In this extended effort of M-G-M the captivating Swedish star plays the role of that celebrated actress whose life story is more strangely fascinating than a world of French fiction. Who does not know of the great Bernhardt and who would not long to see the secret of her personality once more revealed before the audiences of America? Greta Garbo, the star that the public made, the star that only Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer could reveal, provides a pulsating heart-throbbing character study that exposes the temperament and the hidden life that one who is great lives far from the painted curtain and the tinselled scene. It is a revealing picture and an intense romance.

A third vehicle will be announced shortly, making

Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle

ADAM AND EVIL—This is dedicated to audiences who like their laughs, long, lingering and loud. F. Hugh Herbert and Florence Ryerson have written the perfect vehicle for the perfect farce comedy team, Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle. They will surely ride to a partnership of fame with this uproarious riot of marital complications, involving a twin brother from Brazil whose arrival almost wrecks a hitherto peaceful domestic home. Director Robert Z. Leonard. In the supporting cast Gwen Lee, Hedda Hopper, Gertrude Short, John T. Murray.

SLIGHTLY SCARLET—A truly clever story, containing a series of the most amusing situations that a scenario writer's ingenuity could devise. It is an original theme built up expressly for the new comedy team of Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle. People know how easy it is for circumstances to cast doubt on honest folk's reputations and in "Slightly Scarlet" Dame Fortune, in a joking mood, plays havoc with a pair of innocents. Even lovers may doubt sweethearts and vice versa when events seem so strange, but the audience is in on the joke all the time and they will have the time of their lives!

Lillian Gish

ANNIE LAURIE—Lillian Gish has never, in all her glorious career had a vehicle to equal the sure-fire, down-to-earth audience qualities of "Annie Laurie"—qualities that make quiet folk cheer out loud! It's an original story conceived by Josephine Lovett, that smart screen writer, and she has put into the picture the throbs, the thrills, the tendernesses that Miss Gish's admiring thousands demand of her. A new setting for a picture, too. The hills of rugged Scotland in the days when strong, brutish men fought for power and the love of women. Action, action all the way, showing the intrigues and battles of two warring clans. The melody of "Annie Laurie", whose origin dates from that time, brings together the leader of one clan (Norman Kerry) and the beauty of the other (Lillian Gish). John S. Robertson is director.

Rex Ingram's

THE GARDEN OF ALLAH—Those who have been privileged to see it in its incomplete form declare that again the name of the director of "The Four Horsemen" will resound with praise and glory to the four corners of the earth! Metro-Goldwyn believes this is the most exciting news it could possibly convey to exhibitors. A Rex Ingram triumph that challenges his best! Both Ingram and Metro-Goldwyn have looked forward to something brilliant from "The Garden of Allah" that tender, gripping, magnificent stage success of Robert Hichens. The world knows its famous story, of the desert Monastery which yields its handsome young Monk to the world's embrace for a brief, exquisite moment. His adventures, his loves, his eventual return to the monastery are unforgettable moments of story telling.

Greta Garbo

A Brilliant Star

THE American debut of Greta Garbo may be likened to the respective first appearance in America of Jenny Lind or of Bernhardt.

Certainly no actress of either stage or screen has created a more positive sensation than this emotional artiste of the North. "The Torrent" started her on her way, then "The Temptress" added a sheen to the lustre, and then came "Flesh and the Devil." The next Garbo production is "Love."

LEW CODY and AILEEN PRINGLE

A Starring Team with a Big Idea

THE world knows Lew Cody, that arch-creator of devil-may-care comedy—a vagabond of society with a knowing twinkle in his eye—a gay boulevardier, with gold-topped night stick and opera hat—

The world knows Aileen Pringle, dark, beautiful and smart. A woman who'll venture with romance, carry off a flirtation with a merry gesture, and walk on her gay way, leaving the faint delicious scent of delicate Paris perfume in her wake—

These two should be teamed up, said the M-G-M officials, and when queried the exhibitor body answered a loud approval of the idea.

Their first co-starring vehicle is titled "Adam and Evil," a comedy-drama that gives both parties an opportunity to display the best of their talents as revealed in their previous pictures.

The time is ripe for a new comedy-duet featuring a smart team of this nature and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer feels that it is taking advantage of an opportunity in presenting Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle together.

JACKIE COOGAN

The Kid Himself

SURROUNDED by casts of outstanding drawing strength in their own right, directed by irectors of outstanding past achievements, Jackie oogan, in 1927-1928 will continue as the one id only great box-office card among the younger eneration of screen stars.

His first picture for the season will be "The ugle Call" which will surpass any and all of his revious efforts, great as many of them were.

To motion picture audiences the wide world er, Jackie represents a composite of all the boy roes ever created by such authors of juvenile fic- n as Alger, Optic, Appleton, Stevens, Standish d others of similiar note. And it is no secret that many of the nation's greatest men have read and are still reading such stories along with the millions of boys and girls.

The personification of what every mother would like to realize in her son, Jackie Coogan has endeared himself to the women among picture-goers as well as the men, and theatre owners well know that to capture the feminine element is to capture the widest possible ticket-buying public.

"The Bugle Call" will be followed by "Buttons."

Tim McCoy

Of the Great Open Spaces

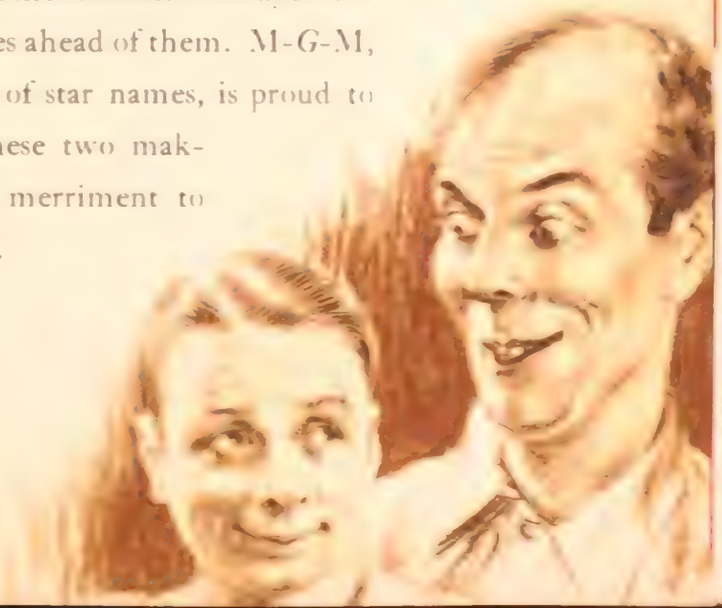
RIDES like the wind, ropes like a fool—Tim McCoy, a rip-roaring—rarin' to go—son of the saddle. The most original outdoor star in motion pictures.

McCoy—his pals call him Colonel and his public calls him Tim—is known out where the West begins as "The friend of the Indians." He has ridden with the redskins, hunted with them, lived with them, shared his meals with them. They love Tim McCoy. And what an asset they are in the making of his particular brand of action picture.

M-G-M started its series of Westerns just one year ago, and it is quite conservative to say that they have been well-received by exhibitors. They are well-produced (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer could not do otherwise) and each picture has an angle that is different.

Most so-called Western pictures are the same story over and over again. The McCoy unit on the M-G-M lot is nursed carefully and great discretion is used in the selection of vehicles.

To date it may be said that the Tim McCoy pictures represent a triumph in wide distribution, and even more exhibitors will take on this sure-fire audience series of action subjects.



KARL DANE and GEORGE K. ARTHUR

Meet the Boys!

JUST to look at them is to burst out into long, loud laughs! Stranger than fiction is the story of their immediate success as the newest and most promising of any comedy teams the stage or screen has ever known.

M-G-M is doing the laughing, too. So are a lot of exhibitors who pocketed real profits with "Rookies." Dane and Arthur have become overnight the most natural comedy draw on the market. And they've begun their million dollar career with one of the greatest and most successful comedies of all time, "Rookies."

Dane and Arthur fit naturally into the comedy limelight because they are first and foremost splendid actors. Karl Dane in "The Big Parade" showed he could draw tears as well as laughs. George K. Arthur has lent distinction to many roles undertaken here and in his native England. Their great acting talent will stand them in good stead in the brilliant comedy future that lies ahead of them. M-G-M, maker of star names, is proud to add these two makers of merriment to its list.

THE BIG PARADE—It is with pardonable pride we announce the release of the greatest attraction the screen has known. The world awaits it. Never such keen anticipation. Truly 1927-1928 may well go down into history as The Year of the Big Parade, for it will leave its cherished memory in the minds and hearts of all audiences.

Released September 10

BEN-HUR—The news that "Ben-Hur" is to be released to you this year is without question the most important announcement that you will receive in 1927-1928. Preceded by the fame that years have built about it, "Ben-Hur" is an attraction that no theatre may possibly withhold from the audiences. Its Greatness has made it an essential for every exhibitor, a picture which all patrons may justly expect to see.

OUR GANG
Comedies

LEADING the Big Parade of Shorts and typical of the quality and high standard of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Junior Features are Hal Roach's "Our Gang" Comedies, the greatest attraction in the entire short-feature field. The world knows them and loves them. They are a source of pride and profit to any theatre, anywhere on earth. You cannot afford to be without them!

The first "Our Gang" comedy for M-G-M will be released September 25th. "Our Gang" Directors are Robert McGowan, Anthony Mack, Charles Oelze.

THE MOST IMPORTANT ALLIANCE OF YEARS

—to give exhibitors M-G-M Quality in Shorts, too!

Hearst-MGM-Hal Roach-UFA

THREE brief years ago M-G-M became established as the new and aggressive factor in features and roadshow production. M-G-M made this industry stop, look and listen! Were you one of the lucky exhibitors who profiited with M-G-M from the start? History repeats. The greatest alliance ever known now takes place to give you M-G-M quality and daring in short features and News Reel. M-G-M joins hands with Hal Roach, world's greatest comedy producer, and with William Randolph Hearst, most powerful news force in history, plus UFA for novelties. Your public will welcome a complete program of M-G-M quality throughout.

The great Hal Roach Studios adjoin the M-G-M Studios in Culver City, Cal. Their combined resources are far ahead of anything hitherto known in the industry.

M-G-M JUNIOR FEATURES ARE KNOWN QUANTITIES

HAL ROACH

FROM the entire field of short features Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has selected for you the leading attractions. Each brilliant unit is of highest quality and established name. You cannot duplicate M-G-M's Big Parade of Shorts anywhere in the business. Hal Roach, King of comedy producers, brings to M-G-M his famous "Our Gang" productions. Not content with having lifted Harold Lloyd to greatest stardom, he has convulsed audiences in every corner of the globe with his "Our Gang" comedies and has made the money value of these little classics felt at every box-office where they play. Hal Roach controls greater resources of studio facilities, more important comedy players and writers than any producer in his field. No wonder the Hal Roach name represents the top-notch quality of all comedy producers.

Backed by the aggressive promotion methods of M-G-M, "Our Gang" will enjoy even greater prestige than heretofore. It is the greatest single attraction in shorts!

M-G-M's GREAT EVENTS in Technicolor

LEAVE it to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to come through with the outstanding short-feature idea of many years! M-G-M's Great Events are beautiful Technicolor dramatizations—thrilling stories built around critical moments in the lives of nations and famous personalities. Strong drama, human interest, pathos, suspense and spectacle are mingled in Great Events with the result that these gems entirely in Technicolor are sure to prove brilliant additions to any program. Their success is a foregone conclusion. Next season they will add prestige and profit to thousands of theatres.

The first of M-G-M's Great Events will be released in September.

10 CHARLEY CHASE Comedies

A NAME that means money at the box-office. Ask any exhibitor playing Charley Chase! A name that's growing by leaps and bounds. Read this report from an unquestioned source: "For the past year Charley Chase comedies have averaged better than any two-reel comedies made." You can verify that at any theatre playing Charley Chase. He appears consistently in polite society comedies crammed full of action and fast-moving situations. Like "Our Gang" and other Hal Roach product, Charley Chase comedies represent the highest quality in comedy production.

The first Charley Chase Comedy for M-G-M will be released on September 11th. Director, James Parrott.

"No Guess Work—Hal Roach Comedies Are Known!"

DEPEND on Hal Roach to give the short-feature market new ideas! Here's a Big One that will be a positive sensation next season. Spectacular thrills plus comedy. Roach pulled a smart one with Rex, King of Wild Horses. Imagine the Action of that, plus a Western comedy character introducing laughs intermingled with gasps! Produced in a Big Hal Roach way! Wait!

Dialect Comedies

THE proven box-office draw of the Irish-Jewish feature comedy has found its most important development in the short feature field with the Max Davidson comedies. Exhibitors know that in these dialect comedies are rich opportunities for side-splitting comic situations together with touches of pathos. Great audience entertainment! And no one is better suited to interpret these comedies than Max Davidson, who has been a riot in these roles ever since he earned fame with the original "Abie's Irish Rose" company. Hal Roach developed Harold Lloyd to success. Charley Chase is another of his character promotions. Now Roach gives showmen a new character slant in Max Davidson, who will appear in quality productions with great supporting casts.

---Confidence

Confidence is at the very basis of all business success. You must have confidence in yourself and in your theatre venture if you are to succeed. Just so, the producer or distributor must not only have confidence himself, but must inspire it in you, if his pictures are to make money for you.

The confidence displayed at our sales convention by that live wire bunch that make up Educational's staff of branch managers, is equaled only by the confidence shown by the thousands of exhibitors who have long played Educational Pictures. Their contracts for the 1927-1928 product are coming in like a flood tide with every mail.

Charles Koerner of the George M. Mann Theatres, San Francisco, wires: "As usual we had no hesitancy in immediately signing contracts for your new service at all our houses. Quality of your previous releases has instilled this confidence for the future."

Such exhibitor confidence is a real inspiration to us. That's what we've been building for—through seven years of specialized experience—and that's what we're going on fighting to maintain.

served every exhibitor in the United States buying the regular Fox News service with a print of the great Kentucky Derby as quickly as special airplanes, fast trains and the U. S. Air Mail could deliver—at no extra cost to the exhibitor!

FOX FLIER WINS FILM 'DERBY'

Through darkness and rain, two pilots, representing rival news film organizations, last night raced to Chicago with motion pictures of the Kentucky Derby for the honor and prestige of scoring a beat. Pilots for three other news reel companies were forced down.

It was a 300-mile air Derby—now run every year—over an unlighted, unmarked route; a Derby that starts the instant the winner of the American turf classic flashes across the finish line.

Fox Film won the race. Its plane, piloted by "Red" Love, regular air mail pilot out of the inky, rain Louis, dropped out of the inky, rain drenched clouds to the lighted field at Maywood at 10:49 p. m.

Fifteen minutes later, its rival, the plane of the Pathe service, arrived. But almost by that time Staff Photographer William Story had his films in the office of Fox Film Company, 113 Austin av., for he took only twenty-two minutes by automobile from Maywood, and before midnight the pictures were being shown in the Monroe Theater, James E. Darste, news editor, announced.

Most phenomenal run any picture ever playing Northwest was "DON JUAN," which just finished fifth week my Blue Mouse Theatre, Seattle. Out of thirty-five days only one day, the thirty-second, that we did not have big standing line—terribly stormy weather. Picture would easily have gone another week except that we had advertised "THE BETTER 'OLE," which started same as "DON JUAN." Impossible to get within block of theatre account of crowds. Another sensational run! In all my experience in show business have never known of any picture with such magnetic drawing power as "DON JUAN" and "THE BETTER 'OLE." IF ANY EXHIBITOR IN THE UNITED STATES IS IN NEED OF FINANCES THESE TWO PICTURES ARE JUST THE SAME AS MONEY IN BANK. More power to Warner Bros., who certainly know how to make big pictures with big pulling power.

Hollywood's Responsibility

Production Budget This Year Will Be About $120,000,000

By William A. Johnston

HOLLYWOOD'S production budget this year is about one hundred and twenty million dollars.

New York sends the millions out to Hollywood, week by week, and emits a heavy groan with every check.

I have heard some of the language used by the signatories and it's well that the words don't get into the pictures.

$120,000,000 a year!

AND even then New York's troubles only begin. There are great distributing machines, with offices all over the world, to be fed with more checks; and still more checks go this way and that and that.

Big and costly conventions are held, to pep up the army of salesmen. The competitive selling struggle is the biggest effort of all the industry's efforts.

Every so often the boys from Wall Street come uptown with columns of figures and ask the Times Square boys if selling expenses can't be cut; and then the boys of Times Square think about the boys out in Hollywood and the air grows sulphurous again.

It's a large and tough problem. The financiers don't know anything about production and it is pretty much Greek to the Times Square people themselves.

So New York growls and does little else.

New York's attitude toward Hollywood is pretty much that of a practical father whose son at college is hitting the high spots. Father realizes that education must be had, at any sacrifice. But, for one thing, what practical result is going to come out of it; and for another, how long can the family budget stand the expense? These are the questions that wrinkle the paternal brow.

New York feels exactly the same way about Hollywood.

What is going to come back from the studios; and at what cost?

And Hollywood goes right along; and so do the millions.

It's a great game.

We can only hope that the mighty stream of the public's silver—of a foreign as well as domestic denomination—won't slacken at all.

That would be serious.

Anyway, Hollywood's responsibility is a vast one.

Quite as vast as the money that goes out there.

And still vaster than that!

HOLLYWOOD is a miraculous place. I have tried in previous articles, to give some conception of the great studio plants. They are impressive to a degree.

Heavy investments have gone into them. But, also, and by rare good fortune, they were originally planted in what has proved to be a wondrously fertile real estate soil and they have grown as opulently as Jack's Beanstalk. Nowhere else in the world are there such factories as these, devoted intensively and wholly to creative work.

I have also tried, by describing the big pictures in production, to give an idea of the remarkable technical work done today within the studio walls. The producer still goes forth for locations; but not as he formerly did. Today, with his huge stages and outside construction that know no limit, with miniature and glass painting and other remarkable devices, it would actually seem as if he could, and does, bring 'most any location to the studio itself.

So much for the physical resources of the studios. This growth has been paralleled by organization growth. Specialists abound and fit in, under efficient regimes, at every stage of the picture's development. Mostly the names of this legion of picture makers are unknown outside the studios. But they are able, experienced and important factors.

ALL in all, the Hollywood colony is the most remarkable city of creative folk, ever gathered together; in fact the adequate appreciation of this phenomenon challenges 'most any man's power of conception and description.

The ablest article I have ever read on Hollywood is that of Dr. Carl Vollmoeller, author of "The Miracle," and printed recently in the Annual Preview section of the Los Angeles Times.

He says that, within fifty years, Hollywood will be the most important center of this universe. Out of it will come the world's universal language, breaking down nationalism everywhere and establishing internationalism and understanding among the peoples of the globe.

To Hollywood will journey regularly the great men of the world, leaving there their impress upon motion pictures.

This is not a dream, it is a clearly intelligent appraisal of an inevitable Hollywood. I would only amend this statement by saying that this astounding development has already begun, that Hollywood is already drawing to itself the creative folk of every country of the world.

Hollywood, Dr. Vollmoeller points out, is and will forever be the world's picture production center. It has no tradition whatever, nothing to hamper its utter freedom of expression. Hollywood is brand new; the city was born with the motor car. In this respect, far more than on account of its sunshine and scenery, it is the ideal birthplace of an entirely new vehicle of expression of universal appeal.

STUDIO resources, as I see them today in Hollywood, are about equal. No one plant has advantages over another sufficiently great to guarantee any marked difference in the output of pictures. Even the smaller studios today are sightly and well equipped. I can see no reason in this respect why they connot turn out just as good an average box-office product as the big companies.

The difference, therefore, between the pictures from each studio will depend upon the creative power of the various organizations.

In other words—it's primarily a matter of ideas.

The ideas back of any program of pictures today will distinguish that program from any other.

A friend of mine expresses it differently. It's all a matter of showmen, says he; show me the showmen at the head of any studio, he asserts, and I'll tell you what kind of pictures will come forth.

Well, we'll call them showmen.

But, they've got to be big showmen, men with big ideas, these days; men capable of recognizing big ideas.

For the showmen of Hollywood today must be the showmen of the world, men capable of making pictures of world grasp and appeal.

And these are large specifications!

OF course, organization counts tremendously, too. An unorganized studio will turn out unorganized pictures.

Just here, I want to point out what strikes me as Hollyood's chief weakness right now. It can only, I am sure, be a transitory weakness, but it is important in its consequences.

It is this: the big studios are straining so hard at special pictures this year that they are neglecting their regular output.

It's a great thing to make a great picture, especially one that goes into the millions in gross. Big pictures are alluring. People like to make them; if successful they bring glory to the makers. I, for instance, like to write about them.

They add to the fame of the picture and the industry. They increase the movie-going public. We need them in our business, very badly. The public wants them.

But—we mustn't forget that our one-and-a-half-billion dollar investment in picture theatres runs on about five to six hundred features a year—and not on the big pictures that yearn to be road shows.

These five to six hundred features and the two thousand short subjects that go with them to round out properly the picture fodder of the public are the bread and butter picture of the theatre and the entire industry.

And, if we neglect them, we'll lose our bread and butter.

NO matter how big a studio may be, you'll find its resources pretty well strained if one or more big pictures are in process of production.

What happens then when the same studio is facing a schedule of from forty to seventy features a year?

Well, the inevitable result is—unless the place is mightily well organized—that the features are shot forth by factory or worse than factory methods.

I learned of some such instances in high places in Hollywood that sound worse than conditions ten years ago when it was thought that acceptable pictures could be rattled out at the rate of three a week.

Such pictures simply won't go, these days. They'll hurt picture theatre attendance—and hurt it very badly. The fact is, from what I learn, that they are hurting right now.

All the stage presentations in the world will not bolster up bad picture entertainment.

The thing to do is to think more of the picture—the regular bread and butter picture; the one which even our first run palaces run on; and which is supporting our valuable foreign market.

THERE is one phenomenal individual in Hollywood today, who, it seems to me, is a pretty clear index to picture production as it now stands.

I refer to the sub-title writer.

One is reputed to get a salary larger than any writer I know of in the wide world; and pretty generally, I believe, the salaries are large enough to make one gasp.

Why?

This very question was put to me on the train coming East by a newspaper man of considerable proportions. And I had a rather difficult time explaining it. The usual reply of "Oh, well, it's the movies, you know," didn't appease my friend.

"No employer pays much more than he has to," he replied, "even in the movies."

"Another thing," he added, "pictures are supposed to express themselves. Why pay a man so very much to put words in them?"

So, at length, I found myself giving a large discourse on picture production in general; and arrived at some conclusions such as these:

The sub-title writer is the plastic surgeon of production. When the picture workmen do their job too hastily and inexpertly, he lifts the drooping face of the picture here and there with lifegiving words.

His is a sort of hypodermic needle shooting a stiff tonic into flabby muscles, etc., etc.

And the results, often, are weird.

Sometimes the picture is mostly sub-titles; or else the latter stand out so violently as to be absurdly inconsistent.

NOW, the low and run down condition of the picture may be the result of bad studio organization.

Or, it may have to be turned out too fast on account of this confounded equation of high salaries. After any producer, these days, looks at the salary portion of his cost

The Week in Review

Comment on Passing Affairs

BURNET HERSEY, a newspaper and magazine writer with a background of unique and distinguished experience, brings to our attention a condition which merits serious thought—the attitude of the industry toward those on the outside seeking to get in, despite the crying need for new ideas and new blood. He says:

"Motion pictures publications have recorded the fact, at different intervals during the past year, that there is something almost feverish about the hankerings after new blood and new energy in the creative field of the leading producers. We have heard broadcasted by production heads and scenario chiefs the appeal for new material, more and better stories, fresh and original viewpoints. When a movie executive arrives in New York from the West Coast he can invariably count on one sure-fire theme to assure a publicity story—'We Want New Material' theme.

"But do they really want this new material, these fresh view points? Have the motion picture producers a sound and adequate means of securing these better stories, this new talent? Agents and story brokers, with whom many experienced young writers come in contact, have supplied a score of examples of the vain and futile attempts to bring new and promising talent to the attention of producers. Many of these agents, who have in the past rendered inestimable services to the picture companies in their quest for story material, report an undercurrent of intrigue, petty (and often not so petty!) graft, personalities and inner politics, pervading the industry which make it almost impossible for a rank outsider to obtain the humblest of opportunities, regardless of talents. Some have even advised desperate aspirants to seek out somebody's sweetheart, cousin or aunt, establish the requisite pull or promise the necessary rake-off, in order to get a hearing.

"Other fields of business have evolved their methods of sowing seed for their future creative energy. The picture industry alone seems to be floundering in a muddy whirlpool of indecision, favoritism, personalities and graft when it comes to choosing its raw material. There is no interest in the beginner with ambition, mental equipment, background, ideas. He must either possess wide experience in pictures or relatives!

"The industry is not overcrowded, except with mediocrity. The newer phase upon which the pictures are entering, demands new blood. Those who have made the pictures of yesterday and today will have much to unlearn during the next few years. The newcomer will have no such handicap. Rather will he progress toward a finer craftsmanship as he assimilates and learns the few tricks that form the basic understanding of picture production and adds to them the fresher, more vital viewpoint of his personality, not yet grown mouldy and stale on the 'cushions of complacency' as one writer called the directorial ease and content of Hollywood."

"I MET a Theatre Owner from a mid-western state at the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association dinner at Hotel Plaza the other night," said Business Manager M. J. O'Toole, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and after a brief discussion on things in general he said: "You fellows ought to have an organization like ours or the Hays organization. Then you would get somewhere."

"I know something about the dues paying proclivities of certain people," said O'Toole, "and I know this man has not paid dues in the State or National organization of Motion Picture Theatre Owners in several years. I told him, however, I would be willing to match move for move made on behalf of Theatre Owners or in the interest of the Motion Picture industry with the Vaudeville Managers' Association or the Hays organization and let any fair jury of disinterested people determine the virtue and value of these relative activities. I asked him a few questions and proved definitely to him that in the removal of the film tax alone in 1921 by the National organization he was saved about $8,000 in one year and $16,000 before the next session of Congress, admitting that perhaps the tax would have been repealed at the 1923 session at any event, which was by no means a certainty.

"Yet it is very likely this Theatre Owner never paid to exhibitor organization one-tenth of $16,000 since he went into business. But he is a good fellow. He always gives good advice. He can generally find fault with what others do and tell them how it should be done, but he will not help do it."

Hollywood's Responsibilities budget, he will be sitting on a hot stove until said picture is finished.

Salaries make production haste.

But, mostly, I believe, the trouble is that the ordinary feature is shunted along and out of the way because some big picture is on the tracks.

* * *

ALL this has to do with the Hollywood of today; and the situation is important enough.

But the big problem is the future of Hollywood.

That, or at least one phase of it, I want to talk about in an editorial next week.

Exhibitor Files $208,000 Suit Against U. A. for Alleged Breach of Contract

THE New Lyceum Amusement Company, Cincinnati, has brought suit against United Artists for $208,000 damages, alleging that the latter repudiated contracts after previously approving them. The disputed contracts embrace fifteen pictures for first run at the Gifts Theatre, which was to play them on a guarantee and split arrangement.

Contracts were signed April 25, it is alleged, under which the exhibitor guaranteed the distributor $81,000 and 50 per cent of the gross over and above that amount, plus house expenses, advertising and $40,500 profit to the exhibitor. After accepting a deposit and approving the contract, according to Raymond Frankel, head of the New Lyceum, United Artists telegraphed rejection on May 4, with a registered letter, mailed the following day, confirming the rejection.

It was stated at United Artists' offices that the company never had a contract with the Lyceum Company. The Lyceum, it is declared, made application for contract, which was rejected by the home office, which acted within its rights in the matter, it is stated.

Funds For Flood Relief Swelled by Theatres

Hays Office Receives Letter of Thanks From Red Cross; Contributions Continue Strong

RELIEF funds continue to pour in from many theatres throughout the United States in response to the plea made by President Coolidge through the American Red Cross in behalf of the flood sufferers of the Mississippi Valley.

The Will Hays office has received a letter from the National Headquarters of the American Red Cross stating that their chapter reports are almost unanimous in telling of the splendid cooperation given by the motion picture interests of the country and that it was one of the most helpful assets of the entire campaign. The letter further asks that a message of appreciation be extended to the entire film trade.

More than $15,000 has been raised by Memphis theatres since the first call for aid. Loew's Palace, Pantages and Lyceum theatres united in a benefit presided over by Gene Lewis of the Lyceum stock company and obtained $2,013.83 by direct personal appeal. Loew's raised $1,606.66 with a big double bill and Pantages came through with about $1,500. City authorities gladly suspended the Sunday closing rule with the acquiescence of the state and county law authorities.

Kansas City picture theatre patrons crowded eight downtown and suburban houses last Friday night for the benefit of the Red Cross fund. About $3,000 was obtained, the Newman contributing $1,300 with $250 additional being raised by the performers. The balance was made up by the contributions from the Isis, Gladstone, Lincoln, Madrid, Gillham, Linwood and Apollo theatres. A train was held twenty minutes in order that Leonore Ulric might appear at the Newman.

Roy Dickson, manager of Tiffany Pictures in St. Louis and who has been active in arranging benefit shows, reports that thirty benefits were given last week and that thirty more were scheduled for the week of May 15. This will bring the grand total of theatres subscribing to the fund to 125, or one-fourth of all houses in the St. Louis trade zone. Many theatres in this section were flood victims.

The Capitol Theatre, Des Moines, was completely sold out at a midnight show held on May 7, $2,843 being collected and turned over to the relief fund. Ten colored motion picture theatres participated in benefit shows on Sunday night, May 15, under the auspices of the Red Cross and a special performance was given at Ford's Opera House by the Theatre Manager's Association. At the latter, seats were $2 while boxes sold for $10 each.

A goal of $7,500 was set for "Dixie," the big benefit under way by the theatre men at the Auditorium, Portland, Ore. The entire program from the Orpheum, Broadway, Pantages and Hippodrome theatres are to be offered on the bill. Every merchant is cooperating and tickets are selling for $1 each.

All theatres of Minneapolis permitted the Red Cross to collect money during the regular performances of last week. Several thousand dollars were obtained in this way, the majority coming from the F. & R. houses.

The Pathe exchange in the territory of Festus, Mo., donated a Pathe News Special for a benefit showing arranged at the Idle Hour theatre at that point. All employees of this house donated their services and every dollar taken in was turned over to the relief fund of the Red Cross. Performances were packed.

Exhibitors of Albany, N. Y., gave a magnificent response to the appeal for aid and for the first time in the history of the city the motion picture theatres were open on Sunday, running continuously from one o'clock and attracting large crowds.

Ben Amsterdam, of the Franklin Theatre Company, Reading, Pa., reports that several thousand dollars were turned over to the Reading Red Cross as the result of the benefit arranged at eleven Reading theatres on Sunday, May 8.

Donald McElroy, in charge of relief fund performances held at several of the larger theatres in the Fitzpatrick & McElroy circuit, divided $4,000 among the Chicago branches of the Red Cross. Many local organizations gave cooperation.

As a result of the refusal of some Massachusetts municipalities to permit Sunday performances in motion picture theatres, benefit shows for the American Red Cross started at midnight Sunday night. The inconvenience to the public, however, was offset by large receipts from the shows.

Cleveland Committee Now Zoning New Theatres

A zoning committee, composed of exhibitors and distributors, is meeting at regular intervals to re-zone Cleveland so as to take care of the new theatres that have been built within the past few months and those that are now in the course of construction. Representing the exhibitors on the committee are: J. J. Harwood, chairman; Henry Lustig, D. L. Schumann, Heney Greenberger, and J. A. Schwartz. Representing the distributors are: Norman Moray, chairman; G. L. Sears, O. J. Ruby, Arthur Ehrlich and Ward Scott.

Organize "Strolling Screen Company" in Montreal

A new form of film presentation, known as a "strolling moving picture company," has been organized and incorporated in Montreal, Quebec, under the name of Mack Bros.' City Show. The incorporators are Francis Matthews and Jean Baptiste Labranche. The company will travel throughout the rural districts to offer screen entertainment.

Rumors of N. Y. Theatre Mergers Again Heard

A RUMOR flying around New York City's film trade the past week to the effect that the Loew theatre circuit had officially taken over the sixteen Brooklyn and Long Island theatres of the A. H. Schwartz circuit was strongly denied this week by the latter organization.

It has long been known to the local trade that a cordial state of affairs has long existed between the Loew organization and the Schwartz circuit owing to the alleged distribution of stock, and it has been further stated that Publix has made plans to invade territory occupied by Schwartz theatres to the point of securing theatre sites and also negotiating for the transfer of Schwartz theatres to the Publix banner. However, the office of the Schwartz circuit reports that the present situation is as it always has, been and will in all probability continue so.

Another reported theatre merger between the Steiner-Blinderman-De Lancey Clinton Corp. and the Mayer and Schneider circuit, a matter of forty odd houses, is also declared off on account of the inability of the two parties to agree on terms.

Department of Justice Watching Mergers in Industry

But Only as Matter of Routine; Interested Parties May Submit Plans Voluntarily for O. K.; Otherwise Details May Be Called For

By CLARENCE L. LINZ

Washington Correspondent, Motion Picture News

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Mergers in the motion picture industry are being watched by the Department of Justice, but only as a part of the routine work of the Department in surveying all commercial and industrial amalgamations which might prove subversive of the law.

Under a policy adopted some time ago by the Department, parties to such mergers may come to Washington and submit their plans to the Federal attorneys, who will advise them if their contemplated action may be in conflict with the statutes.

In some cases, where such action is not taken voluntarily, the Department, upon receiving a report of the merger, will call for the details. It is known that, in at least one of the acquisitive moves recently made in the motion picture industry, the parties concerned voluntarily conferred with officials of the Department to learn whether their proposed plans would be within the law. In other cases, details have been requested.

It is stressed at the Department that the watch kept upon merger activities is not confined to those of any one industry. Such investigations are made for the protection of the public and in two instances in recent months proposed mergers have been killed when the Department pointed out that the plans in contemplation would violate Federal laws.

By this action, not only was the public protected, but the interested parties, who had no desire to violate the law, were saved the expense and other embarrassments of later prosecution.

It is not indicated that any of the pending and proposed mergers in the motion picture industry have as yet been found to be contrary to the Anti-Trust Acts. Hundreds of such cases have been brought before the Department, but in very few instances has it been necessary to do more than indicate particular points where conflict of opinion might later arise.

The plan is lauded by Department officials as removing the uncertainty which formerly existed as to the Government's attitude in such cases.

Banquet Introduces Academy

Sponsors State Aims of Coast Organization in Addresses to Gathering of 275 Executives, Actors, Technicians

By WILLIAM McCORMACK

West Coast Representative, Motion Picture News

HOLLYWOOD, May 12.—The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences was formally introduced to the industry last night at a banquet held at the Los Angeles Biltmore Hotel.

More than 275 of the most prominent head-liners of the industry including writers, producers, directors, actors and technicians were in attendance. At the conclusion of the banquet over $27,000 was subscribed to the new organization. The amount subscribed represents charter memberships at $100 each. The whole affair went over with a "bang" and from all indications the academy is firmly launched.

Heading the new association is Douglas Fairbanks, as president; Fred Niblo, vice-president, Frank Woods, secretary, and M. C. Levee, treasurer.

The five branches of the producing end of the business will be represented by a board of directors who in turn will work with the above officials. The board of directors include Mary Pickford, Louis B. Mayer and Joseph M. Schenck, representing producers; Douglas Fairbanks, Milton Sills and Conrad Nagel, representing actors; Jeanie MacPherson, Carey Wilson and Joseph M. Farnham, writers; Fred Niblo, John Stahl and Frank Lloyd, directors and Roy Pomeroy, J. A. Ball and Cedric Gibbons, the technicians.

The Academy will work with other existing bodies such as the Hays organization, or with any other movements beneficial to the industry, and will, in addition, encourage, by prizes, scholarships and other means, any move for the improvement of the industry as a whole. Assistance to persons bringing forward improvements in the making of pictures will be recommended by the governing board. The activities of the academy will be centralized in a building which it will eventually erect in the heart of Hollywood.

Fred Niblo, vice-president of the organization, in his address explained that it was Louis B. Mayer who originated the academy idea and that Mayer, Niblo, Fred Beetson and Conrad Nagel later secured the cooperation of other leading figures in the industry to assist in carrying through the idea. Thirty-two meetings were held over a period of four months.

Douglas Fairbanks, president, outlined the purpose of the organization, citing as its prime motive the securing of constructive cooperation between the directors, writers, producers, actors and technicians, and the general advancement of the industry through the exchange of ideas.

The building to be erected for headquarters will house a laboratory and theatre. Here experimental work may be carried on. Problems that confront the industry may be "ironed out" or settled before a board of arbitration.

A plea for cooperation to overcome slurs cast upon the industry was made by Mary Pickford in her address. She said a weekly bulletin may be published and sent to picture fans with this end in view.

What was undoubtedly the most significant thing brought to light in the way of speeches was contained in an unadorned address read by Roy Pomeroy, a technician, of Paramount. He said that in practically every instance, inventions, ideas and improvements for the advancement of motion pictures came came from outside the industry. Because of its importance and the fact that it probably went over the heads of many who were present, Mr. Pomeroy's statement is worthy of emphasis.

Speakers of the evening included: Douglas Fairbanks, Fred Niblo, Conrad Nagel, Joseph M. Schenck, Cecil B. De Mille, Frank Lloyd, Roy Pomeroy, Milton Sills, Carey Wilson, Mary Pickford, Will H. Hays, Louis B. Mayer, and M. C. Levee.

Gore Cites West Coast Expansion Plans

Six or Eight Theatres Planned for Pacific Seaboard, He States, at Portland After Survey

A. L. GORE, vice-president of West Coast Theatres, who is surveying the theatre situation along the Northwest Pacific seaboard, announced this week, in Seattle, that his company will build six, and possibly eight theatres, in the suburban sections of Washington and Oregon, which will run into an approximate total of $2,500,000.

West Coast recently entered the Pacific Northwest through acquisition of the chain of houses operated by Pacific Northwest Theatres, subsidiary of North American Theatres, headed by Frank R. Wilson.

Considerable surprise is expressed locally over the Gore announcement. The theatres, he said, will be of the moderate priced type and will introduce a number of new architectural features. The firm now is building a house opposite the Broadway, which Gore states will be one of the finest of the West Coast chain.

Survey of Astoria now is being made by scouts for the company to determine feasibility of a new theatre there. Theatres in a number of other Pacific Northwest cities are under consideration.

There is to be no change of the managing personnel of Pacific Northwest Theatres, according to Gore, who states that Harry C. Arthur, Jr., will continue to direct activities of the chain.

Portland theatres acquired by West Coast in the Pacific Northwest deal are: Broadway, Liberty, Rivoli, Peoples, Highway and State. The Majestic, closed for remodeling, will be operated by the firm in association with United Artists.

At Spokane, Mr. Gore stated, plans are completed for a 3,000-seat house and a similar theatre is to be erected at Portland. This is in addition to the suburban development planned.

"We have our scouts looking for locations and plan to build wherever we believe a community theatre is needed," he said, indicating that full advantage has not been taken in the theatre business in seaboard states.

Metropolitan Building Co. is active here in selection of sites for proposed theatres. The company was interested heavily in Pacific Northwest Theatres and retains its interest in the merger. University and West Seattle sites are now under consideration.

Gore left here for Tacoma and Portland, where the corporation holds control, to complete building plans there.

New Print Saving Process

Claim of Moore of Washington and Dr. Steele, Who Has Perfected Emulsion Bath

THE Essem Laboratories Company at Washington, D. C., has been formed by Tom Moore, former Washington exhibitor, and Dr. L. L. Steele, who has spent many years in chemical research, to market a process which, they assert, increases the durability of a print five to ten times over its present capacity.

The emulsion bath which coats both sides of the print not only guarantees a retention of pliability, both of them stated yesterday while in New York, but makes prints weather and scratch-proof and gives to the film optical properties which enhance projection values.

"The bath perfected by Dr. Steele," said Moore, "is capable of reducing the fire hazards of regulation prints. We have conducted experiments which prove that the hazardous nature of the ordinary highly-inflammable stock has been reduced four times. The value in the reduction of fire insurance rates is obvious.

"We maintain—and stand ready to prove—that by this new process an added brilliancy and definition are given the print. The application of the emulsion can be made to the screen. Likewise, it can be used for lithographs and lobby displays to give them a long period of service in the face of adverse weather."

Moore said the emulsion will eliminate scratches. In this connection, he asserted a print five years old has been subjected to the test. Not only were scratches removed, he asserted, but broken sprocket holes were mended and the film made suitable for projection.

"Prints to which Perfexit is applied become immune to heat and moisture," Moore added. "Foreign substances which might gather as a print is run through the machine can be removed by soap and water. We have proved to ourselves by experiment that wood alcohol and gasoline tests have no effect. The print can be washed clean and dried with a handkerchief."

Recently at the Rialto in Washington, which Moore formerly operated but which is now under long-term lease to Universal, a print reinforced by this process was run continuously through a projector 89 times and each time was subjected to the light of a high intensity arc. The test was brought to an end, because it was necessary to start the regular program at the theatre.

Nellie Revell to Do Titles for "The Magic Flame"

Nellie Revell, publicist and newspaper woman, was signed this week by Samuel Goldwyn to title his production of circus life for United Artists starring Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky and entitled "The Magic Flame." Miss Revell is qualified to title the picture, Mr. Goldwyn says, because of her five generations of circus background.

Many New Firms Come Into Being in New York State

New companies formed during the past week to engage in the motion picture business in New York state or to operate motion picture theatres, included the following: Burnside Productions, Inc., capitalization not stated, Robert H. Burnside, Elizabeth Moclair, A. M. Wattenberg, New York City; Gowanda Theatre Corporation, Gowanda, $25,000, Myrtle C. Riter, Kenmore; Madeline E. Sager, C. DeForest Cummings, Buffalo; Duo-Art Productions, Inc., $35,000, C. William Morganstern, Anton F. Scibilia, Helen O'Brien, New York City; Opalescent Film, Inc., capitalization not stated, C. Lang Cobb, Sadye Shaw, New York City.

Herrmann N. Holde, Great Hills, S. I.; Boys of "76" Film Corp., $20,000, I. M. Lichtigman, Henry Lederman, A. John Eder, New Lork City; Commander Amusement Corporation, $2,500, Benjamin Rich, Murray Morris, Betty Salzman, New York City; Harmony Pictures Corporation, capitalization not stated, H. Edwin Goldberg, Joseph Russakow, Freda Freeman, New York City; Delanson Community Movies, Inc., $540, Delanson, Raymond Hagadorn, Raymond H. Smith, Frank C. Alexander, Delanson.

Dramagraph Motion Picture Corporation, $600,000, Harry C. Hand, Samuel C. Wood, William M. Stevens, New York City; Erin Pictures Corporation, $100,000, Meyer Bodenstein, New York City; Norma O'Connor, Lillian Langsam, Brooklyn; Pelham Lynton, Inc., $10,000, David F. Sternberg, H. Pelham Lynton, Edward Levy, New York City; Happy Productions, Incorporated, $50,000, Murray Phillips, Frank H. Grey, Florence Lieberman, New York City.

Mary Pickford's "My Best Girl" Soon to Go Into Work

Production activities on the United Artists' lot in Hollywood where Mary Pickford will make "My Best Girl," are beginning to hum as the new Pickford film is scheduled to go into work shortly. One hundred cinematic shop girls have been assigned their respective places in the large department store set that has been constructed in the studio. Sam Taylor will direct "My Best Girl," in which the leading male will be Charles Rogers, who has arrived on the set.

Rumor of U. A. House for St. Louis Current

THE report that United Artists will build a large first run motion picture theatre in St. Louis, Mo., was revived during the past week when it became known that a representative of that organization was in the city to look over prospective sites for the new house. He had with him plans which are said to call for a theatre with a seating capacity of 3,000 persons.

United Artists have two locations for the house under consideration. One is in the Grand boulevard district while the other includes a prominent down-town corner. There is also a possibility that U. A. may purchase a theatre already constructed.

Picture Is More Important than the Picture Industry and a General Appraisal and Analysis is Needed

By Alfred Hustwick

(Editor's Note: The author of this article was until recently supervising film and title editor of the Paramount West Coast studios, and was a member of the Paramount Editorial Staff from 1919 to 1927. He speaks from experience, therefore, and his viewpoint is not that of the outsider.)

IN a recent series of articles I defined the art of the motion picture as "the art of telling a story upon the screen through the medium of photographed action." That definition, inadequate though it may be, is sufficiently broad to serve as the basis of my argument—that the motion picture industry can only continue to grow and prosper by fostering the creative effort upon which its life depends. This would seem to be such an obvious fact that argument would be unnecessary but, on the contrary, it is only dimly realized by motion picture producers themselves and in the ranks of the exhibitors there are not wanting men who lose no opportunity to ridicule the statement that the creation of a motion picture is even faintly related to art in any way. Let me illustrate my point by a brief example. A super-special emerges from Hollywood called, we will suppose, "The Greater Law." It is acclaimed by the trade papers as a "wow." The producer is hailed as a pioneer in the entertainment field, the director is praised for his masterly handling of the subject and the cast is smothered with superlatives commending their respective interpretations of the roles assigned to them. The public receives it with unrestrained applause and the industry is so visibly impressed that a dozen other producers immediately order their studio forces to get busy upon imitations of it. In other words it is a "knockout" and is hailed as proof that motion pictures are getting better every day in every way.

What lies back of this success? A story, yes—and the mental sweat and labor of a score of creative artists whose names are conspicuous by their absence from the advertising and the reviews. John Smith, sitting over his typewriter in a studio cubicle, ignoring his indigestion while his mind visions the scenes which are later to shine with glory on the screen; Bill Brown, in the "art department," designing a dynamic background of scenery; or Henry Robinson, delving into his imagination for costumes, or properties—and so on down the line.

These are the men behind the guns, the "artists" who create "something out of nothing," the folks who make possible the translation of "The Greater Law" from a mere idea into a glorious reality. Every dollar that comes into the box-office, that goes out in studio salaries, or salesmen's commissions, that pays for the advertising in this magazine or otherwise circulates throughout the "industry," is the result of this initial creation of something out of nothing.

The motion picture business is now in its boom days—mergers, consolidations, fierce competition in domestic and foreign markets and feverish activity in the studios. In other words the "business" is going forward. But what of the "art"? Is the percentage of box-office pictures rising? Is the picture, where unaided by "presentations," holding the favor of the public as tenaciously as it did a few years ago? Is the chorus of intelligent criticism of its gaucheries, sloppy sentimentality, false philosophy and exaggeration subsiding?

Today the picture industry is healthy, but can we say as much of the cinema art? A bad picture may be bolstered up with a good jazz orchestra or a shimmy dancer or what not, but is this good business? The motion picture has attained its universal eminence in the entertainment world because of what it is. It succeeded, even in its nickelodeon days, in spite of its surroundings. In its early days it was no more than a filler-in for a vaudeville bill. Since then it has experienced a cycle. It emerged from vaudeville to its own stage and setting—and revolutionized theatre-building. It held its audience with no other assistance than a little appropriate and soothing music. It stood alone for several years—sufficient unto itself. And now it returns to the mixed bill, too often only the weaker part of the bill, a filler-in once more for a vaudeville show.

For five years past I have been trying to throw some light upon a condition within the industry that seems to escape the observation of the many who periodically attempt to tell "what's wrong with the movies." It is a habit of motion picture people

[illegible] while decrying superficial inconsistencies in the industry. My argument, which I have presented to motion picture executives and also in print, is that the art of the motion picture, that is to say, the telling of stories upon the screen, has made practically no progress since "The Birth of a Nation." The "technique" of the movies has, of course, advanced tremendously, but that means little. A great story, inexpensively made and lacking the technical quality of even an average release from a first-rate studio, has frequently "cleaned up," while super-specials that registered almost one hundred per cent in technical perfection have died miserably at the box-office because they lacked "story" and "human interest."

I have pointed out that the motion picture industry turns out a product that involves more co-ordination of art and mechanics and more complicated processes than any other form of manufacturing—and yet this industry is the only industry that has never undertaken a complete survey of its physical ramifications, has never instituted laboratory research to establish the truth or falsity of its traditions and roles, has never produced a worthy textbook from within its own ranks, has never made a real effort to develop experimentation and innovation in its own workshops, and has never formulated its past experience for the guidance of its future. And I have repeatedly advocated a plan whereby the first step may be taken to place the art and the industry upon a really solid foundation of tested knowledge, improved methods and better craftsmanship.

My hat is off to the pioneers who took over this new toy, the movie, and with only borrowed traditions and their own initiative to work upon, built it up from "Hale's Tours" to "The Birth of a Nation." But for Tomorrow we must have a new type of studio worker. The novice must come into the studio with a more rounded technical education than that possessed by the expert of today. Before that can happen we must have means of educating people to be motion picture craftsmen, and before we can acquire those means we must find out what are the fundamentals of motion picture-making. And so, to make a start, we must first institute research to discover what we are doing and why we are doing it. Once we have formulated our past experience into working shape we can go ahead with our task of expanding the motion picture art and teaching its basic principles to the new generation. How shall we go about it? Well, we must first build the bridge between art and business so that a free exchange of ideas may pass over it. And then we must admit that we are not self-sufficient and turn to experts outside of the industry to help us solve our problems.

No'west M. P. T. O. Discusses Plans for Projection School

EXHIBITORS of the Northwest are showing a keen interest in the plans for a school of projection which were outlined at the M. P. T. O. convention. This school will be established at the Dunwoody Industrial Institute of Minneapolis, which is underwriting the experiment for 10,000. Under the present arrangements, the institute, which ranks as one of the finest in the country, will provide accommodations of space and light for the school, while the M. P. T. O. will furnish an instructor, machines, and other needed equipment.

Exhibitors are inclined to feel that this school will accomplish a great deal in turning out more efficient operators, the need for which has been rather badly felt, and especially in the smaller towns. It is also felt that with proper instruction, the damage to films which results from improper handling will be reduced to a great extent. And exhibitors point out the advantage of having a projectionist expert enough to repair his own machine in an emergency.

The school will offer a four months course under the tutelage of an expert. Day and night courses will be offered, and the fee will be $25.

The plan will be put into effect immediately. The idea for the school originated with W. A. Steffes, president of the Northwest M. P. T. O. and Theodore Hays, chairman of the executive board of Finkelstein & Ruben, and was heartily approved by Dr. C. A. Prosser, president of the Dunwoody institute. If the school is a success, local movie men believe that the idea will be adopted all over the country, with resultant benefits not only to the exhibitors, but to the producers, who should save thousands of dollars in the more expert handling of their films.

First National Holds Session at Burbank

Production and Sales Executives, Managers and Field Force Attend; Many Entertainment Features

THE First National annual sales convention, held at the Burbank studios of the company, has a total of 190 men comprising production and sales executives, branch managers and the field force at the sessions held May 19-24. The Eastern delegation left New York City May 15 and, on the way, picked up the Albany and Boston conventions at the former city. Arriving in Chicago the South and Mid-West forces were joined and the aggregation entrained on a special train numbering 14 cars.

The group was greeted on its arrival in Los Angeles by John McCormick, West Coast production manager, who announced that he had arranged many features of entertainment for the edification of the guests. Among these are a rodeo put on by Ken Maynard, a party, with Charlie Murray as master of ceremonies, at the studios, with dancing and special performances of acts from the West Coast theatres, an automobile tour of Los Angeles, Hollywood and Beverly Hills and a barbecue at Gables Beach with Colleen Moore as hostess.

In addition there will be a banquet at the Ambassador Hotel at which the sales force will meet First National stars and players, then a lunch for newspaper people, followed by a screening of the tests made of college men with movie aspirations. It was stated that stops will be made on the trip to give the visitors the opportunity of seeing some of the famous places throughout the country.

Among those attending the convention are:

The home office delegation including Robert Lieber, Chairman of the Board, and Mrs. Lieber; Irving D. Rossheim, Treasurer—Stanley Company, and Mrs. Rossheim; Richard A. Rowland, General Manager of Production; Samuel Spring, Secretary and Treasurer; Ned Marin, Asst. Gen'l Mgr. of Production; Florence L. Strauss, Scenario Editor; Ned E. Depinet, General Sales Manager; A. W. Smith, Jr., Eastern Sales Manager; Stanley W. Hatch, Western Sales Manager; W. E. Callaway, Southern Sales Manager; Chas. M. Steele, Supervisor of Exchanges; Sterling Wilson, Assistant to Mr. Smith; J. W. Kelly, Assistant to Mr. Hatch; Chas. A. Baily, Assistant to Mr. Callaway; C. F. Chandler, Director of Publicity; Robert Hage, Editor of "Contact;" Russell Ball, Official Photographer; Emil Jensen, Representing Joseph M. Schenck; Guy Morgan, Representing Johnnie Hines; Ralph Poucher, Representing the Consolidated Laboratories; D. W. Henderson, Representing the Lesan Advertising Agency; W. R. Rothacker of New York, London and Paris; Charles Skouras of St. Louis; Walter Lindlar, of the exploitation division, is already at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles.

In the Foreign Delegation are the following: H. A. Bandy, Home Office; J. S. Skirboll, Paris, France; Louis Gatte, Paris, France; D. Rossheim, London, England; Rowland Hibbert, Manchester, England; Sofus Berg, Stockholm, Sweden; Svein Aas, Oslo, Norway; John Olsen, Copenhagen, Denmark; Max Stoehr, Zurich, Switzerland; Alex Hague, Bombay, India; Horace T. Clarke, Kobe, Japan; Luther M. Jee, Shanghai, China; Wm. F. Fait, Jr., Mexico City, Mexico.

The delegations from the Eastern Branch Offices include: ALBANY—J. C. Bullwinkel, E. Hochstim, H. C. Bissell; NEW JERSEY—J. C. Vergesslich, S. J. Ullman, M. Schram, Harry Hummell; BOSTON—Thomas B. Spry, A. P. Bibber, Nathan Ross, Ed. J. Anderson, Jack B. Magann, Franklin Vine, Jas. J. Byrne, Frank Scully; NEW YORK—Jules Levy, Fred Meyers, H. Goldman, W. G. Roosevelt, William Venson, Howard Levy, Clive R. Waxman, Gus Solomon; BUFFALO—F. J. A. McCarthy, Edwin C. Walsh, Jas. G. Fater, Max I. Pincus; PHILADELPHIA—W. J. Heenan, W. G. Hansell, F. J. Leonard, W. C. Cook, P. F. Duffy, F. A. Loftus, W. H. Schwalbe; NEW HAVEN—M. H. Kelcher, Joseph Cantor, John Pavone; WASHINGTON—Robert Smeltzer, G. N. Payette, Jr., Fred W. Beiersdorf, F. L. Greenhalgh, W. A. Busch, J. H. Lege.

The Southern Offices will be represented at the convention by these delegations: ATLANTA—C. R. Beacham, Fred M. Jack, Jas. M. Young, Geo. C. Almon, Lewis W. Carter; CHARLOTTE—F. P. Bryan, Dean S. House, R. M. Boovy, A. B. Cheatham; CINCINNATI—Paul E. Krieger, Ralph Kinsler, Albert Shmitken, Jack Covington, Joseph Stickler, John P. Eifert; KANSAS CITY—William Warner, T. O. Byerle, W. A. Burke, Harold L. Cass, R. J. Heft, J. J. McCarthy, R. R. Thompson; LOUISVILLE—Maurice White, Lee W. Moffit, Henry S. Bowman, Maxwell Blick; MEMPHIS—D. P. Rathbone, H. D. Parks, W. G. McCorvey.

CLEVELAND—G. L. Sears, Herbert J. Ochs, Walter Forster, M. A. Mooney, Adolph F. Braeunig, W. J. Brandt, L. F. Weinsz; DALLAS—Leslie Wilkes, A. M. Avery, Geo. M. Blackburn, Geo. E. Welech, H. A. Shaw, R. I. McCoy, R. V. Litsey; INDIANAPOLIS—Floyd Brown, Jos. R. Neger, H. C. Knox, Merrill Moore, Sam A. Galanty; NEW ORLEANS—Lucas Conner, Samuel J. Stockard, Milton C. White; OKLAHOMA CITY—E. D. Brewer, Wm. C. Blackstone, C. H. Hill, W. A. Dolin; PITTSBURGH—R. H. Haines, A. Parke, R. M. Lynch, C. A. Wolte, Jos. P. Lefko, H. P. Underwood; ST. LOUIS—Harry Weiss, James Hill, Harry L. Pitner, Lester Bona, B. J. Derby.

The men from the six Western Offices and two Canadian Offices will arrive in Los Angeles Wednesday, May 18th, at 8:30 A. M. This group includes: DENVER—J. H. Ashby, R. J. Morrison, B. L. Reynolds, Tom Wickham, Floyd Millett, H. T. Nolan; LOS ANGELES— N. H. Brewer, A. S. Bailey, C. E. Buchman, George Bourke; PORTLAND—Al Oxtoby, B. R. Keller, C. S. Edwards, Jr.; SALT LAKE CITY—Wm. F. Gordon, Claude Hawkes, Vete Stewart, John J. Harrington; SAN FRANCISCO—Chas. H. Muehlman, F. Howard Butler, Newton Levi, Gerald Hardy; SEATTLE— J. G. Bower, T. J. Gibbons, Clarence M. Hill, H. W. Boehme; CALGARY—E. H. Teel, T. N. Davey; VANCOUVER—J. E. Archer, J. I. Foy; also I. O. Lukan, Western District Manager.

The remaining Western Office delegations going on the special train are: CHICAGO—Carl M. Leserman, J. N. Howland, Jack M. Schwartz, George Taif, R. C. Herman, T. R. Gilliam, Ralph R. Bradford, Alex Halperin, Walter Philippsthal; DES MOINES—E. J. Tilton, Lou Elman, R. W. Crawford, W. C. Finter, C. A. Pratt; DETROIT—F. E. North, Walter B. Collins, S. D. Chapman, Ralph J. Elliott, Fred Wilson; MILWAUKEE—L. J. McCarthy, Clarence K. Olson, W. R. Walsh, Elmer Huhnke; MINNEAPOLIS—Thomas A. Burke, Art Anderson, Carl Michel, E. W. Jensen, J. G. Heywood, L. E. Davis, W. H. Johnson; OMAHA—W. C. Brimmer, B. J. McCarthy, W. Riddle, I. M. Weiner; also R. C. Seery, Central District Manager.

The men from the Canadian Offices on board the special train are: MONTREAL—A. Gorman, J. H. Briggs; SAINT JOHN—W. A. Owens, Gerald M. Hoyt; TORONTO—R. S. Bell, H. Paynter, W. R. Mitchell, Wm. J. Melody, R. Elliott; WINNIPEG—M. Isman and G. A. Matthews.

Blumenfeld Chain Expands Sacramento Holdings

The North Sacramento theatre operated by Mr. Lockhoff, located on the main highway between Sacramento and Roseville, came into the Blumenfeld possession May 1st. It will eventually be replaced by a new and modern building. Contracts have been signed with William Garren, architect and supervising building contractor, for a new theatre in Allendale, which will be modern in every particular as to stage and other facilities.

The last deal to come under the Blumenfeld chain is a new house in Mill Valley. The papers covering this deal have been signed, and again William Garren will be the architect and supervising builder. The list of theatres under the Blumenfeld banner is very rapidly crowding the two dozen mark.

Three Carolina Theatres Due for Premier

Three new houses are to open within the next few months in North Carolina: the new Carolina Theatre at Greensboro being the largest, while another at Fayetteville is said to be one of the best theatres in the state, and still another at Chapel Hill is receiving favorable mention. All are expected to be in operation by September.

Thirty Fox First Runs By 1929

Statement of President to Branch Managers in Session at Atlantic City; Also Centering Small Town Field

WILLIAM FOX informed branch managers, in convention last week at Atlantic City, that, by 1929, the company will have in operation thirty first run houses with a five thousand seating capacity per theatre. In his address, which was the highlight of the convention, Mr. Fox stated:

"We are not seeking battle. Our theatre plans are not to be construed as an invasion of the exhibition field, because they are not. Where we have had ample representation, we will not build. Where our friends are to be found, we will not build.

In this talk Mr. Fox described his idea of the theatre of the future. He pointed out that playhouses that were considered large several years ago were now deemed small and inadequate owing to the amazing increase in the popularity of the motion picture, which he proudly classified as America's leading amusement.

"The theatre of the future," he said, "will have to be constructed along scientific and physical proportions to incorporate maximum facilities for sight and hearing. The number of motion picture theatre goers in this country has been growing constantly until now it is estimated at 22,000,000 per week. With 78,000,000 more prospects to draw from our future expansion, possibilities are inconceivable at this stage. With such a vast field to work in, it is my contention that the larger sized theatres of the future will contain not less than 5,000 seats."

The sales convention, scheduled to end on Saturday evening, May 14, was prolonged three extra days, the odd sessions being held in New York City at the Fox headquarters. This was due to the showing of some of the product scheduled for the new season which included "7th Heaven" and "Sunrise," which were enthusiastically received.

In addition to presiding over the national gathering, general sales manager James R. Grainger sat in on every session of the Eastern regional meeting which was held in the Hotel Astor, New York City. He praised the work of Winfield R. Sheehan, who had made possible the showing of completed productions scheduled for next season's release.

The Atlantic City gathering was concluded with a beefsteak dinner at the Hotel Ambassador, where the sessions were held. In New York the managers were shown Movietone at the Home Office on Sunday afternoon. Sunday night those who had not seen "What Price Glory" attended a performance of that screen production at the Sam H. Harris Theatre. On Monday they visited the Roxy. Business sessions were held at the Home Office.

Fox this week closed a deal for a site in Gloversville, New York, on which will be erected a two thousand-seat theatre. This is the first time the company has entered the theatre field in a small town. Another interesting angle on the situation is the fact that Gloversville and the town of Johnston adjoining are the headquarters of the Schine circuit, which is allied with Universal Chain Theatres. The Fox organization points to this new proposed theatre as another definite indication that it does not intend to be crowded out of any situation where it feels its product has not been securing adequate representation.

The Gloversville site is a corner plot bordering on West Fulton and North School Sts. The proposed building will house a theatre and stores and will occupy a plot 116 by 231 ft.

Wanted---A Business Foundation

The following statement of my main argument is from a memorandum prepared two years ago and included in my recent series of articles in The Film Spectator (Motion Pictures—today and Tomorrow):

"Victor O. Freeburg, in his 'Art of Photoplay Making,' says 'The art need of the world is permanent results at any cost by the continual test of discriminating critical taste . . . the problem is to reconcile commercial needs with artistic ideals.'"

This is as true today as it was in 1917 when Freeburg's book was written. Ergo, any plan that may be suggested for the revivification of the motion picture art must be commercially practical and ultimately profitable to the motion picture producers.

The plan which I have to offer is both. It calls for the expenditure of a negligible sum to put it in working order and, if given an even chance to accomplish results, it will pay huge dividends on that investment after a few months of operation. Briefly summarized, the chief features of this plan are as follows:

(1) The establishment of a bureau of research in each large studio to survey the art of motion picture making from its inception, to formulate the knowledge and technique already developed and to carry on experimentation for the improvement of writing, directing, photography, acting, costuming, set-building, and all the other activities related to the creation of a motion picture.

(2) The establishment of relations between the studio and the universities, through the bureau referred to, which will lead to a wider range of study, in the colleges, of the arts and sciences intimately related to motion pictures. Through this relationship the colleges will have access to the equipment of the studios in a practical way, and will be able to extend the scope of their study of motion pictures, both as an art and as an industry, to the ultimate benefit of both. In return the colleges will be able to train motion picture artists to take the place of the present workers who have neither the time, inclination nor ability to train anybody.

(3) Compulsory classes in pictorial composition and the fundamentals of motion picture making for all beginners now entering the production departments of the studios. More advanced classes in subjects related to production for writers, directors, cameramen and others of experience who are sufficiently interested in their work to avail themselves of what we might call post-graduate studies. These classes to be conducted by the bureau in conjunction with the colleges—possibly through an exchange of lectures.

The bureau will first devote itself to the task of translating our accumulated experience in picture making from an amorphous mass of scattered ideas into coherent, indexed and informative material upon which to base practical development in the various phases of production.

It will establish and maintain contact with the work being done by the universities and individuals in their study of the motion picture art and the technical branches of motion picture making.

The practical value of the bureau to the production department of the studio will come, within a short time, from its ability to function as an advisory and consulting body for all studio departments, furnishing the latter with suggestions and new data, working out problems referred to it by departments which, being busily engaged in the actual manufacture of pictures, have neither funds, equipment nor time for experimentation.

To it the writer, director, actor, cameraman, designer, or any other artist or technician, could take his half-formed theories, his untried ideas and his wavering decisions and find sympathetic understanding and assistance. Given the right personnel the bureau would be a depository of knowledge to which all honest workers would contribute and from which they would take out what they needed.

Thousands of young men and women, now going through college, are eager to learn the fundamentals of the craft. The best they can find in the curricula of their schools is a so-called "course" in "scenario writing" or, possibly, a cut-and-dried course in picture-making based upon methods that have already been discarded in every first-class studio. It remains for the first motion picture executive, having the power and the vision to inaugurate the plan suggested, to earn for himself the credit of being the pioneer in a move that would place the art of the motion picture upon a permanent foundation and insure for the industry an enduring place.

Columbia Sales Session Held in New York

Product for Coming Season Discussed During Four Day Meet; Selling Policy Outlined

A FOUR-DAY product and sales policy conferences of Columbia Pictures production and sales executives, branch managers and the salesmen of the Eastern division, was held last week in New York City. The highlight of the convention was the announcement by Joe Brandt, president of Columbia, that the output would be increased from 24 to 30 features this year, the largest program offered by the company in its eight years of existence.

Mr. Brandt attended all the sessions over which Claude Macgowan, assistant treasurer, presided and addresses were made by Carl Weeks, personal contact man, Alex Moss, advertising and publicity director, and Rube Jackter, assistant to Mr. Macgowan. Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of production, and Jack Cohn, treasurer, were unable to attend the convention because of preparations for production on the new program. Following the business sessions the visiting managers and salesmen were entertained in the evening; on Wednesday evening the group attended a performance of "Chicago," Thursday they saw the professional boxing matches and on Friday a performance of "Broadway."

Among the visitors were: A. W. Bowman, manager of the Detroit exchange; William Stanton, William Smith, manager at Pittsburg; Harry Wiener, manager of the Philadelphia office, who came with four of the most important salesmen on his staff; Frank Shepherd, James Flynn, Sidney Sugarman and Lester Wurtle; W. G. Dutton, manager of the Washington exchange and O. D. Weems, representative in the Baltimore territory.

New Chicago Class House

Marks Brothers Plan 5100 Seat Theatre for South Side District; Another of 3000 Capacity

AN invasion in the heart of the Chicago south side amusement district is planned by Marks Brothers, according to President Louis L. Marks, who announces that his firm will erect a five thousand, one hundred-seat theatre on a location within a stone's throw from 63rd and Cottage Grove Avenue. While Mr. Marks has not given out the exact location, he states that he will do so within ten days and that the razing of buildings on this property will be started within sixty to ninety days.

This announcement has created considerable interest in Chicago motion picture circles, as it has been reported for sometime past that Andrew Karzas would erect a theatre of similar size on the site of the old Woodlawn, and that negotiations were pending between Mr. Karzas and a leading theatre operating company for the property, with a view, it was said, to prevent the building of another big house in this locality, which is close to Balaban & Katz's Tivoli, the Tower, and other large theatres.

Levy & Klein are the architects who are said to be completing plans and specifications for the new Marks Brothers' theatre, which will, in part, duplicate their handsome Marbro Theatre on west Madison Street, which is scheduled to open the latter part of this month.

Marks Brothers are also planning the erection of a theatre of Arabian design, on Milwaukee Avenue, a block west of Ashland. The razing of buildings to make way for this structure has already started and building is expected to begin in thirty days.

This will be a three thousand-seat house and will be named the Araby.

Marks Brothers Theatres, Inc., is headed by Louis L. Marks and Meyer S. Marks, vice-president and general manager. These men have been pioneers of Chicago's movie history, but it is only within the last two years that they have entered the de luxe field, in which they have made rapid strides.

Publix-Saenger Absorbs Salisbury Capitol

PUBLIX-SAENGER Theatres of North Carolina has closed a deal whereby that company will take over from J. M. Davis, the Capitol Theatre of Salisbury, N. C., on June 1st, according to an official announcement by H. F. Kincey, general manager of Publix-Saenger Theatres of North Carolina, whose headquarters' offices are located in Greensboro, N. C.

The acquisition of the Davis house by the Publix-Saenger interests is the seventeenth house in the chain.

Several months ago, when the possibilities of further expansion in North Carolina favored such an affiliation, the prime powers in Piedmont Theatres, Inc., joined with Publix-Saenger and formed Publix-Saenger Theatres of North Carolina. Since that time several important acquisitions have been announced, and it is expected that the program of expansion will continue.

A Correction

Through oversight, the name of W. F. Rodgers was omitted from the list of those attending the M-G-M convention in the advance story printed last week. Mr. Rodgers is Eastern Sales Manager of the company.

S. L. Bernstein, English Theatre Man, to Pay Visit

A visit to New York City from one of New England's enterprising theatre men, is due within a week or so, as on Thursday, May 18, Sidney L. Bernstein, head of the Bernstein Theatres controlling ten houses in Great Britain, sailed on the Olympic for the purpose of viewing some of the large American theatres including the Paramount and the Roxy. Whilst on his brief trip he will make his residence at the Plaza Hotel, New York City.

Mr. Bernstein is the director of Automaticket and the Kinematograph Equipment Company, Limited, in England. He is a member of the general council of Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association and is also on the committee dealing with the Quota Film Bill and is a leader in the movement against blind booking. His company, Bernstein Theatres, has opened two new theatres this year, and is building two others which will open in September. The Lewisham Hippodrome, seating over 3,500, has also been taken over by Bernstein Theatres.

Northwest T. O. Decide to Hold '28 Meet in Duluth

Duluth exhibitors are elated over the fact that the Northwest M.P.T.O., now the Theatre Owners of the Northwest, Inc., decided to hold their 1928 annual convention in Duluth. The convention has been held, as a rule, in Minneapolis, but it was transferred to St. Paul this year, and the change proved so successful, that the delegates decided to favor Duluth with a visit in 1928. Efforts to bring the convention to Minneapolis and Valley City failed. Exhibitors who are credited with the successful effort to bring the convention to Duluth are J. B. Clinton, Duluth; Harvey Buchanan and Roy McMinn of Superior, Wis., and Emerson McMinn of Virginia, Minn.

W. E. Haskell, Inventor of Organ Equipment, Dies

William Edward Haskell, aged 61, inventor of much of the equipment used in pipe organs in motion picture theatres and for many years superintendent of the Estey Organ Co. plant, died at his home in Brattleboro, Vt., Tuesday. He lectured extensively on music and the organ in this country and abroad and was a member of many fraternal, musical and social organizations. He started learning the organ building trade in Philadelphia and prior to taking charge of the Estey plant had held office in many other organ companies.

Lucille Ogden; Huvila, Inc., conduct theatres, capital $25,000, incorporators, Matti Kunsela, John Kataja and Tolvos E. Kyllonen.

Two-Forty-Three From M-G-M

Program for 1927-28 Comprises 58 Features and Specials, 81 Short Subjects and 104 Issues of News Reel

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S program of releases for the 1927-28 season, as outlined by Marcus Loew, president of the company, consists of 58 features and special productions, 81 short subjects and 104 issues of the M-G-M news reel. The company will be able to offer a range of product covering every field of public interest, states Mr. Loew.

Following is a summary of the feature and special productions scheduled for release: "The Big Parade" and "Ben Hur" head the list of attractions and following are "Annie Laurie," completed and playing an engagement at the Embassy theatre, New York City, Lillian Gish starred and Norman Kerry supporting, directed by John Robertson; "The Garden of Allah," now being completed for Metro-Goldwyn by Rex Ingram at the Nice studios; and "Africa," from the novel of Robert Hichens with Alice Terry and Ivan Petrovich and a cast of foreign players; "The Crowd" is King Vidor's latest with James Murray and Eleanor Boardman in the leading roles and Bert Roach, Dorothy Sebastian and Estelle Clark in the cast.

Next on the list is "The Cossacks," a screen version of Tolstoi's novel, in which John Gilbert will be starred; the continuity is being prepared by Dorothy Farnum; "Rose Marie," a picturization of the stage play will be directed by Will Nigh and Renee Adoree will be featured; "Old Heidelberg," with Ramon Novarro and Norma Shearer co-starred under direction of Ernst Lubitsch; Johnny Mack Brown will have a minor role; "The Trail of '98," an adaptation of Robert W. Service's story, which Clarence Brown will direct with Dolores Del Rio and Ralph Forbes in the leading roles and Polly Moran in support.

"The Glory Diggers," a story of the building of the Panama Canal prepared by Laurence Stallings; Lillian Gish in "The Wind," based on Dorothy Scarborough's novel of the Texas storm country with Victor Seastrom directing. Further announcements as to these specials will be made shortly.

According to tentative plans Lon Chaney will appear in "The Hypnotist," and a story called "Hate," an adaptation of Goston Leroux's French prize story "Cheri Bibi." John Gilbert will appear in a newspaper story written expressly for him by Monta Bell called "Fires of Youth" and in "None But the Brave," based on Ludwig Wolff's story "War in the Dark." Several other vehicles are under consideration for Gilbert.

Three pictures are definitely planned for Greta Garbo for next season. They are "Love," based on Tolstoi's novel, "Anna Karenina," the next "The Divine Women," with the third yet to be announced. Dorothy Sebastian will be seen in the cast of "Love," which will be directed by Dmitri Buchowetzki.

Marion Davies is starred in "Quality Street," now in production under direction of Sidney Franklin, with Conrad Nagel, Helen Jerome Eddy, Flora Finch, Kate Price, Margaret Seddon and Marcelle Corday in the supporting cast. Hans Kraely and Albert Lewin wrote the scenario. Another is "Dumb Dora," an adaptation of the cartoon strip.

William Haines will be seen in two original stories, "The Smart Aleck," a story of the prize ring by F. Hugh Herbert and Florence Ryerson; and "West Point," also an adaptation of Vincent Lawrence's stage comedy "Spring Fever," which will be made under the same title with Edward Sedgwick directing. Ramon Navarro is scheduled for "The Prince of Graustark," George Barr McCutcheon's story.

Three Norma Shearer vehicles are scheduled: "The Bridal Night," "The Song of Love," an original screen drama by Dorothy Farnum, based on the life of Jenny Lind, and "The Early Bird." Jackie Coogan is at present completing production of "The Bugle Call," made under the direction of Edward Sedgwick with Claire Windsor, Herbert Rawlinson, Tom O'Brien, Sara Padden and Harry Todd in the supporting cast. Following this will be "Buttons," a sea story by George Hill.

Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle are co-starred in an original story by F. Hugh Herbert and Florence Ryerson titled "Adam and Evil;" they will follow with "Slightly Scarlet," also an original and another film to be announced soon. Owen Lee and Roy D'Arcy have supporting roles in "Adam and Evil." There will be three productions with the team of Karl Dane and George Arthur, details of which will be given shortly.

"The Thirteenth Hour," starring Bonaparte, the new dog star, is now being directed by Chester Franklin with a cast including Lionel Barrymore, Jacqueline Gadsden, Charles Delaney and Polly Moran. Franklin and Douglas Furber wrote the story. Bonaparte is scheduled for another production not yet chosen.

Other specials include "Napoleon," the French Film produced abroad, to be released throughout the world by M-G-M: "Body and Soul," directed by Reginald Barker, with Aileen Pringle, Norman Kerry and Lionel Barrymore featured: "Mademoiselle from Armentiers," another foreign picture. "In Old Kentucky," an adaptation of Frank Dazey's play which John M. Stahl will direct; "From Nine to Nine," a story by Leo Perutz which F. W. Murnau is scheduled to direct. A Cosmopolitan production "Becky," directed by John McCarthy with Sally O'Neil and Owen Moore in two of the principal roles; "Twelve Miles Out," John Gilbert starred and Bert Roach in support.

Comedies, Oddities, Technicolor Films in M-G-M Short List

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S short subject program is divided in four divisions. First is 50 Hal Roach pictures divided as follows: ten two-reel Westerns, produced under direction of Louis Gasnier, ten Max Davidson character comedies under Leo McCarey's direction, ten All-Star comedies directed by Fred Guiol, players including Stan Laurel, Jimmy Finlayson, Viola Richard, Martha Sleeper, Oliver Hardy and Lupe Velez; ten comedies starring Charley Chase, and ten Our Gang comedies directed and supervised by Robert McGowan, assisted by Anthony Mack and Robert Oelze.

The second division is the M-G-M news reel of 104 issues annually which will be produced by the Hearst organization. Two editions will be published, one in New York, the other in Paris with an interchange of news between the two centers. According to its sponsors the news reel will cover local, sectional, national and international events. E. B. Hatrick, general manager in the East for Cosmopolitan Productions, is now in Europe arranging plans for the complete foreign distribution of the reel.

The Third division is made up of six two-reel productions in Technicolor dealing with dramatic incidents from history such as the making of the first flag by Betsy Ross and such historic figures as Napoleon and Buffalo Bill.

Fourth division comprises the 25 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Oddities averaging about 750 feet each produced by Ufa and edited and titled by Major Edward Bowes. They have been made over a long period of time by expeditions sent out for this one purpose, it is said.

Hartford Exhibitors Complain to Police Commission

Strenuous objection has been raised by motion picture theatre managers of Hartford, Conn., to the tactics of the police in enforcing laws against admitting children under 14 years to performances unless accompanied by adults. They also object to the police rule which requires an "adult" to be 21 years of age while the law allows motor operators' licenses to be issued to those who are 16 years of age.

As a result of united protest, the police commission gave the managers a hearing, at which Joseph Walsh, manager of the Rialto Theatre, speaking for the group, charged that a policewoman was in the habit of walking up and down the aisles during performances questioning children and disturbing the shows and that the policewoman was in the habit of issuing orders to police officers regularly attached to the theatres.

Grauman's Chinese Theatre Opens With Big Group of Notables Present

By WILLIAM McCORMACK

West Coast Representative, Motion Picture News

HOLLYWOOD, May 18.—With "The King of Kings" as the film attraction, and a big group of notables present, Sid Grauman's Chinese Theatre opened tonight.

Will H. Hays was present, and the master of ceremonies was D. W. Griffith. All the screen luminaries of Hollywood were there.

It was a gala opening, one of the most colorful in the industry's history. Days before the house opened, every ticket was sold with $11 as top price.

As already told in detail in The News by William A. Johnston, who personally viewed the theatre on his recent trip to the Coast, this photoplay palace is probably the most unique in the world, and is atmospheric to the nth degree.

Fred Niblo introduced Mr. Griffith as master of ceremonies; and the latter then presented Mr. Hays to the audience. The show started by the pressing of a button by Mary Pickford.

M. P. T. O. A. Convention To Discuss Overbuilding

Administrative Committee Meets in New York to Map Out Program for Columbus Sessions

THE eighth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to be held at Columbus in June, will take up overseating and overbuilding in many cities as a problem for a constructive solution.

This topic will be part of the Columbus program which was mapped out by the Administrative Committee at a meeting in New York this week. The meeting was attended by the following members of the committee: Joseph M. Seider, Nathan Yamins, J. J. Harwood and M. E. Comerford. In attendance also were E. M. Fay, R. F. Woodhull, P. J. Wood, William M. James and M. J. O'Toole.

Mr. Harwood, chairman of the convention committee, and Mr. Wood, business manager of the Ohio unit, told of arrangements for the national gathering.

The convention will be preceded on Monday, June 6, by a golf tournament, for which a number of prizes have been offered including cups donated by Motion Picture News, Film Daily and Exhibitors' Herald; a platinum wrist watch by Hotel Deshler, Columbus; and a bag of golf sticks by William M. James, president of the Ohio organization.

At the convention banquet speeches will be made by a number of prominent men, including Governor Vic Donahey, of Ohio; Nicholas Longworth, Speaker of the House at Washington; S. L. Rothafel; Harry Reichenbach; William James; and National President Woodhull. Convention business sessions will be held June 7-9.

Spanish Firm to Produce

M. De Miguel, Distributor, in America to Lay Plans for Studio Unit in Barcelona

SPAIN, the country in Europe which most nearly approximates California in climate and backgrounds, will be placed on the production map the coming year, according to plans now being formulated by M. De Miguel, leading Spanish film distributor and head of La Aristocracia del Film, who is in New York to open an office and line up his production measures.

He will utilize Spanish stories, backgrounds and players, aided by the best American technical experts, and will produce for the Latin-American and Spanish-speaking countries.

Mr. De Miguel plans to remain in America for several months, studying methods and resources necessary. He was in New York for some time a year ago, laying the preliminary ground-work for this move.

Fox' "7th Heaven" Opens in N. Y. May 25

THE Fox production "7th Heaven" will have its New York premiere on Wednesday evening, May 25 at the Sam H. Harris theatre, New York City. The picture is now running at the Carthay Circle theatre, Los Angeles, where it opened on May sixth.

In and Out of Town

VICE-PRESIDENT BUDD ROGERS of Lumas Films Corporation returned to the Lumas home office this week after a trip lasting one month to exchange centers as far West as Denver and as far South as Dallas. He returned earlier than expected to relieve Sam Sax of the business of the New York branch. Mr. Sax is leaving for the Coast immediately to start work on the series of fourteen forthcoming Gotham productions.

JESSE J. GOLDBERG, president of First Division Distributors, Inc., arrived in New York last week but left again this week to return to Los Angeles. While enroute to his destination he will visit his territorial distributors in key cities. After two weeks in Los Angeles, to be spent in conference with I. E. Chadwick, he will return to the home office in New York, where he will make his permanent headquarters.

Columbia Will Distribute "Through Darkest Africa"

Columbia Pictures has acquired the rights to distribute "Through Darkest Africa," the feature which recently was shown at the B. S. Moss Cameo in New York City. It was produced by Colonel and Mrs. Harry Eustace, who, accompanied by only a few natives, spent four years in the African Congo discovering and photographing a specimen of the rare white rhinoceros. The feature has been distributed from the Big Three exchange but now will be handled nationally through Colombia's exchanges.

First Nat'l's College Tour in Search of Talent Ended

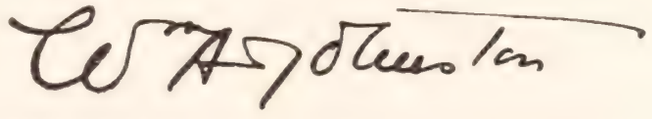
First National, in association with College Humor, has completed its tour of the American colleges and universities in search of talent among the young men students. The tour of the 33 institutions of learning was remarkably successful, there being 2,528 entrants at ten colleges alone. A limited number of men will be selected out of this total who will be given try-outs at the Burbank studio. The actual screen acting tests will be concluded in time for them to resume their college work at the opening of the fall semester.

Warner Bros. Now Sole Vitaphone Owners

FINAL negotiations were concluded on May 19, whereby Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., become 100 per cent owners of the Vitaphone Corporation, according to a statement issued by H. M. Warner. The deal was concluded by the purchase of a 30 per cent interest heretofore held by Walter J. Rich.

Mr. Rich resigned as president and director of the Vitaphone Corporation and his son, Eugene C. C. Rich, also resigned as a director. H. M. Warner was elected president of the Vitaphone Corporation and J. L. Warner was elected a vice-president.

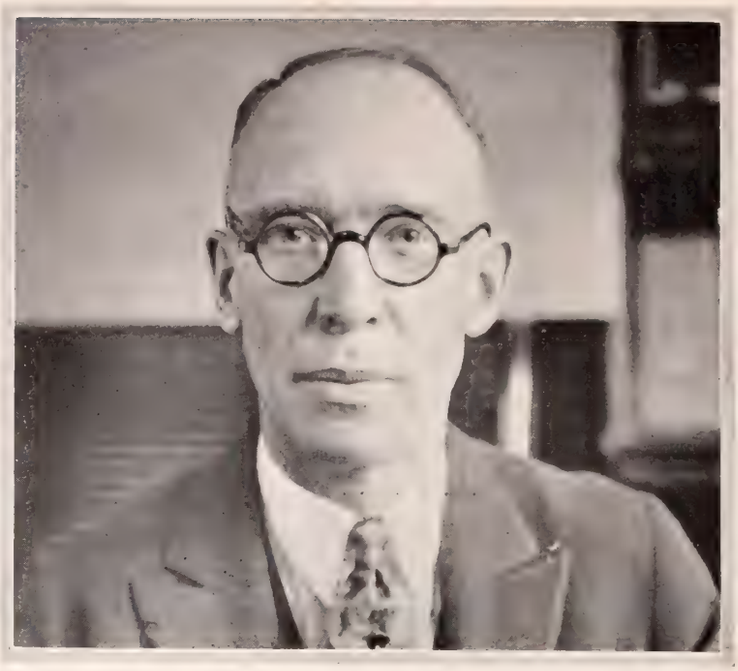
The directors of the Vitaphone Corporation now are: H. M. Warner, Albert L. Warner, Sam Warner, J. L. Warner and Waddill Catchings of Goldman, Sachs and Company.



Short Feature Service Guide

MANY enthusiastic expressions of opinion have been made as a result of the inaugural number of The Short Feature Service Guide, published last month in The News. Producers and distributors of short features have been gratified at this marked recognition of their importance in the scheme of things; exhibitors have found it of interest and value.

By making this a once-a-month feature, and placing the weekly news matter dealing with short subjects in the regular news pages, we are trying to make this department a forum where all branches of the industry may speak freely, frankly and helpfully on short feature problems.



It is not a publicity section to puff the product of a particular company, nor is it a field for the personal glorification of leading figures in the industry. So far as humanly possible, it will present only stories with an idea, a purpose—Stories that are interesting for their own sake, and that will aid the exhibitor in choosing and merchandising his short features, leading to a better understanding of mutual problems.

In this issue a new development in the newsreel field is weighed impartially; a manufacturer tells, for the first time, his side of a national exploitation tie-up; a leading Western exhibitor speaks plainly on public apathy toward short features and suggests a means of overcoming it; a producer of comedies acknowledges his obligation to put exploitation values ready-made into his product, rather than leave it all to the individual exhibitor; a vice-president in charge of distribution tells why his company distributes only short features with a comedy angle; a sales executive tells of the rising trend in short feature production and what brought it about; a nationally famous exhibitor predicts the return of the two-reel drama. Such things we believe to be vitally interesting to everyone in this industry, and in keeping with the forward policy adopted by Motion Picture News.

Why Not a Laugh Year?

Says C. P. Scates, of the American, Butte, Laugh Month Prize Winner

C. P. Scates, Butte, Mont., exhibitor, winner of one of the Laugh Month prizes, who sees need for year around effort

TO really give the short subject field the importance and prominence it deserves, instead of a Laugh Month, a Laugh Year is necessary. In my experience in the show business which has extended over a considerable period of time, the reaction of the public to short subjects is peculiar to say the least.

Short subjects seem to be taken for granted by the public in the same manner in which such necessities as the telephone, etc., are. Patrons come to my theatre expecting to see a good comedy, a news reel, and other entertaining features of this nature, but I find that if I arrange an unusually interesting program of shorts with an average or weak feature, my competitor gets the business with a strong feature and no attempt made to bolster up the short subject entertainment.

It is true, particularly in the case of news reels, that the public takes a very decided interest but the absence or presence of a news reel will not effect attendance to any degree, provided the features are of standard exhibition value.

When preparing for our Komedy Karnival which we ran last January, I did not have the prize offered by the National Laugh Month Committee in mind. An entire short subject program had never, to my knowledge, been offered to Butte people and I was anxious to see what effect it might have. We ran it under unusual weather conditions and the response was very gratifying. I am sure that it, as well as like efforts we may use at this house, have helped to stabilize our business but I cannot make myself believe that it had any marked effect, possibly because not done often enough.

After all, the feature is the thing, and I know of no theatre manager with courage enough to blaze the trail to give the short subject the prominence it undoubtedly deserves by sufficiently featuring these important adjuncts to motion picture entertainment.

My own idea is that the short subject producers as well as exhibitors, at least those of the more progressive type, would benefit if a more continuous campaign were made with actual helps in exploitation ideas, such as the All Comedy Circus sponsored by Pathe. It would take time and cost money of course. It does to educate anything or anyone, but if the short subject people would keep a man on the road, visiting exhibitors with a campaign of this nature outlined completely, pounding on this one idea, I believe that permanent results would be felt where the Laugh Month idea is too occasional.

Specifically, I mean the sending out of a competent man—a specialist—to take up the work where the salesman left off, carrying with him complete campaigns that have already been put over successfully and enhanced by any suggestions by exploitation departments of the short subject producers.

The Eye-and-Ear Newsreel

By L. C. MOEN

WILL the newsreel acquire a voice? Will the topical film prove the greatest field for the talking picture, or synchronized sound film? There are those who believe it will, and although only one company is actually taking steps to produce a talking news weekly the sharp competition which will come about in this field this fall with six newsreels on the market is very likely to bring about a further extension of the idea.

Dr. Lee De Forest foreshadowed this several years ago when he used Phonofilm to reproduce a number of political addresses. The art had not then reached its present stage of development, however, and the idea went no further at the time. Those numbers, too, were merely the same type of studio recording used for musical and vocal selections.

The first substantial advance came recently when the Fox-Case group successfully made a Movietone recording in the open air, the subject being a review of troops at West Point on the occasion of the 125th anniversary of that institution. This was played at the Roxy theatre in New York shortly after, and created a furore of interest on the part of press and public alike.

Although no formal announcement has been forthcoming, it is understood that Fox News plans to extend this to cover a wide range of subjects. A portable recording unit is now touring Europe, recording celebrities, Mussolini being one of those to step before the camera.

Just what action the other newsreels will take is not known. With the sharp competition coming it is not unlikely that one or more of them will take some step to meet this.

Several processes are available for this purpose. A tie-up with Warner would make Vitaphone available, although the sold apparatus for recording would probably be too cumbersome for many types of newsreel work. The De Forest Phonofilm is also being made available, and should the new tie-up with Pathé-Erpi radio group result in a considerable number of theatre installations, this would offer a prospect for another talking reel.

Famous, of course, has available the G. E. Photophone, still in the experimental stage. In addition to these, at least one other process is fully developed and is now negotiating with a leading national distributor who happens also to make a leading newsreel.

The chief problem, naturally, will be to get a sufficient number of theatres equipped to show these, before the talking newsreel can come into wide use.

A Balanced Program Versus The Double Feature

As Outlined to E. G. Johnston

By DAVID J. LUSTIG

THE survey of the double feature situation made by reports from twenty-six exchange centres was published in the April 15 issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS and revealed that the use of the added feature was decidedly on the increase.

It is not too easy to predict at this time just what damage will accrue to programs of the future by the policy of following the line of least resistance in facing competitive situations with opposition of this nature.

In view of all this, however, it is interesting to note what a well known circuit theatre executive of New York City, and one of his successful managers think of the added feature; what they think of its possibilities for drawing and holding trade and what methods they use in combating opposition of this kind. We allude to Charles Steiner of the Delancey-Clinton Corporation, and Davis J. Lustig, the latter manager of the Apollo Theatre.

Almost in the shadows of the Williamsburg Bridge in the heart of New York's East Side where Delancey and Clinton streets meet, stands the Apollo, one of the newer and better type of de luxe neighborhood theatres. It is flanked on all sides with a variety of theatrical opposition—legitimate shows, vaudeville, burlesque, and vaudeville and pictures, not forgetting the numerous smaller shows designated as the "shootin' gallery;" but, this house, with the occasional playing off of an extra picture, has never resorted to the use of the double feature under Mr. Lustig's management to meet the strong competition of neighboring theatres. Furthermore, it is a fact that since he took charge of the Apollo, receipts have been the largest in its history.

Now let us see what kind of a program Mr. Lustig has used in order to make this possible.

The average Apollo program consists of a feature length picture, a two reel short feature, a one or two reel comedy and news reel. In addition, novelty entertainment such as "Opportunity Contests," "Cabaret Nite" and "Surprise Nite" are run approximately three times a week, preferably Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays.

We asked Lustig for examples of what he considered a well balanced program as evidenced by audience reaction:

"Harking back several months to the time when I opened the Hollywood and Mecca theatres of this chain, it seems to me that the attractions booked for these premieres occasioned more favorable comment than any others I can remember. At the Hollywood, we used Universal's 'Phantom of the Opera,' Educational's 'Voice of the Nightingale,' (the latter to soften melodrama in the 'Phantom'), and followed these with a newsreel. For the Mecca, Paramount's 'Fashions for Women,' Educational's 'Vision' and a two reel Lloyd Hamilton comedy, closing with a single reel comedy. Of course, on these nights, the usual dedicatory ceremonies also filled part of the bill."

Shifting his conversation to the use of the added feature attraction, Lustig said:

"In my estimation, based on part experience, the double feature bill is an evil and should be relegated to the ash heap, and the sooner every exhibitor realizes this for a fact, the better!

"Fair fighting lends zest to the motion picture business or any other. Competitive bartering and above-board business tactics employed by rival theatre owners give increased momentum to the wheels of the ticket registers.

"But reason out this double feature bill for yourself:

"In the first place the patron soon learn that in the majority of instances one of the two, or many times both features are mediocre and woefully lacking in entertainment value. There is also such a thing, which showmen understand, as overfeeding an audience with pictures, eventually resulting in the patron cutting down his or her visits—a condition quite contrary to the theatreman's expectations of increased patronage.

"From information I have been able to gather, the viewing of two feature length pictures during one sitting invariably sends patrons away in an unsettled frame of mind. This, I have found, is very apt to be caused by one picture being a fairly worthy effort and the other being riff-raff, or both of them "weak sisters." In these cases, the patron is either quite sure he hasn't seen a good show or doesn't know whether he has.

"Furthermore, there is also the question of too much plot. The average motion picture theatregoer usually goes in for a light form of entertainment and one feature is generally enough for them to follow. It is not too broad a statement to make that they become "fed up" on too many reels.

"On the other hand, take the balanced program into consideration: here, we have an interesting newsreel to start off with; a feature that really counts for something, and that followed with short features which always break the monotony of any bill. It is also quite alright in these days when other variations are demanded, to fill in on certain nights with a form of novelty entertainment. The latter is merely a vogue and that also will probably be dispensed with to a large extent in the future.

"There is also the question of overhead: Now, we are touching on a subject which vitally interests every theatre operator. The bank balance tells the story. No one can tell me that two features can be bought as cheaply as one. If they can, they are not worth showing in the majority of cases. Furthermore, there is the question of 'turn-over.' There is more time involved in the showing of a double feature bill—usually three and one-half hours—or else the exhibitor must trim the rest of the program to the point where it is usually a flop from a showman's standpoint. And then again, when a patron becomes satiated with the cumbersome double bills and only visits the theatre once a week instead of two or three times, it is very apt to bring on the old familiar Exhibitor's Headache.

A Message to Exhibitors from Chas. Steiner*

INTO the realm of exhibitorship has come the subtle poison of the double feature bill, and in many cases the theatreman who wields this dangerous weapon little realizes that it nearly always acts as a boomerang.

Double feature bills began when Mr. Competitive Exhibitor tried to give the movie fan more of a show for the same money than Mr. Opposition Owner.

So, Mr. Theatremen, up and at it let us join hands and combat the double feature menace and continue playing short features with properly built up programmes of short subjects in an endeavor to keep our houses Theatres in the true sense of the word; not grab bags where the patron pays his money to take a chance of getting one entertaining picture, or two bad ones. Quantity and quality do not often go hand in hand.

Signed,
Charles Steiner.

 Editor's Note: Mr. Steiner is one of the executives of the Delancey-Clinton Corporation, operating a chain of theatres in the thickly populated sections of New York's East Side, where competition has long been keen. His past experience and knowledge of neighborhood conditions lend a pertinent touch to his message.*

The Tie-Up As a Manufacturer Sees It

By William J. Haussler

(Vice-President, M. Hohner, Inc.)

FOR the past several months the music business in general has experienced a somewhat depressed condition, and yet the sales of harmonicas have been forging ahead steadily and consistently. In a great measure, the increasing activity of the harmonica industry may be attributed to the Juvenile Comedy-Harmonica Playing Contest conducted in the past and now in full operation. We have found that these contests are building up a truly constructive business and that they have invariably added material prestige to the theatre, increasing at the same time its patronage. In many communities where the Juvenile Comedy-Harmonica Contests have been held the sales of our harmonicas have increased from one hundred to five thousand per cent. It is not unusual to hear of retail dealers having sold more instruments during a contest week than during a period of twelve months prior to such an event.

The Juvenile Comedy-Harmonica Playing Contests were started in January, 1926, as a result of a tie-up effected between our company, M. Hohner, Inc., and the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., for the mutual benefit of all concerned. It is our habit to supply the theatre which agrees to stage one of the contests with attractive display material, window trim, posters and books of instruction for the playing of the harmonica. Brochures conveying full information for the organization and forming of Harmonica Bands are likewise supplied and then, too, valuable harmonicas to serve as prizes to the winners of the contest. These instruments usually comprise three to six different styles of the highest priced harmonicas and the allotment is made in accordance with the size, scope and importance of the contest. Where an official city-wide event is conducted, we furnish for the three best players solid gold, sterling silver and bronze medals. On a number of occasions where newspapers, theatre managements and city officials have cooperated, we have spent substantial sums of money in helping to promote the activity on a larger scale and developing it to a huge success.

Furthermore, in addition to the material already mentioned, we are now furnishing, free of cost, a generous supply of a most attractive and practical playing "miniature harmonica" bearing the popular name "Big Boy," the instruments being given to the theatre managers for distribution as they see fit. In passing it might be said that this instrument, measuring only one and three-eighths inches in length, embodies one full octave, accurately tuned, and permits the rendition of simple melodies. It is quite as well made as the most expensive harmonica.

The Producer Must Do His Share

In Selling Short Feature Product to the Picture-Going Public, Says

Julius Stern
(President of Stern Film Corp.)

DID you ever notice, sitting in a motion picture theatre, how the patrons straighten up in their seats and suddenly take a new interest in the proceedings when the short comedy offering appears on the screen? Why? Because the audience welcomes the change in tempo and mood. With patrons in this expectant state, woe to the exhibitor who shows them a mediocre comedy. They are doubly disappointed—let down.

Most exhibitors realize this fully, and make every effort to select comedy fare with certain appeal and a generous measure of entertainment value, and that passes the problem right back to the producer, where it belongs. It is up to him to make comedies that will satisfy, and that is naturally the aim of every short subject producing organization. My brother and I have spared no effort in this direction.

What I am interested in here, however, is not entertainment value but exploitation value. It is not enough that a comedy should please patrons after they are in the theatre; if it is to fulfill its entire purpose it should draw patrons to the theatre as well. Entertainment plus box-office value is the formula for comedy success, and it is because many comedies in the past have been stronger on entertainment than on exploitation angles that we are concentrating on our brand-new policy in all Stern Brothers comedies—series based upon nationally famous comic strips.

Short comedies today must have pulling power over and above that which the individual exhibitor is able or seems able to give them in his exploitation and advertising. They must be merchandised and popularized with the public even before they are made. They must have drawing power of their own. The day is past when a series of comedies can be launched and depended upon to build up prestige solely on their individual merits. Life is too short. Competition is too keen. Unless a series catches on right away, it never makes the grade, either for the exhibitor or for the producer.

All of these angles on the screen comedy problem have led us to provide for comedies with initial appeal, with background and with tie-up value of long standing.

And here is the answer.

All of our product for the coming year is based on long-popularized newspaper comic strips. Thus, with one stroke, we have solved the entire comedy pulling power for the exhibitor. We have guaranteed maximum patron interest, and have placed ourselves in the position of offering a product that is as widely known as Ivory Soap, as widely read as any five of the most popular magazine authors and universally popular.

By adapting popular newspaper comic strips to the screen we are supplying the public with visual and actual adventures, in person, of the various comic strip characters they follow daily in their family newspaper. These comic strip characters are a part of every family's home life. They are almost members of the family. There is not a single home in America where newspapers are read that does not have its comic strip favorites, and we have obtained what we believe to be the most popular of the lot for presentation on the screen.

What a tie-up! What a jump-off place! Before we even make the comedies, 100,000,000 men, women and children know the characters, laugh at their antics, appreciate their troubles and take them to their bosoms as old friends. Do these 100,000,000 men, women and children flock to see their favorites on the screen? We'll say they do, and every exhibitor in the country knows they do.

We are making five series for the coming year. Several of them are repeats on earlier experiments with this type of screen comedy. They proved so popular we dropped from our schedule two well-received series not made from cartoon strips and replaced them with two comic strips.

Heading our list for next year is "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" series, twelve two-reelers adapted from the strip by George McManus. The first series, now being released, is so well received that we have doubled our production efforts

Will the Two-Reel Drama Return?

By Larry Davis

REVIEWERS more clever than kind have been wont to remark that such-and-such a feature "would make a good two-reeler," implying that the solid dramatic meat in it would justify 2,000 feet of celluloid more capably than the 6,000 or 7,000 to which it has been strung out. That, of course, is partly the fault of our Procrustean system, which decrees that any story other than slapstick comedy must be spread over from five to eight thousand feet. The soundness of the commercial reasons for that we do not deny, but the fact remains that the disappearance of the one and two-reel dramatic subject has robbed us of many a fine bit of celluloid craftsmanship.

For the two-reel drama has disappeared. Mention such a subject to a distributor and he throws up his hands in horror. He cannot sell them. Doubtless true, but it is a strong story indeed which cannot be told effectively within the limits of two reels. If stories were to be filmed in only the length required to tell them vividly, it is an open question just how many would ever reach eight-reel stature.

It is not so hard to remember the days when a drama in more than two reels was unheard of, and producers undertook to film anything from "A Tale of Two Cities" to "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" within that length. And it was in those days that the movies rose from a catch-penny toy to the entertainment of millions.

With the rise of the five-reel feature, the super-feature, the special, the super-special, and what-not, the two-reel drama abruptly disappeared. The "feature, comedy, newsreel" formula arose, and programs have been built to fit that pattern ever since, with more recent additions in the form of presentation numbers.

That left little room for the two-reel drama, and after a few bitter lessons producers stopped making them. Then Chaplin brought the era of the feature length comedy, followed by Lloyd, Keaton, Langdon and others, and predictions were made that this would open the field again for the two-reel drama—the natural accompaniment of a six- or seven-reel comedy. But that opening failed to materialize.

It will be remembered that Sam E. Rork, in association with Col. William Selig, produced a series of two-reel dramas with amazing casts of box-office names, strong stories, striking production values—and cost sheets that staggered short subject producers. After a short time the costly series was discontinued, so discouraging was the response from exhibitors.

Now, however, a new champion of the two-reel drama has appeared. S. L. Rothafel, director general of the Roxy theatre, in an address, "The Photoplay from the Point of View of the Needs of the Exhibitor," delivered to the Writers' Club at Columbia university, predicted a sharp change in this direction. He said:

"Most of our stars today, Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Gloria Swanson and no end of others, came into their own through the medium of the short subject which of late years has been relegated to the background, but with the dearth of adequate material, and the increasing needs of the exhibitor, the day of the short subject is returning. By this I do not mean scenics and travelogues, but the actual production of dramatic stories—in which our stars, the best of them, will play the leading parts.

"These pictures will play the same part in the scheme of things as the short story does in the world of literature. The stars themselves feel the need of this form of dramatic expression.

"Only too often a story which cannot sustain five reels in its development, can be made into a little gem in short subjects. The feature picture, the really important productions of the highest order, will always have its vogue, but the O. Henrys and Balzacs of our world have yet to be developed. Their day has arrived. Can you not imagine the exquisite and artistic work that will result? And exhibitors will be eager to pay big money for these 'additions' for their programs. Of course, these photoplays will be made with the utmost care and intelligence and in the developments of the immediate future you will find that producers realize this, and that among the most artistic photoplays in our theatres will be this abbreviated form of photoplay."

The Tie-up

The Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., are cooperating by supplying an exclusive one-sheet poster, original window cards, a set of ten photographs for lobby use, newspaper mats of their "Big Boy" with publicity stories and a special motion picture trailer, the latter portraying a unique and appropriate feature story. This trailer requires but two minutes to run on the screen and shows "Big Boy" in a truly human interest story wherein the harmonica plays an all important part.

And so it will be seen that a great deal is being done for the exhibitor without cost to him in order to make his Harmonica Contest an outstanding success. We need hardly say that this form of promotional work is considered by us as most valuable and successful. We have never considered, neither do we now think that there is any element of risk in effecting this tie-up.

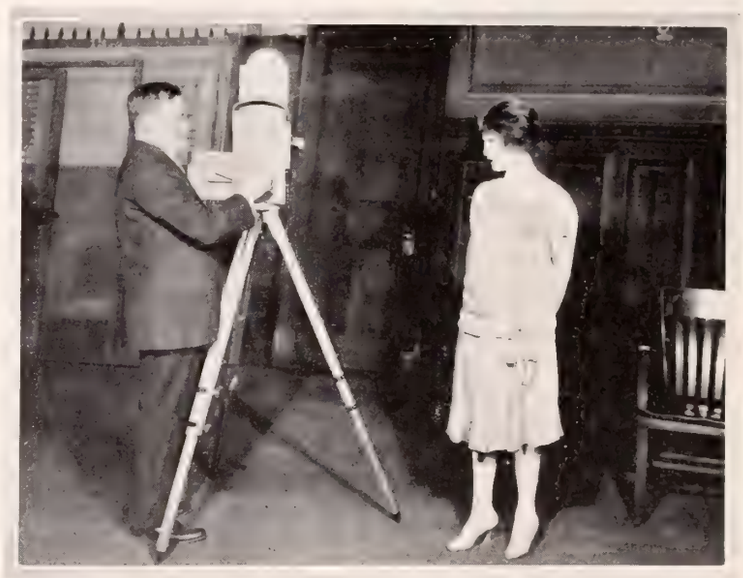
One of the most recent examples of success was experienced in the contest held at the City theatre, Union City, New Jersey, on April 21 to 23 last, inclusive. Here eight prize harmonicas were awarded. Eight retail merchants handling Hohner harmonicas tied up with the theatre, giving over their window space for the display of advertising material. As a result, one store immediately sold out its entire stock, duplicated it, and sold it again. Another reordered during the contest, and all admitted a decided increase in their harmonica business.

The Harmonica Contest having proven so popular and successful, it is the intention of many exhibitors to make this event an annual one. Experience shows us that each year there are new faces among the harmonica contestants, so it will be seen that the idea takes on a permanent aspect. Consequently, Harmonica Contests have a proper place in the theatre, at least once a year.

Broadway's Newest Star--- Pathe News

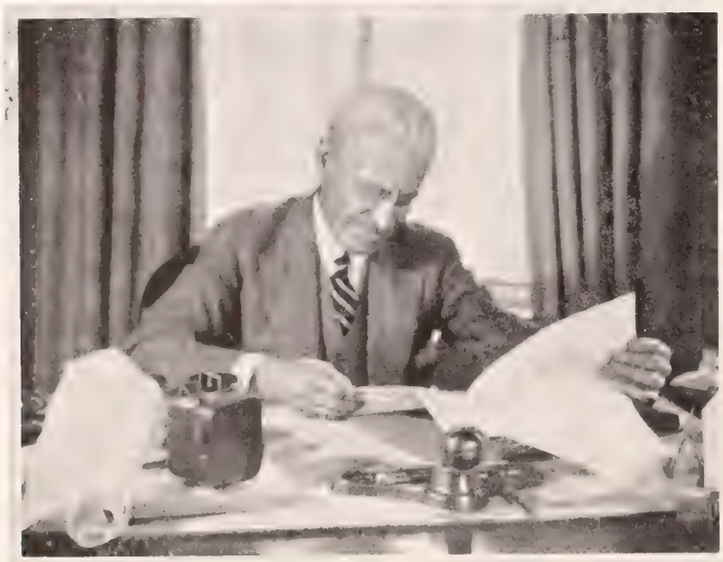
By Rutgers Neilsen

WHILE the general utility of the news weekly has long been recognized, the topical reel has found a new application this season when three Broadway productions are employing Pathe News in a manner which provides unusual exploitation for this subject. Should any of these productions later go on the road or be played in stock, exhibitors in that community would be wise to call attention to this recognition of the part played by the news weekly in modern life.



Pathe News plays an important part in the dramatic action of "Spread Eagle," Jed Harris' latest success, now current at the Martin Beck theatre, and it is also featured in a scene in "Chicago," the satirical comedy playing at the Music Box, and in a humorous scene in "Honeymoon Lane," Eddie Dowling's latest musical comedy triumph at the Knickerbocker theatre.

The presentation of a special Pathe News film in "Spread Eagle" is a highly important link in the development of the play. It is believed that this is the first time that a news film has been used as an actual part of a dramatic stage production.



The motion picture theatre scene, at the close of the second act, carries over important incidents which have been established in the opening act and which are continued to their dramatic climax in the third act. The program lists—Scene 4—A Broadway Motion Picture Theatre. Six weeks later—and below: Motion Picture Effects by Pathe Exchange, Inc.; News Film by Pathe News; Cartoon by Paul Terry of Aesop's Film Fables.

The special Pathe News film shown in "Spread Eagle" is composed of an animated cartoon by Paul Terry and specially photographed scenes, together with stock shots which illustrate the theme of the story.

The New York dramatic critics expressed enthusiasm over the effective use of the Pathe News. Just how important the reel is to the dramatic progress of the play is evidenced by the recognition given it by the metropolitan critics in their reviews of "Spread Eagle."

Francine Larrimore, star of "Chicago," with Ray Hall, the editor of Pathe News

A scene from the special "Pathe News" used in the action of "Spread Eagle" in a Broadway legitimate playhouse

Jed Harris, himself, producer of "Spread Eagle," and also "Broadway," another outstanding success, was so enthused with the reception accorded the news film that he wrote the following letter to Editor Ray Hall of the Pathe News:

"The applause and enthusiasm which greeted the screening of the special Pathe News reel, which forms an important incident in my new play 'Spread Eagle,' now current at the Martin Beck Theatre, prompts us to let you know how glad I am that I selected Pathe News to present the motion picture effect forming an important link in the dramatic action of this play.

"Of course, there is no doubt in your own mind that it was logical for us to select Pathe News as the news reel for the theatre episode in 'Spread Eagle,' because you are 'sold' on the merits of the reel; however, it will undoubtedly be of interest to the Pathe executives to learn just why I decided that Pathe News should have the honor of this important spot in this play, which I am sure is going to prove to be one of the season's successes.

"In my mind, and in the minds of my associates, as well as the authors of the play—Mr. George S. Brooks and Mr. Walter P. Lister—the words 'Pathe News' are synonymous with 'news reel' and the very moment that we decided to have a news reel episode in our play, Pathe News came to our minds.

"In the fore part of this letter I have given you proof that our audiences are of the same turn of mind."

Further proof of the recognized prestige of the news film is Maurine Watkins' use of a special Pathe News scene in "Chicago," the dramatic success now current at the Music Box Theatre in New York, and also being played on the West Coast by another company.

New Pace Set in Short Features

Two-Reel Comedies and Serials Will Again Find Place in Leading First Run Houses, Says

Hal Hodes

FOR years the short subject has suffered at the hands of both producers and exhibitors, because it has been more or less regarded as a stepchild of the industry. In spite of the widely-acclaimed plans of the producers of short products each year, the end of that season would find the much-heralded one- and two-reeler still floundering around in the rut of mediocrity. It was, therefore, scarcely to be marveled at to see short subjects being sold at new low-price levels with each succeeding season, and if the truth is told they were seldom worth even the low prices actually obtained for them.

What were the outstanding characteristics of the average two-reel comedy and serial such as the industry knew during the last five years? For the comedy there was the hackneyed chase, the custard pie and the back flops. For the serial, the impossible and ridiculous situations; the prowess of the hero, who was invariably able to knock at least twelve men for a row of ten pins every time he let loose a lusty wallop; hairbreadth escapes, which differed from each other only in that each was contained in a different episode. Was it strange that the short subject no longer figured as a factor of any degree of importance?

A change in this situation came about through Carl Laemmle a year ago. Mr. Laemmle has produced and distributed more short product than any other individual in this industry. His is the only organization still in existence which pioneered short product in the very early days of the business.

An analysis of the situation made by Mr. Laemmle more than a year ago convinced him that short product was to be made an even more important factor in the industry. The first evidence of his determination to bring it back to its own

Hal Hodes, Sales Director, Short Product Dept., Universal

Joseph I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O., in charge of distribution

Two-Reelers Should Be FUNNY

And the Short Features on the F. B. O. Schedule Will Be Chosen With That Aim, Says

Joseph I. Schnitzer

"ONE great fault that I find in the merchandising of short subjects," says J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O., in charge of distribution, "is that exhibitors fail to take full advantage of what we rack our brains to give them. By that I mean that we spend thousands of dollars to obtain the works of important writers, of famous names, and they fail to play them up.

"They use the title and neglect to get across the fact that the story is the work of a famous author and appear in Cosmopolitan or some other leading magazine, whose millions of readers know the story, and if reminded of the title and its place of origin would have the desire to see it enacted on the screen. For instance, Fontaine Fox cartoons appear in more than three hundred newspapers, from Coast to Coast. When exhibitors do not play up that fact they are muffing the thing we spend time and money to give them."

In Mr. Schnitzer's opinion two-reel subjects should be of a humorous nature, for the reason that most of the feature-length pictures are dramatic and the comedy provides a well-balanced program. Humor aside, the next most important thing, he feels, is novelty, and he finds that exhibitors, prompted by the demands of their patrons, are constantly on the outlook for novelty—something out of the beaten path—just as are the vaudeville managers. There is room for dramatic short subjects in conjunction with feature comedies, he admits, and certain companies are handling these successfully, but so far as his company is concerned comedy and novelty are the watchwords of the day.

In catering to this demand, Film Booking Offices is, in addition, trying to give the exhibitor something the public is already familiar with—something partly sold in advance to theatre patrons. Instances of this are "The Beauty Parlor" series by H. C. Witwer, and the "Mickey McGuire" series, based on Fontaine Fox cartoon characters, both of which have a considerable potential audience ready-made. The Standard Fat Men comedies and Whirlwind comedies, which complete the group, have been made familiar to theatre patrons through exhibition in past years.

Another novelty will be a one-reel subject, "Newslaffs," a satire on news events of the day. These will be cartoons burlesquing current events, and the nature of the subject will permit of injecting considerable freshness, living up to the requirement—"fresh and novel."

New Pace Set

was contained in "The Collegians." The idea of this series was conceived by his son, Carl Laemmle, Jr., and during this past season these subjects were presented by him.

It has been obvious for some time that the big first-run theatre of the country no longer had room on their programs for the two-reel subject. That these subjects could again find their place in these theatres, Mr. Laemmle was absolutely sure. "The Collegians," therefore afforded him the opportunity to test this belief, and he then produced them on a scale in keeping with the intrinsic box-office value of the idea on which the series was based.

The result already achieved by "The Collegians" is now a matter of history. Within six months after their release, these Junior Jewels were being played regularly in the finest theatres of the country.

The results obtained by "The Collegians" have caused Mr. Laemmle to go one step further. It is his belief that the serial can be made an important factor on the programs of the better class houses throughout the country, and he is backing his belief substantially in "Blake of Scotland Yard," our "leader serial" for the new season. We kept the production plans of "Blake of Scotland Yard" under cover because they embody some radically different leads. For instance, the cast of "Blake of Scotland Yard" is as noteworthy as that of a feature. The sets are easily the most expensive ever used in conjunction with serials—while from the standpoint of atmosphere and camera work, nothing like it has ever been done before.

While this serial has everything which will appeal to the average serial fan, it will just as strongly appeal to the better class of theatre-goers who heretofore have been inclined to look down upon serials as fare fit only for juvenile minds.

Joe Brandt, President of Columbia Pictures Corp.

Make Your Own Review

The Topical Reel May Often Be Improved for Your House, Says
Joe Brandt

Screen Snapshots is, of course, long established as the one subject capitalizing on the interest in the players and their private life on the part of 15,000,000 readers of fan magazines, but in this article Joe Brandt, president of Columbia, presents an entirely new angle for its use in giving variety to the program in houses where every minute must be made to count, in a manner that will lend prestige to any theatre

EXHIBITORS who play their newsreel "straight," just as it comes from the exchange, week in and week out, are losing a great opportunity to make their program interesting, in the opinion of Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures Corporation, who keeps in remarkably close touch with exhibition conditions in the field.

"However capable the newsreel organization may be," he points out, "it cannot possibly take into consideration the likes and dislikes of every community and every type of clientele. Many times there will be two or three hundred feet of material in a newsreel which is of very little interest to the patrons of a particular theatre. The usual practice in such cases is to let it run 'as is.' Or perhaps there are scenes of a disaster or catastrophe which the exhibitor feels are too unpleasant to show to a general family audience.

"Milton Feld, when he was at Newman's Theatre in Kansas City a few years ago, found an excellent way of meeting this condition. He took six or seven hundred feet from the newsreel which he felt was most interesting to his patrons, and made up the remainder of the reel from two or three subjects from a Screen Snapshots release, showing players at home and on the set. In this way every foot of the weekly news review was intensely interesting, and additional variety was given to the whole program without adding one minute to its length.

"It does not occur to many exhibitors, who do not feel that they have room for an entire subject in addition to the feature, comedy and newsreel, that they can use a portion of a subject such as Screen Snapshots in this way, obtain just as much value from it as though they had used the entire reel, and still keep the length of their program within the desired limits.

"Of course, a few of the larger first-run houses do this sort of thing constantly in making up their weekly news review, selecting subjects fro mtwo or three or even four newsreels, a comic reel and novelties. The smaller houses cannot afford to do this, but they can well afford to buy one newsreel and one Screen Snapshot, select portions from both, and put their own main title at the beginning of the reel. This will add to the interest and value of the program, and lend a great deal of prestige to the house as well."

The Producers Share

on the series and are trying to make them twice as good. They will be released next year as Universal Junior Jewels, the highest rating that can be given to a short subject by Universal.

One of our two new series for next year is "Keeping Up With the Joneses," adapted from the cartoon comic by Arthur "Pop" Momand. This is one of the oldest comic strips in the newspaper field.

Then, too, we have another new series, "Mike and Ike, They Look Alike," being adapted from Rube Goldberg's comic strip.

The two other series are the "Let George Do It" comedies, adapted from that other comic strip by George McManus, and the Buster Brown Comedies.

Nationally advertised comedies! Advertised daily in newspapers all over the country. Day in and day out they have received more newspaper space than any President of the United States, any rich divorcee, any society murder principals, or any equal group of persons who ever crashed into the public prints. Is this ready-made exploitation for exhibitors? Is this helping to sell the public?

Double Feature

"There is one more point which I want to bring out and that is in relation to musicians' hours where the double feature bill is concerned. By the time an orchestra has completed the score of one feature length picture it is due for an intermission and rest in order to put the proper amount of "pep" in its work. The men can't keep on playing through two features and render good service. That is altogether too much to expect of any orchestra and, from my experience, I can back up this statement."

The foregoing is what Mr. Lustig thinks of the double feature bill and also what kind of a program brings the best results. His statements are based on considerable experience in the theatre field, and are therefore entirely worthy of consideration.

Short Feature Players

Handy Biographies for Use of Theatre Managers and Publicity Men In Newspaper Copy and House Programs

Sally Phipps

SALLY PHIPPS, born in San Francisco in 1909, moved with her grandmother to Los Angeles in 1924. Her father is a Colorado State Senator and her grandfather was a judge.

As school librarian, Sally often caused instructors to visit the library to discover students who had forgotten their classes while studying human nature at first hand under the unknowing tutelage of Sally Phipps.

Her first experience in films was at the age of six or seven with "Broncho Billy." She is five feet, two inches tall, has brown eyes and red-golden hair.

Sally has appeared in several Imperial comedies for Fox Films, but her first big part was the feminine lead in "Love Makes 'Em Wild."

Al St. John

AL ST. JOHN, Educational-Mermaid featured comedian, champions the lowly bicycle. St. John virtually rode to success in the movies, for it was his antics on a bike that first attracted attention to this knockabout comedian. The story is told that Al, when he was only 19 years old, attempted to leap his first bicycle from the roof of a barn across an alley to the roof of a small shed. In spite of the terrific fall which resulted, the comedian persevered, but he never succeeded in making the daring leap. And St. John's father still believes that his son takes his bicycle stunts seriously for he saw him attempt a similar leap in a comedy and fall with not quite as disastrous results.

St. John is one of the most versatile acrobats in the comedy ranks. Not only is he a tumbler and gymnast but he is a splendid all-around athlete. It is no trick for St. John to take a pole vault leap that is the equal of that made by many a college star.

St. John owns a country estate near Los Angeles, has several automobiles, a yacht—and the bike he still uses occasionally in his comedies.

Earle Foxe

EARLE FOXE, portraying the whimsical character of Van Bibber in the Fox comedies based on Richard Harding Davis' stories, declares that he is in the movies because he "had a chance to bust in and didn't hesitate to grab it."

He was playing in "White Collars" in Los Angeles when the Fox Films casting office offered him a chance to appear with Tom Mix in "Oh, You Tony!" Thereafter he was "The Last Man on Earth" and within a short time folks began to think that his middle name was Van Bibber, so many of these did he play in.

Earle was educated at the Ohio State University, engaging in college theatricals and after graduation he joined a Cincinnati stock company. He was on the New York stage for fourteen years in such plays as "Cappy Ricks," "Come Seven," "Up in Mabel's Room," "Leave It to Jane," and "The College Widow."

Foxe was imbued with a strong spirit of adventure and when the war started he sailed to England to join the London-Irish Machine Gun Division. Upon his return to America he joined the "White Collars" road company, reaching Los Angeles with it.

The newest productions in which he is playing are the Fox offerings "Upstream" and "The Secret Studio."

Frances Lee

FRANCES LEE, leading lady for Bobby Vernon in the comedies in which he is starred for Educational, is a 20-year-old comedienne. She started her theatrical career by dancing in vaudeville and revues, her first professional appearance being at the State Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn. She left the University of Minnesota to seek renown on the stage.

From Minneapolis, Miss Lee went to Chicago, where she danced in a revue at the Rainbo Gardens. A short time afterwards, she went with Gus Edwards' revue then playing on the Orpheus Circuit. Then following her appearance with Billy Dooley in a skit entitled "The Misfit Sailor," which scored heavily on the Orpheum time. When she was signed by Al Christie to appear in comedies produced by Christie, she bid the stage farewell.

Miss Lee was born at Eagle Grove, Iowa, in 1907. She is exactly 5 feet tall and weighs only 100 pounds. Miss Lee is a splendid swimmer and enjoys dancing.

Broadway's New Star—Pathe News

The author of "Chicago" states that she chose Pathe as the news reel for her courtroom scene because she knew it was the oldest, and best known of the news reel services.

The 'script of "Chicago" covers the Pathe News scene as follows:

It is the big moment in the courtroom. Roxie Hart (Francine Larrimore) is on trial for her life, a self-confessed murderess of a man who was her lover, but decided that he liked his wife and kiddies better than he did Roxie Hart. Roxie's husband, Amos Hart, has just stepped off the stand. Now all is ready! The court clerk arises, the judge suddenly awakes, the jury's countenances seem to be lighted with that strange light that comes into every man's eyes at the sight of a pretty woman.

"Roxie Hart," cries the court clerk.

Roxie Hart ascends to the stand. The photographers and reporters are ready.

"Lights," shouts one of the photographers, as the huge Kleig lights are turned on, illuminating the scene, and, at the same time, the smiling faces of the pretty defendant, the prosecuting attorney, the defending attorney and His Honor, himself.

"Everything ready and is everybody ready," inquires a news photographer. "Then let's shoot!"

And then, in a special request, the photographer asks:

"Pathe, are you ready "

"Righto," answers the man who is manning the Pathe camera.

And the camera grinds away.

Still further proof of the place Pathe News holds is evidenced in Eddie Dowling's delivery devised repartee in "Honeymoon Lane."

In discussing this scene, Mr. Dowling stated that he built this gag around Pathe because it is the one concern that he can remember that has been in existence since the inception of the motion picture. This clever author and star claims that Pathe News is his favorite screen news reel and that the rooster is the one trademark that predominates in his mind.

This is how Pathe News is brought into play in "Honeymoon Lane":

Toward the end of the first act, Pauline Mason as "Mary," says to Gordon Dooley, who is toting the news camera:

"Go on, Mr. Pathe; tell me something about the movies."

Then Eddie Dowling, as Tim Murphy, says to Mary:

"Did he tell you he was Mr. Pathe."

Dooley, as "Mr. Pathe" retorts:

"Yes; what about it,"

Whereupon Eddie Dowling turns and says to Mary:

"Don't you believe him, Mary; Pathe is a rooster."

Undoubtedly the effective tie-up of Pathe News with these three current Broadway successes is something quite new in the field of exploitation and it is to the credit of this reel that astute showmen recognize the prestige of tying in the pioneer news film with their winning stage attractions.

Loew Reported in Deal For Poli Circuit

Negotiations Not Yet Completed—$30,000,000 and Nineteen Theatres Are Involved

A DEAL for outright purchase of the Poli circuit in New England by Loew is being negotiated, it was reported this week, and is expected to be consummated, unless there is some development, now totally unexpected, to prevent it, according to reports.

The Poli-Loew deal is described as involving about $30,000,000, and it would add nineteen theatres to the Loew holdings. Also, it would give the Loew interests a stronger position in New England, a territory in which they already have several houses.

It has been known for some time that various producer-distributor-exhibitor concerns have been bidding for the Poli chain, or have been receptive to deals. Some of these actually got under way, but did not materialize.

It now appears, according to information in hand, that the Loew interests will capture this important theatrical stronghold, as a move of great significance in the theatre war now raging in the industry.

The Poli houses are considered excellent theatrical property. The real estate value, due to central downtown locations in many important New England cities, is, of course, gilt-edged. The Poli theatres and seating capacities are as follows: Palace, Hartford, 2,210; Hyperion, New Haven, 1,737; Palace, New Haven, 3,001; Bijou, New Haven, 1,627; Strand, Waterbury, 1,612; Poli's, Waterbury, 1,981; Poli's, Meriden, Conn., 1,605; Plaza, Bridgeport, 1,369; Lyric, Bridgeport, 1,481; Poli's, Bridgeport, 2,857; Palace, Waterbury, 3,524; Palace, Bridgeport, 3,792; Majestic, Bridgeport, 2,205; Park, Bridgeport, 1,562; Plaza, Worcester, Mass., 1,886; Grand, Worcester, 1,483; Palace, Springfield, Mass., 2,524; Poli's, Worcester, 2,598; Poli's, East Main St., Meriden, Conn., 1,666.

The Loew New England theatres now are the Columbia, Orpheum and State, Boston, and the Roger Sherman, New Haven, a house in New London, and others affiliated through the Arthur S. Friend circuit.

Publix Pupils Graduate

Executives Address Third Class at Banquet; Men Receive Theatre Assignments

THIS was graduation week for the third class of pupils in the Publix Theatre Managers' Training School; the term started November fifteenth. A dinner was tendered the graduates at the Hotel Astor, New York City, and the new managers were addressed by Sam Katz, president of Publix, Harry Marx, director of theatre management for Publix, and John Barry, director of the school. A. M. Botsford presided.

The graduates have been assigned as follows:

Edwin Adler, Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Georgia; Arthur Baker, Chicago Theatre, Chicago, Ill.; George Broemler, Publix Gray Circuit, Boston, Mass.; Herbert Chatkin, Des Moines, Des Moines, Ia.; E. S. C. Coppock, Texas Theatre, San Antonio, Tex.; Lawrence Cowen, Publix Gray Circuit, Boston, Mass.; Louis Finske, Palace Theatre, Dallas, Tex.; Louis Goldberg, Chicago Theatre, Chicago, Ill.; Roy Helms, Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C.; Hal Howard, Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C.; Graham Jeffrey, Publix Gray Circuit, Boston, Mass.; O'Ferrall Knight, Michigan Theatre, Detroit, Mich.; Homer LeTempt, Queen Theatre, Austin, Tex.; Robert McHale Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif.; John McKenna, Carolina Theatre, Charlotte, S. C.; Carrol MacPike, Davenport, Davenport, Ia.; Norman T. Prager, Palace Theatre, Ft. Worth, Tex.; George Watson, Davenport, Davenport, Ia.; Robert Weitman, Rialto Theatre, New York, N. Y.; Ross W. Wiegand, Rialto Theatre, Denver, Colo.; John T. Wright, Paramount Theatre, New York, N. Y.

Among the graduates were six members of the Publix Circuit whose record and experience had won for them a scholarship at the Managers' School. This policy of bringing men from the Publix Circuit will be continued at future sessions of the School. Many applications have already been received for the next session of the School, the starting date of which has not as yet been announced.

F.B.O. Mgrs. and Salesmen Convene in L. A.

WITH the outlining of F. B. O. product for 1927-28 by J. P. Kennedy, president, J. I. Schnitzer, senior vice-president in charge of distribution, Lee Marcus, general sales manager, and E. B. Derr, treasurer, the third general sales convention of Film Booking Offices' district managers and salesmen from the entire Pacific Coast region began last Sunday at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles, concluding with a dinner dance at the Hotel on Tuesday evening at which all the F. B. O. stars, directors, scenarists, etc., met the salesmen and district managers.

J. Leo Meehan, director of F. B. O.'s Gene Stratton-Porter films, addressed the gathering just before leaving for Rome City, Indiana, whre he will shoot exterior scenes for "The Harvester."

Whiteman Band for Paramount, N. Y.

ON June 4 Paul Whiteman and his band will open for an indefinite run at the Paramount Theatre in New York City at a salary of $9,500 weekly. A new production to be built around the Whiteman band will be presented each week, following, it is said, the plan adopted at the Oriental Theatre, Chicago, where another jazz orchestra, Paul Ash's, proved successful. Unit shows are to continue at Paramount.

Saxe Managers Convene at Milwaukee, May 10

The first annual Saxe theatre managers' convention was held May 10th and 11th at the Wisconsin Hotel. The Convention was opened with a business meeting on Tuesday afternoon followed by a banquet at which about 35 were present. Plans were disclosed for the Jubilee week which is to be held the week of June 19 in all Saxe theatres in the city and state. Jubilee week is being observed in commemoration of the 25 years of the Saxe brothers' showmanship.

Twenty-five years ago the Saxe brothers, Thomas and John E., showed the first motion picture in this city in their Nickelodeon on Second St., and today control forty-five theatres in the city and state, with three new theatres under construction in the city. In celebration of these twenty-five years of progress, each Saxe theatre is planning special entertainment for the week of June 16th, Jubilee Week.

People of Bedford, Ia., to Vote on Sunday Shows

A special election will decide whether Sunday shows will be allowed at Bedford, Iowa, where Stanley and Cecil have the Rialto Theatre. Mr. Cecil was in Des Moines last week and reported that a special election will be held putting the matter to the vote of the citizens of Bedford. Three hundred and fifty signed the petition to the city council to allow the election and Stanley and Cecil offer to pay the expenses of this election. Ninety-five per cent of the business men are in favor of the Sunday shows, and there is no doubt that the election will result in a vote for the Sunday shows.

Keller to Supervise 18 Golden State Theatres

Mark G. Keller, for the last four years general manager of the Monterey Theatres company, has been appointed general manager for the Oakland and East Bay division of the Golden State Theatre circuit, it was recently announced by E. H. Emmick, president of the company.

Mr. Keller will have full charge of 18 theatres, some of the largest holdings of the company being located in his division. Keller is a pioneer in this field and succeeds Charles Moser whose retirement as vice-president and general manager of the entire circuit has just been announced. B. Pierre Brookhart, a veteran theatre man, will fill Mr. Keller's post.

Los Angeles Forum Contracts With Kofeldt

Manager R. A. Mitchell, of the Forum Theatre in Los Angeles, and Walter W. Kofeldt, Inc., importers of motion pictures, have reached an agreement whereby the Forum is to be the first house in America to exhibit the film importations of the principal cities of Germany, France, Sweden, Austria and Italy. On the 24th of May, "Aftermath," the first of these productions from the other side, will open at the Forum. The film deals with Eastern Europe's condition after the world war; its real title is "Die Brennende Grenze," and it is from the National Film A-G studio in Berlin.

Fox Films Lines Up Early Summer Releases

Madge Bellamy's "Colleen" and Olive Borden's "The Secret Studio," both completed this week, are the two final pictures to be scheduled by Fox Films for release during the early summer months. "Colleen" is set for June 3 and the Olive Borden vehicle for June 19. The first of the summer releases is "Rich But Honest"; next on the program is "Slaves of Beauty," listed for June 5. The two Westerns, "Good as Gold," starring Buck Jones, and "The Circus Ace," with Tom Mix, will be released on June 12 and June 26 respectively.

Ajuria Leaves for N. Y. With Film, "Argentinia"

After a stay of about six months in Hollywood, Julian Ajuria, prominent theatre owner of South America, will leave this week for Buenos Aires. While in Hollywood Ajuria produced "Argentinia" and will take the production along with him to New York where he will remain about two weeks, making arrangements for distribution of the picture. A new theatre has been planned for the Ajuria chain in the Southern capitol and, while in New York, materials and accessories for the theatre will be purchased. Mr. Ajuria will stay at the Plaza Hotel in New York City.

"King of Kings" Has 9,291 Sq.-ft. of Signs

WITH the starting of the third week of "The King of Kings" at the Gaiety theatre, New York, the installation of the world's largest electrical theatre sign was completed. Each letter twenty feet high, the blazing title of the De Mille picture shines forth from two thousand 100-watt lamps in steady incandescence from a frame that blankets the Broadway front of the Gaiety Building to a width of 37 feet and a height of 60 feet from the second to the fifth floor.

The giant sign is only part of the illumination, which includes 360 square feet of the name of Cecil B. De Mille above it, 480 feet of marquee signs, 1,400 feet of the sign at the Broadway and 46th Street corner, and 1,250 feet of the traveling bulletin sign on the cornice of the building: a total of 9,291 square feet of signs.

Roxy Will Supervise Fox' Academy, N. Y.

FOX' ACADEMY THEATRE, on 14th Street, New York City, will be supervised by S. L. Rothafel beginning Decoration Day, May 30, when he will personally stage the entire presentation at the Academy. Programs entirely independent of those shown at th Roxy will be originated by Mr. Rothafel for the downtown house. This is said to be Roxy's initial step in his proposed supervision of leading Fox houses.

Kane Making Two Films at Once for First National

Utilizing the Cosmopolitan studio in New York City, Robert Kane, First National producer, is filming two productions simultaneously—"Dance Magic," a Clarence Buddington Kelland story which has been in work for about a month, and "Hell's Kitchen." For these two productions Kane brought several players from Hollywood; in the Kelland story are Ben Lyon, Pauline Starke and Adrienne Truex, and in "Hell's Kitchen," which went into work last week, are Ford Sterling, George Sidney, Hugh Cameron, actors, and Frank Capra; the latter is to direct "Hell's Kitchen" with Joseph Boyle. Lyon and Claudette Colbert will appear in the new production. Following the completion of "Hell's Kitchen," Kane will produce "French Dressing," an original by Adelaide Heilbron.

The publicity angle for "Dance Magic" has been arranged for with an agreement entered into with the New York Daily Mirror, which paper will publish in pictorial form for a period of three weeks or over the story. Philip Payne, managing editor of the Mirror, arranged with Edward Halperin for the pictorial version of "Dance Magic." The Halperin Brothers are collaborating with Kane on the production of the picture.

Two Million Dollar Hotel-Theatre for London, Ont.

A combined moving picture theatre and hotel project has been launched in London, Ontario, by Detroit interests, it has been announced at London. The new building, which is to be started within a few months, will be on Wellington Street, between Dundas and King Streets. The hotel will cost $1,250,000, and the theatre will represent an investment of $300,000, both to be heated from a central plant to cost $400,000. There will be garage accommodation on top of the heating plant, between the adjoining structures.

Tourist and other trade is expected to boom in London because of the new Ontario liquor law, which is becoming effective in May.

Richard Arlen Juvenile Lead in "The Blood Ship"

By arrangement with Paramount the services of Richard Arlen, a Paramount junior star, have been engaged for the masculine juvenile lead in "The Blood Ship." Arlen has but recently acted in "Wings" and "Rolled Stockings" for his company.

Milwaukee Man Wins Goldwyn Title Prize

Acting as personal representative for Samuel Goldwyn, A. C. Backus, publisher of the Milwaukee Sentinel, will next week award a check of $2,500 to Mrs. Winifred S. Osborne of Milwaukee, whose suggestion of Baroness Orzcy's novel, "Leatherface," was considered acceptable by Mr. Goldwyn as suitable story material for his movie couple, Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky. Some time ago Mr. Goldwyn, through Louella O. Parsons, movie critic, announced his intention of paying the above sum for any accepted suggestion for a screen story for his team. Film rights for the story were obtained through cable messages sent to Baroness Orzcy, an Englishwoman then touring Europe. In all probability the title of "Leatherface" will be changed when the picture is made. Marcel de Sano will direct.

"Rich Men's Sons," Second May Columbia Release

Columbia's "Rich Men's Sons," featuring Shirley Mason and Ralph Graves, will be the company's second release for May. The picture is Graves' first efforts as a director and Miss Mason's third appearance under the Columbia trade mark this season. The story was adapted by Dorothy Howell from "The Lightning Express." The following players appear in it: George Fawcett, Frances Raymond, Walter James, Robert Cain, Johnny Fox, Scott Seaton, James Mack, Kasha Haroldi, Bobby Dunn and Marvin Lobak.

Hervey Signed to Write Story for Gilda Gray

"The Devil Dancer," an original story by Harry Hervey, novelist, will serve as Gilda Gray's first starring vehicle under the banner of Samuel Goldwyn. Latest reports from the Coast advise that Mr. Hervey will take up his new duties in Los Angeles as soon as he has finished a novel which is to be serialized by the Cosmopolitan Magazine. "The Devil Dancer" will be a fall release from United Artists.

Paramount Joins Two Selling Districts

SIMULTANEOUS with the opening of the new selling season comes the report that the Paramount Atlanta and Dallas districts have been consolidated, with Harry G. Ballance, formerly district manager in the Southeast, now heading the entire Southern division.

Under the new arrangement Mr. Ballance assumes supervision over the Paramount exchanges in Dallas, San Antonio and New Orleans, in addition to the four Eastern exchanges which have been under his guidance all along, namely, Atlanta, Charlotte, Memphis and Jacksonville.

H. G. Rosebaum, who formerly served as district manager in Dallas, has gone to a new assignment in the Paramount organization.

Milliken Discusses Benefits Derived from Arbitation

Addressing the luncheon of the American Institute of the City of New York this week, Carl E. Milliken, of the Hays office, pointed out the benefits of arbitration in his "Arbitration in Business"—a talk in which he stated that arbitration has resulted in a net saving to the industry of 4½ per cent, exclusive of court costs and lawyers' fees that would have accrued litigation in the courts.

Mr. Milliken emphasized that arbitration saves time and establishes good will and remarked that good will is more valuable than the money involved. Results obtained by arbitrary methods in the motion picture industry have resulted in the spread of the practice of arbitration in other prominent industries. In three years of operation, Mr. Milliken stated, cases involving $7,374,000 have been handled by means of arbitration, representing an average of $207 per claim.

G. F. Sharp Reelected to Official Post in Fresno

In the reelection of George F. Sharp to the position of Legislative Commission of the City of Fresno, California, by an overwhelming vote, the local motion picture industry found reason for sincere and cordial gratification. Sharp is manager of the Liberty, and Strand Theatres of Fresno. He has served his city as Legislative Commissioner for the past four years.

"The Poor Nut" Scores at Coast Preview

By WILLIAM McCORMACK
West Coast Representative, Motion Picture News

HOLLYWOOD, May 12.—"The Poor Nut" is box office all over. Previewed at the Westlake Theatre, Los Angeles under normal circumstances it caught on with vim and enthusiasm by the audience. First National has a production which should serve as good entertainment for any theatre.

Jack Mulhall is exceptional in the part of the young biological student at college who writes with the soul of a poet and looks like the last man on earth to possess any sex appeal. His is the outstanding characterization, whimsically done and finely moulded. He got many laughs in the course of the action but each break of mirth was close to a tear.

The picture was produced by Jess Smith from the stage play by J. C. and Elliott Nugent, under the direction of Richard Wallace. Included in the cast are Jack Mulhall, Charlie Murray, Jane Winton, Glenn Tryon, Jean Arthur, Cornelius Keefe, Maurice Ryan, Henry Vibart and Bruce Gordon. Glenn Tryon looks promising.

Detroit Picture Theatre Census Shows 189 Houses; Half in Circuit Control

DETROIT'S motion picture theatres number 189 with a total seating capacity of 169,388, according to a census just compiled by David Palfreyman, secretary and manager of the Detroit Film Board of Trade. This report includes several new theatres under construction which will be open to the public by Jan. 1, 1928.

Theatre building activities in Detroit have increased rapidly during the past year, leading many people to believe the city far ahead of other metropolitan centers so far as seat ratio to population is concerned. Mr. Palfreyman says there are several cities with more seating capacity. New York, Chicago and Cleveland still lead the country in this respect.

Ninety-six of Detroit's 189 motion picture houses are controlled by circuits, and 14 vaudeville exchanges operate in the business of providing entertainment for theatres, cabarets and private parties.

Containing 4,100 seats, the Michigan is the largest picture theatre at present. The new Fox, to be known as the Roxy theatre, now being constructed, lists 4,500 in its plans.

There are 17 so-called legitimate theatres, combined seating numbering 28,635. The amusement total of these houses amounts to 198,023.

Ratify Pathe-P. D. C. Deal; Product Line-Up Soon

About Forty Features to Be Released Next Season; Companies to Meet in Joint Conventions

WITH the Pathe expansion and recapitalization plan approved by stockholders, at a meeting last week, executives of Pathe and P.D.C. at the Coast were busy mapping out production plans for the new season.

Phil Reisman, P.D.C. sales manager, wired The News that the De Mille-P.D.C. company would release a program next season of approximately forty pictures, including five road-shows, ten specials and twenty-five program pictures. Detailed announcement will be made soon. At the same time, the Pathe short features and other subjects will be made known.

Joint conventions of both companies will be held in New York, May 23-24-25; Chicago, May 27-28-29; Los Angeles, June 2-3-4.

Following the ratification of the Pathe expansion plan by its stockholders, it will be necessary to wait twenty days before the merger is put into effect.

At the ratification meeting, out of the 208,633 shares of stock, 165,274 were represented, voting unanimously to ratify and approve the plan.

This plan contemplates the exchange of each share of the present Class A common stock, upon which dividends of $3 a year are being paid; for one share of a new Class A $4 preference stock having a participating feature, together with one-half share of new Common; and also contemplates the acquisition of production and exhibition facilities from the Cinema Corporation of America and the Keith-Orpheum Circuits.

Conferring at the Coast on the new product line-up this week were John C. Flinn, Phil Reisman, P. A. Parsons and Frank Pope with Cecil B. DeMille and others.

Hoffman Discusses Process

Tiffany Will Employ Third Dimension Invention in Productions; No Change in Theatre Equipment Needed

ON February 16th, M. H. Hoffman, vice-president of Tiffany Productions, Inc., announced after his return from Europe that he had acquired the Third Dimension in pictures. Mr. Hoffman states that the inventors of the Third Dimension pictures, Messrs. Emil and Jacques Burkhardt, are now on their way to the United States and are expected to arrive in New York the end of May.

In the meantime, for the past three months, Mr. Hoffman has been working up material for the story to be made with the third dimension process. He stated that it should be understood that the plans for the use of the new process are not to be limited by Tiffany to specials only. It is contemplated that several or perhaps even all of the forthcoming Twenty Gems, as well as the special productions, will employ this process.

The projection machines now being used, no matter what make, will not need any remodelling or replacing. The screens, large or small, have no bearing on the effectiveness of this method of production of photoplays, Mr. Hoffman states.

According to the plans of Tiffany it is probable that certain Tiffany short subjects will be made with this new process.

Agnes Ayres Heads Pathe's Schedule of Shorts

Agnes Ayres is the star of "Eve's Love Letters," a Hal Roach two-reel comedy which heads the Pathe program of short subject releases for the week of May 29. The other offerings on the schedule are "Smith's Fishing Trip;" "Hunting for Germans With Will Rogers, in Berlin," a Will Rogers single reel; "Topics of the Day, No. 22; "Digging for Gold," an Aesop film fable; "Chills and Fever," a Grantland Rice Sportlight; "The Imposter," chapter eight of the serial "Melting Millions;" and issues No. 46 and 47 of the Pathe newsreel.

With Agnes Ayres in "Eve's Love Letters" are Stan Laurel, Forrest Stanley, and others, who were directed by Leo McCarey and supervised over by F. Richard Jones. In the Smith Family comedy are Mary Ann Jackson, Raymond McKee and Ruth Hiatt; they were directed by Alf Goulding. The issue of Pathe Review presents "Terpischore, The Temptress," "Penetrating the Stream of Life," "The Fashion Farmer" and "The Geysers of Yellowstone Park."

Educat'l Begins Work on First of New Comedies

Actual production work on the first of the 1927-28 schedule of comedies to be produced and released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., was inaugurated last Thursday, May 12, with three companies shooting. Lloyd Hamilton is making the first of a series of eight two-reel comedies for the new year. Norman Taurog is directing with Harry Foy as his assistant director. Frank Martin is gag man and Leonard Smith supervises over the photography.

The Mermaid series, featuring Phil Dunham, George Davis and Clem Beauchamp, have been started by Director Stephen Roberts, who has as assistant director Eddie Mull, and as comedy constructor, Johnny Lockhart. Dwight Warren is at the cameras. Charles Lamont is again directing Lupino Lane this year. Dorothy Devore, new star comedienne on the Educational program, is to begin work June 1 on the first of her series of six which will be made at the Educational studio under the supervision of Jack White.

The Educational producing plant has been thoroughly renovated and painted during the regular layoff between producing periods. New equipment has been purchased to take care of the increased schedule of comedies that the studio will turn out during the coming months. In order that the handling of production and publicity stills may be facilitated, E. H. Allen, general manager of the Educational studio, has installed a complete photographic laboratory for this purpose. The laboratory will be in charge of John Shepek under the supervision of Dwight Warren. The portrait studio has also been enlarged.

Anita Stewart in Levine Serial of South Seas

Nat Levine, producer of the two serials, "The Silent Flyer" and "The Goldwyn Stallion," is now at work on his third chapter-play—a story of the South Seas in which Anita Stewart will take the featured role. George Hull, former scenarist for Paramount, has prepared the story. Harry Webb, director of "The Golden Stallion," will again wield the megaphone.

First Division Organized; 18 Films Announced

A STATEMENT from Jesse Goldburg, independent producer and distributor, announces the formation of First Division Distributors, Inc., an independent distributing company which is offering for the 1927-28 season twelve Chadwick productions, six First Division pictures and one road show as its product for its first year.

Mr. Goldburg is president of First Division, Joseph Simmonds is vice-president and treasurer, Harry Kosch, secretary, and Jack Lustberg, assistant secretary.

Six of the season's program of pictures have been completed. They are: "The Return of Boston Blackie" with Strongheart, dog actor, Corliss Palmer; "The Ladybird," starring Betty Compson; "Say It With Diamonds," featuring Jocelyn Lee and Betty Baker; "Temptations of a Shopgirl," also starring Betty Compson; "Finnegan's Ball," with Cullen Landis and Blanche Mehaffey; "Death Valley." Now on location at Tahiti is "The Lure of the South Seas" unit and shortly to go into production as a road show for the late fall season will be "The Steel Frontier." Completing the list of nineteen pictures are "The Age of Sex," "Brunettes Preferred," "Algerian Love," "Love in a Cottage," "Friday the 13th," "Comrades," "Free Kisses," "The Belle of Avenue A," "Foul Play," "Rag Time" and "Creole Love." Mr. Goldburg has decided to feature Bob Custer in several society dramas. His first vehicle is being sought now.

M-G-M Starts Production on New McCoy Film

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's next production starring Tim McCoy will be about the Boxer uprising in China. It is being prepared especially for McCoy by Peter B. Kyne and is as yet untitled. Many Chinese will appear in the picture which was placed in production last week under the direction of W. S. Van Dyke, Claire Windsor will apear as the principal feminine player and others in the cast will be the Oriental actor, Sojin, Cyril Chadwick, Lawson Butt, Frank Currier and Emily Fitzroy. Tom Gubbins, the "mayor" of Los Angeles' Chinatown, will aid in its production.

Ethel Wales Signs New Contract With De Mille

Ethel Wales, character actress who has appeared in twenty-three pictures directed by Cecil and William De Mille, has been placed by the former under a long term contract. The De Mille studio is so scheduling her work that she may appear simultaneously in "The Country Doctor" and "The Bar Sinister." The latter picture will be a screen version of a story by Richard Harding Davis and will star Very Reynolds.

Vernon Smith Supervising Sennett-Pathe Comedies

Mack Sennett, comedy producer, has appointed Vernon Smith supervising director of all Mack Sennett units producing Pathe comedies. The new Sennett executive is returning to the Pathe fold after an absence of ten months.

F. N. Producers at Work

Ten Pictures Are Now in the Making; Many More Completed or in Preparatory Stages

WITH the return of Richard A. Rowland, First National general and production manager, prevailing—the First National production units at the Burbank studio are well started on pictures for the new season or on preparations for the latter—the actual [illegible] of them. The above mentioned policy refers to that of making each unit an independent producing organization under the supervision of the West Coast production manager, John McCormick, and by means of which each production unit is given free rein in the production of a film, unhampered by official red tape. During the new season this policy will be continued.

A Colleen Moore vehicle, "Naughty But Nice," has just been completed by John McCormick, producer of the Moore films, who is starting her new picture tentatively titled, "Oh, What a Life!" Ray Rockett has finished "Lonesome Ladies" and is preparing to place in work "The [illegible]," "Crystal Cup," from the novel by Gertrude Atherton. Following "The Patent Leather Kid," now being filmed, Al Rockett will launch "The Drop Kick," a Richard Barthelmess vehicle.

Having completed "Framed," Charles R. Rogers, producer, is now engaged on "The Devil's Saddle," starring Ken Maynard, and "The Road to Romance," with Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall. "The Stolen Bride," featuring Billie Dove, was finished late in April by Carey Wilson; the star's second starring picture will be "The American Beauty," soon to be placed in work. Wid Gunning, who recently finished "Babe Comes Home," is producing "Hard-Boiled Haggerty;" "The Poor Nut," Jess Smith's production, is another completed film, as is "The Prince of Headwaiters." S. E. Rork produced the latter production and his next will be "A Texas Steer," which will star Will Rogers. Shooting was started late in April on Harry Langdon's [illegible] picture while the Johnny Hines story, "White Pants Willie," is still in work. Hines' next will be "A Pair of Sixes."

In the East Robert Kane's "Dance Magic" is going into the cutting room; his next will be "Hell's Kitchen." Edward Small is preparing to transfer to the screen Ralph Spence's "The Gorilla." Shooting is scheduled to start in June on the next Charlie Murray-George Sidney picture.

In the hands of the cutters at the present time are "Lonesome Ladies," "The Stolen Bride" and "The Devil's Saddle."

New Talent for Paramount

Playwrights and Novelists Will Write Originals at Hollywood; Workings of Authors' Council Explained

FOLLOWING the announcement some time ago by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Paramount, of the formation of an Authors' Council whose primary purpose was to interest established writers in writing original stories for screening comes an announcement this week from B. B. Schulberg, associate producer, of the engagement by Paramount of eight nationally known authors and playwrights to come to Hollywood and write directly for the screen. The writers, each of whom will remain in Hollywood for a minimum of five weeks, are as follows:

Ernest Pascal, author of "The Dark Angel" and "The Marriage Bed," who will prepare a story for Florence Vidor; Wilson Mizner, co-author of "The Deep Purple," who will do an original story of back-stage life in New York; Jack Larrie, author of "The Easy Mark," who will do an original for Thomas Meighan; Oliver H. P. Garrett, a New York World reporter, who will write an original melodrama of crime; Kenyon Nicholson, author of "The Barker," who will write "The Tent Show Girl" for a star to be named later; John Thomas, author of "Dry Martini," who will write one story for Adolphe Menjou; and John Kirkpatrick, author of "The Book of Charm," who will write a story of youthful love for the Paramount Junior Stars of 1927, and Nunnally Johnson, author of "Rough House Rosie," who will turn out a story for Clara Bow.

The first of the authors to arrive in Los Angeles under the new system is Jack Larrie, who accompanied Herman J. Mankiewicz on the latter's return from the East. Ernest Pascal will arrive on May 24 and the others at intervals until August. These writers will be instructed in the requirements of the studio so that they will do their work for a specific purpose. The council will take a day-by-day interest in their stories and will also read the efforts of other writers whose work solicits attention. The author's plaint that his compositions are swallowed in the largeness of the modern studio and that no one pays attention to them, will, according to Paramount's plant, be eliminated in the future, stated Mr. Lasky.

Chaplin Leaves W. B.; With British Nat'l

SYD CHAPLIN has severed his relations with the Warner Brothers. By the terms of a contract signed recently by his attorney, Nathan Burkan, the comedian, will make one picture in England for British National Prod., Ltd. Max Schlesinger, of the International Variety and Theatrical Agency, represented Chaplin. The latter will probably go abroad in August. British National is to produce and distribute the picture in England, while Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will release it over the rest of the world, it is understood. The contract, with options, is for one production.

Key City Reports

New York City

LITTLE cheer was brought to the Broadway manager's last week by the reports from their box-offices. There is little doubt that the seasonal slump has set in, since practically all of the houses are feeling the effects of it.

The Roxy, with a double-feature bill, "Alaskan Adventures" and "The Love Thrill," failed to reach the hundred thousand dollar mark for the second time since opening. The next few months at this house will be watched with interest. By mid-summer the novelty will have worn off and the house will have to stand on the merits of its own programs.

The Paramount and the Capitol were no better than they should be with "Senorita" and "The Understanding Heart." The Strand, the other house chiefly affected by the Roxy, did a good week on "Convoy," thanks to Navy support, but nothing exciting.

The Rivoli with "Chang" is still going strong; "Rough Riders" is having a rough time of its at the Criterion; "Children of Divorce" was given its final decree at the Rialto after a mediocre week; "Camille" and "The Big Parade" are doing well among the two-dollar films, with "King of Kings" heading the list for capacity business; others "not so hot."

Chicago

A TERRIFIC storm which broke over Chicago on Monday evening practically making the streets impassable, cut into the week's theatre attendance, which is already showing signs of summer dullness.

At the Chicago the balance of the week was normal, with "Mr. Wu" on the screen, Spitalny's orchestral production, "Italian Caprice" and the Publix presentation, "Memory's Garden" as its features. Business as usual was the report from the Oriental, where Paul Ash celebrated his anniversary and "See You In Jail" was the feature picture. "McFadden's Flats" got away to a fair start at McVickers and the same may be said of "Babe Comes Home" at the Roosevelt.

At the Uptown, "Venus of Venice" plus Bennie Kreuger and his band brought in fair crowds, while at the Granada, "The Better 'Ole" Benny Meroof and Vitaphone did good business. Better than average business was done at the Sheridan with "The Fire Brigade" and the popular Verne Buck and his orchestra.

At the Senate and Harding "The Better 'Ole" also proved a strong attraction. Both theatres reported normal business.

On the south side, the Capitol offered "The Fourth Commandment" Vitaphone and stage band, to fair crowds during the week. The Tivoli played to average business with "Children of Divorce."

Los Angeles

THE first warm wave of the season struck Los Angeles this week sending the thermometers up around 102. Los Angeles newspapers characterized it as 'unusual weather' but whether unusual or not it played pranks with box-office receipts. A general falling off was felt all the way down the line except for a few first run houses.

At the Criterion where "Resurrection" is playing in its sixth week a decline in receipts was reported. The Carthay Circle with "7th Heaven" is attracting a lot of favorable comment which has reflected profitably at the box office. All local newspapers gave this production a great send off in their reviews.

"Mr. Wu" is hitting along nicely in its sixth week at the Forum Theatre. "The Fire Brigade" closes this week at the Million Dollar and "Rookies" will take its place. The fire picture was liked by all who viewed it but the picture did not remain as long as expected.

"The Tender Hour" at Loew's State is not doing so well as a top notch production but the theatre management has backed it up with a strong program of entertainment and as a result the theatre is doing satisfactorily.

Normal business is reported for "The Whirlwind of Youth" at the Metropolitan.

Boston

THERE was some falling off in down town theatres during the week which will probably continue for the next few weeks, or until the influx of summer vacationists starts. The decrease was not noticeable in the seating in the houses, but was apparent in the box office returns. Daylight saving may have assisted in reducing the attendance together with the opening of most of the summer dance halls at the various summer resorts.

With the gradual closing of the legitimate houses as their runs expire, a large number of patrons are released to the motion picture theatres of down town Boston and it is very probable that last week's attendances may prove about an average for the forthcoming three or four months. Suburban theatres show practically no decrease.

The Metropolitan continues playing to large audiences, with Gene Rodemich as the main feature for the week. An addition to the program is the Harmonica Band, proving a decidedly popular novelty with a surprising amount of real music. This feature was under the direction of Borrah Minevitch. "Convoy" was the film feature and was favorably received.

Loew's State shows "Slide, Kelly, Slide" for the feature while it continues its stage number, Tommy Christian's Band. An added feature is a style show and dance act by Mr. and Mrs. David Murray.

Keith-Albee's Boston featured "Taxi-Taxi" with good success and will continue its policy of a feature film with its vaudeville indefinitely.

The double feature at the twin house, the Modern and Beacon, is "Heart of Salome" and "Princess from Hoboken" and played to an average business. "Fashions for Women" at the Lancaster, with added numbers, on the bill, drew good houses. "Mother" at the Fenway, "Three Hours" at the Capitol, "Too Many Crooks" at the University and "The Love of Sunya" at Loew's Orpheum played to better than average houses.

Cleveland

A GENERAL depression without any diagnosed reason was felt all through the city last week. Unsettled weather had something to do with it. But all theatres, legitimate and motion picture, report a consistently poor week.

"Rookies" finished its fourth and last week at the Cameo somewhat below what it did earlier in the engagement. "The Tender Hour" was only a moderate drawing card at the Stillman. "Three Hours" failed to attract much of any business at the Allen, the picture being too long and complicated to excite interest. "Senorita Whirlwind" brought Bebe Daniels' loyal friends and supporters to the State, of whom there are many, but not enough to lift the State's business up to normal.

The Park was not able to do much with a second run of "Slide, Kelly, Slide" following a three weeks' run of the picture down town. "Afraid to Love" at Keith's Palace, backed by a strong vaudeville bill, managed to draw fair crowds. Reade's Hippodrome, apropos Mother's Day, presented Belle Bennett in "Mother" the first half of the week and did pretty well.

"Stage Madness" at Keith's East 10th St. house all week and at Reade's Hippodrome the last half of the week reports below average business. "The Fourth Commandment" was liked by those attending the Circle, many of whom came to hear the Vitaphone program fully as much as to see the picture.

A circus ate into the local amusement profits, but otherwise no reason has been assigned for the week's depression.

Philadelphia

THE outstanding business in Philadelphia during the past week was done at the Stanley Theatre with Lon Chaney in "Mr. Wu" as the cinema feature. The bill was augmented by Russell Markert's Sixteen American Rockets and Swegle's Rainbow Sextette. The house played to capacity business practically every night during the week and the matinees were extraordinarily good.

"The Fire Brigade," held over for a second week at the Stanton, did just a fair business.

Elinor Glyn's "Ritzy," with Betty Bronson, had only a fair week at the Karlton. "The Telephone Girl" with an all-star cast at the Arcadia did just a fair business.

Richard Dix in "Knock-out Reilly" at the Palace, where it was played as a repeat after the Stanton, did very well.

"The Fourth Commandment" at the Globe did fairly well while "An Affair of the Follies" with Lewis Stone and Billie Dove, at the Victoria, got a large amount of transient patronage.

The Fox, which has been doing exceptional business of late, maintained the pace with "Altars of Desire."

St. Louis

BUSINESS generally speaking was much better than in previous weeks. This is especially true of the neighborhood houses. Many of these houses are apparently getting back to normal, although admittedly business could be considerably better.

"Babe Comes Home" was the offering at the Missouri Theatre during the week and it proved a very popular attraction. "Babe" Ruth, the star of the picture, was in St. Louis with the New York Yankees on May 10, 11, 12 and 13 and he helped business for the Missouri by making personal appearances at night shows while in town.

Down at the Ambassador "Don Juan" was the screen attraction. It was a second run for this picture in St. Louis as it played at advanced prices here several months ago in conjunction with the Vitaphone. However, business was very good for the week.

Loew's State offered Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky in "The Night of Love." The Grand Central offering was "The Potters" while the St. Louis showed the exotic Jetta Goudal in "White Gold" in conjunction with the usual offering of Orpheum vaudeville. All of these houses had satisfactory business.

Ottawa

PLENTY of rain kept many people at home in Ottawa, Ontario, during the week of May 9, but, if the weather hurt the theatres, it absolutely ruined the activities of a carnival company which parked itself in the centre of the city. Ottawa exhibitors also felt competition from a road show, George White's "Scandals," and a new stock company, but still the moving picture houses are doing well.

The Centre Theatre drew packed houses for Constance Talmadge in "Venus of Venice" while Manager Ray Taubman of the Regent found that night crowds were big for "The Beloved Rogue" but the afternoons fell off. "Fighting Love" at B. F. Keith's Theatre was liked by the fans who crave action and they turned out quite well to see it. The Imperial Theatre secured only fair business with "Slide, Kelly, Slide" but the new Famous Players management here is busily engaged in building up patronage at the Imperial once more with a new orchestra, better short subjects and more balanced bills.

The Francis Theatre enjoyed steady, though not unusual, patronage for three features during the week, "Passionate Quest," "Skinner's Dress Suit" and "Hero of the Big Snows."

French-Canadians do like pictures of lighter vein and they took kindly to "Taxi! Taxi!" at the Eden Theatre in Hull, Quebec. "Faust" at the Laurier Theatre made a fair impression and attracted steady crowds.

Detroit

BOX office receipts continued on a decline despite cooler weather temperatures. Sudden and severe changes in atmosphere were probably the most natural cause for poor business. Partly stormy days was another factor tending to keep crowds away.

The Michigan Theatre did fairly well during the early part of the week with Belle Bennett in "Mother" and a fine stage presentation called "Way Down South," which drew because of its exceptional talent. Business picked up towards the end and coins poured in at the cashier during the last few days.

"Rough House Rosie," the Capitol picture, starring Clara Bow, pulled in an average attendance the first day and flopped after the fifth screening. The stage show feature did not help much.

At the State, Edna Wallace Hopper, a stage show and "Broadway Nights," featuring Lois Wilson and Sam Hardy, failed to arouse much excitement among theatregoers.

The Adams picture, "Convoy," with heavy publicity, did not come up to expectations, although it could hardly be called a losing proposition. Papers gave it a nice write-up and many fans discussed it but no line riots took place in front of the theatre.

Dempsey-Tunney fight pictures, Vitaphone and "Taxi! Taxi!" attracted considerable attention throughout the week and the Madison management neglected to worry a great deal over its finances. These attractions are to be held over a second week and perhaps longer.

Kansas City

COLD and gloomy this week failed to decrease the attendance at most first run theatres as did a week of rain last week. At the Royal, "Slide, Kelly, Slide!" did a big second week, the matinees being unusually satisfactory, according to the management.

John Barrymore in "The Beloved Rogue" at the Newman played to a good attendance all week, the week's business being much better than the week before. At the Liberty Elinor Glyn's "Love's Blindness" did an exceptionally good business, although the picture was not exploited more than usual.

At the Pantages the picture, "Mother," was ultra timely, Sunday having been Mother's Day, and attendance was better than the average by far. "Afraid To Love" at the Mainstreet held up well all week, as did "Jim The Conqueror" at the Globe.

San Francisco

BUSINESS, generally, was good in both first run and residential houses during the past week although a couple of disappointments were felt. These disappointments, however, were not great.

The Pantages Theatre did a big business with "The Yankee Clipper." Elinor Fair and William Boyd appearing for three days in person on the stage of the Pantages, crowded the theatre so that in some cases there was only standing room. They were the stars in the picture and were on their honeymoon.

"The Night of Love" was shown at the St. Francis theatre for the third week and the theatre was well filled. "Whirlwind of Youth" shown at the California Theatre was designated as a cute picture by those who attended this house and whose remarks were heard as they went out. "Children of Divorce" was a slight disappointment at the Granada Theatre, the people not caring so much for it. The presentation act, "Way Out West," showing far western scenes, was considered clever.

"Mr. Wu," at Loew's Warfield Theatre, did fairly well, the idea that it being a Chinese picture with Chinese acting attracting much attention the first part of the week, although the second half was not so popular. On the stage, "Fan Idea," showin Chinese dancing, was popular.

"White Gold" at the Golden Gate Theatre, proved popular, the majority, however, going because of the vaudeville acts. "The Truthful Sex," at the Union Square attracted a great many, the acts also attracting. "Kid Boots" at the Cameo was very much liked.

"Paradise For Two," did well in the residential theatre, the Coliseum of the Levin Circuit, as did "A Denver Dude" at the Wigwam Theatre. Here the musical comedy "A New York Night Club," helped to attract the crowds.

Minneapolis

THREE big pictures were given their Minneapolis premier during the past week, but only one of them lived up to its reputation as a box office smash. "Slide, Kelly, Slide," with William Haines, did a splendid business at the State theatre. A stage feature, arranged in honor of the birthday of Eddie Dunstedter, popular State organist, undoubtedly helped to pull in the crowds. This feature was widely advertised.

Lillian Gish in "The Scarlet Letter," which was scheduled to knock the town cold, did only a fair business at the Strand, and as a result was not held over for a second week.

At the Garrick, the much touted "Sunya," with Gloria Swanson, was more or less of a flop, and pulled in only average crowds.

The smaller houses, as a rule, did very good business. Lewis Stone and Barbara Bedford in "The Notorious Lady" proved popular at the Lyric, while "Casey at the Bat" packed the Strand, a second run house in the loop. Good crowds were the rule at the suburban houses, including the Loring with "Blonde or Brunette;" "Night of Love," and "The Sea Tiger;" the Lagoon with "Altars of Desire," "Casey at the Bat" and "The Devil Horse;" and the Lyndale with "It," "While London Sleeps" and "The Family Upstairs."

"The Naked Truth" went into its fifth week at the New Garden and continued to attract the women. This film has shown four weeks to women and one to men.

Madge Bellamy in "Ankles Preferred" helped to roll up a good gross for Pantages, and "The Little Adventuress," with Vera Reynolds, was an attraction at the Hennepin-Orpeum.

The weather for the week was cold and rainy. Edith Taliaferro in "The Little Minister" at the Shubert was about the only serious competition for the picture houses.

Seattle

PLAYING its second week to capacity business, "The Better 'Ole" and Vitaphone hung up this past week's record at John Hamrick's Blue Mouse Theatre. Spring weather had little effect upon theatre business generally.

Second in appeal this week came "The Love of Sunya" at the United Artists Theatre. This was the second and final week for the Swanson picture. George Lipschultz's musical setting and violin solos were enthusiastically received.

At the Columbia Theatre, Bob Bender attracted better than average business with "The Fourth Commandment" and "The Collegians." Attendance was very good for the entire engagement.

The Fifth Avenue Theatre offered "Fashions for Women'' but the picture was not very well received. A stage fashion show was somewhat of a redeeming feature. Fancon and Marco's ''In Dutch'' revue just about lived up to its name with the audiences. Business below normal.

''The Cruise of the Jasper B'' and ''Mother'' at the Pantages and Winter Garden Theatres, respectively, did a fair share of the week's business. ''The First Night'' at the Embassy attracted average houses.

Generally, the week would be classed as below average for this time of year.

New Orleans

DOWNTOWN motion picture theatres in New Orleans showed a big increase in patronage during the past week.

Huge crowds were attracted to the new Saenger Theatre which showed ''Resurrection,'' starring Rod LaRocque, Dolores Del Rio and a cast of thousands. This, coupled with a gorgeous New York Publix stage show, was one of the most diverting bills presented at the big Canal street playhouse since its opening. As usual Loew's State theatre continues to pack them in at almost every performance. ''Let It Rain,'' starring Douglas MacLean and Shirley Mason, was such an entertaining picture that this alone could have filled the theatre. But with five Broadway Loew acts of the highest order the show's business was one of the best this season. Manager Rodney Toups and his press agent are always on the job and handled the exploitation excellently.

''The Telephone Girl'' at Saenger's Strand pulled them in. Madge Bellamy has the lead. At the Liberty, ''Paradise For Two,'' with Richard Dix and Betty Bronson, drew its share of the patronage. Richard Dix is a favorite with the New Orleans girls.

New Orleans is in the midst of a successful baseball season and with the showing of ''Casey at the Bat,'' at Saenger's Crescent theatre, New Orleans flocked in great numbers. In addition a musical comedy show teeming with pretty girls was presented. Mae Murray continues to prove a popular star with local playgoers. ''Altars of Desire,'' was the picture in which she appeared in the past week and the usual crowd of Mae Murray admirers packed the Globe at almost every show.

Although ''Slide, Kelly, Slide,'' had its local premiere at Loew's State theatre about a month ago, it is still packing them in wherever it is shown downtown. At the Trianon full houses saw William Haines and Sally O'Neill in this great drama of the American pastime.

Schiro's Tudor did their usual good business with ''One Increasing Purpose.'' The Orpheum showed ''The Little Adventuress,'' with Vera Reynolds, but it was the stage bill that filled the seats in this play house.

All neighborhood theatres report a big jump in attendance, especially the new Prytania, Mecca, Lyceum, Cortez, Gaiety, Capitol and Tivoli.

Central Pennsylvania

QUITE satisfactory business was reported by the leading picture houses in Harrisburg, the week of May 9, notwithstanding some managers had anticipated reduced receipts due to the presence of two circuses. Instead of drawing from the theatres the circuses actually helped on account of attracting out of town patronage.

Exceptionally large crowds were attracted to Loew's Regent, where the offering was Lon Chaney in ''Mr. Wu.'' Not only was the play a particularly strong one but Manager Melniker had extensively advertised the fact that the week marked the celebration of the second anniversary of Loew ownership of the theatre, and there were especially good secondary attractions.

A combination of Corinne Griffith, in ''The Lady in Ermine,'' and Will Rogers in ''In Dublin,'' packed them into the Colonial all week. At the Victoria the feature film was Gilda Gray in ''Cabaret,'' and this, too, proved a big drawing card. The offering at the Broad was ''Mother,'' starring Belle Bennett, and it proved popular, particularly as it came immediately following ''Mother's Day.'' Satisfactory business was done at the State, where the film feature was ''Love Makes 'Em Wild.'' ''The Road to Yesterday'' was the offering at the Russell, and was well received.

Albany

WITH the weather ranging all the way from thunder and lightning storms during the late afternoon and early evenings to muggy days and with the latter part of the week turning cool and pleasant, the motion picture theatres of Albany demonstrated last week their drawing power against decidedly adverse conditions on more than one night.

The best bet of the week, probably, from the standpoint of attendance, was ''Mr. Wu,'' running at the Leland and packing the house each night no matter what the weather conditions happened to be. In fact there were standing crowds for every second show each evening. In addition to the feature, the theatre also added to its attractive program with a Grantland Rice sport picture of Lake Placid scenes, familiar to many Albanians.

The Mark Strand did an excellent business throughout the week with ''The Resurrection,'' coupled with the Vitaphone. Business was only fair at the Mark Ritz with ''So This Is Paris.'' The Clinton Square theatre ran fair with ''Her Father Said No.''

In Troy, ''The Love of Sunya'' ran to good business for four days at the Troy, while ''The Notorious Lady'' during the last three days of the week, did nothing out of the ordinary. At the Lincoln ''Knockout Reilly'' pleased, as was evident from the crowds. One of the best bets of the week was ''The Fire Brigade'' at Proctor's.

Portland, Ore.

''KNOCKOUT REILLY'' at the Broadway improved the appearance of the ledger considerably over the preceding week when ''Special Delivery'' was on. The picture was quite popular, even with women fans.

The Liberty reported just average business with ''The Fire Brigade,'' and average business for the Liberty these days is not too good. All who came were impressed with the melo, and went out praising it.

''The Yankee Clipper'' did brisk business for the Columbia and was generally liked. Management reports not a single adverse criticism.

''The Whirlwind of Youth'' worried along to rather dull business all week at the Rivoli. Patrons seemed to enjoy the picture, but not enough of them were intrigued into attending by either cast or title.

''The Better 'Ole'' still clicks merrily at the Blue Mouse. Picture got unanimous approval.

The Peoples played ''Casey at the Bat'' for the first three days of the week with satisfactory results. However, ''The Music Master,'' put on for the last four days, was somewhat of a disappointment.

Salt Lake City

THE past week in Salt Lake commenced with a cold, stormy outlook, but true to spring form suddenly changed into sunny pleasing weather, and the down town picture theatres have enjoyed a fair portion of good business during the week.

The Paramount Empress Theatre has had a very good week during the showing of ''Children of Divorce,'' starring Clara Bow and Esther Ralston, with an added stage attraction being offered in connection with the picture program. The Victory Theatre has had a so-called ''Split week,'' having shown ''The Love Gamble'' for the first few days, and finishing up with ''The Telephone Girl.'' Both of these productions are reported to have gone over in a fairly good manner.

The double feature program shown at the American consisted of ''The Brute,'' starring Monte Blue, and ''The Wrong Mr. Wright,'' with capacity business still being enjoyed. Leatrice Joy and Charles Ray in ''Nobody's Widow'' was the drawing card at the Gem, and the second showing of ''Tell It To the Marines'' has crowded the house at the Kinema. In connection with ''The Desert's Toll,'' a locally filmed picture of the recent Track Meet at B.Y.U., Provo, Utah, attracted a great deal of attention among theatre goers from that section at the Pantages. ''The Runaway Express'' topped the vaudeville program at the Orpheum, with a good business having been experienced. The second run theatres and the neighborhood houses also played to good crowds last week.

Milwaukee

THIS was a week of rain, the kind of week that might at some other time have left the down town theatres very nearly empty. But not so this week. Milwaukee managers introduced this week's pictures with some unusual exploitation.

The result was that the ''Yankee Clipper'' at the Alhambra came very near to breaking the house record on Sunday. If it had not been for the steady down pour all day, past records would have been badly smashed. The Merrill, with some very wide awake exploitation, was crowded at every performance of ''Rookies.'' ''Don Juan'' succeeded in bringing a very gratifying crowd to the Wisconsin. ''Puppets'' at the Garden and ''Children of Divorce'' at the Merrill also shared in the good business of the week.

The south side neighborhood houses, the Mirth, Plaza, and Modjeska found business greatly stimulated by the beauty contests held at each theatre for the selection of Miss Milwaukee. The Mirth added ''McFadden's Flats'' to the evening's entertainment and the Modjeska offered ''Cabaret.'' ''Casey at the Bat'' was a popular attraction at the Milwaukee. The Venetian's showing of ''The Scarlet Letter was exceedingly well attended.

"Atta Baby"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

AS a laugh producer Big Boy wins our unqualified endorsement, for the manner in which this three year old registers pathos or the effervescent spirits of youth leaves no doubt in our mind that he is one of the best comedy luminaries in the screen firmament. Not at all camera-conscious he wanders through these playlets and performs his business without once giving the idea that he is being directed. Charles Lamont deserves great credit for his sympathetic handling of the youngster.

It seems Big Boy is a Bad Boy too, for in this latest story he substituted paint for his brother's milk and mother was forced to put him to bed and deny him the delights of the circus to which the rest of the family were treated. But Big Boy gets there where an amazing number of gags are introduced each one funnier than its predecessor as the child, through no effort of his own, becomes one of the artists; and then he woke up.

Its a wow.

"Don Go On"

(F. B. O.—One Reel)

BILL NOLAN makes his cartoon character, Krazy Kat, play the great lover in this one. The Kat is awestruck when he sees a poster of the Spanish Don of legend, who is reputed to have had easy access to the feminine heart. Deciding to try his hand at loving he pursues that game with diligence and some not too successful results occur. The feline serenades fair creatures 'neath moonlit balconies, crosses swords with an irate father, who spoils his wooing, and takes to his steed with the father in pursuit. A combat on horseback ensues and the Kat, disillusioned, returns to mock the poster's figure, a wiser and more serious minded animal. A fairly ingenious cartoon.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Auntie's Ante"

(Cameo-Educational—One Reel)

IF they're hungry for slapstick this should prove good screen fare as there are ten minutes of this brand of comedy unreeled in the latest Cameo effort, with Wallace Lupino furnishing most of the guffaws. Broke, and owing his board bill, he manages to secure food through the business of heaving shoes at a milk man and baker's errand boy who retort with edible missiles. Receiving a visit from his aunt he practices deception as to his financial standing, but having been thrown out of his fictitious residence he confesses and wins forgiveness.

Sam Newfield directed and the cast includes Madge Hunt, Robert Graves, and Georgia O'Dell.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"A Dream of the Sea"

(Craig Hutchinson Prod.—Film Distributing Corp.—State Rights—One Reel)

HERE'S eight hundred fifty feet of film that can legitimately go well on any program. The picture is produced in Binocolor, a new process in color photography, and is pleasing from a beauty standpoint. Craig Hutchinson, the producer and director, has turned out an interesting subject. There is not much story but that is of no consequence because what is shown on the screen carries you along in interesting style and is entertaining.

It is a fairy tale of a rich boy who meets a beautiful girl at the beach while bathing. The scenes, except for a few studio sets, are all laid around the ocean front. It is beautifully photographed and the groupings of characters and locations chosen are exquisite. Nita Cavelier, the girl, is very pretty and has lots of appeal. It is quite "sexy" but there is nothing in the picture to offend anyone. It should prove a nice little highlight on any program.

"A Dream of the Sea" is the third completed of the "Romances in Color" series. The other two are, "If Dreams Come True" and "Sleeping Beauty." A series of twelve will be released on the state right market.—WILLIAM McCORMACK.

"Smith's Fishing Trip"

(Sennett-Pathe—Two Reels

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

WHILE containing sufficient comedy to ain the vast majority we were disappointed because Baby Mary Ann didn't receive as much footage as was accorded in the previous instalment of the trials and tribulations of this couple.

There are some fairly funny gags in this story, but they've all been seen in one form or other in "fishing comedies" previously produced, but for us, everything would be all right if they had made more celluloid allowance for the child.

Smith and family visit a friend in the country, Smith planning to fish extensively. On their arrival they find Spring cleaning in progress, and poor Smith is called on to move a piano, beat carpets, paper the walls, etc., while his lazy host manages to escape. It's a human account of a human family.

Mary Ann Jackson is the baby, and Raymond McKee and Ruth Hiatt papa and mamma; Andy Clyde in support. Directed by Alf Goulding.

"Growing Money"

(Educational—One Reel)

THE latest issue of "Curiosities" is a decided improvement over the last of the series through the acquisition of the Beth Brown brand of titling and editing which ties up these library shots in a connected story instead of the haphazard manner of projecting disconnected scenes on view in previous numbers. "Growing Money" is both interesting and educational in addition to exhibiting some beautiful scenery, snow banks, cotton fields, etc. The idea which makes for good continuity is the explanatory title preceding each shot telling of the money-making possibilities of the various industries.

A worthy addition to your program.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Rogers in Germany"

(Pathe—One Reel)

THIS is one of the "Our Unofficial Ambassadors Abroad" series, in which Will Rogers takes us to see the famous places of countries abroad; this week Germany. With Rogers we visit several of the palaces formerly inhabited by Kaiser Wilhelm of World War fame (?), some of the spots of beauty in the suburbs of Berlin, and lastly, a night view of Germany's capital. Rogers supplied the subtitles, which are explanatory and fairly humorous.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Hold That Bear"

(Cameo-Educational—One Reel)

COMEDY of the slapstick order which may draw a chuckle here and there, but nothing much to it except the chase of a bear and the usual knock-a-bout antics of the cast. Phil Dunham, Estelle Bradley, Al Thompson, Henry Murdock and George Atterbury do all that's required of them.

It's a good bet for the children.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Barrymore Tommy"

(Universal Mustang—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Edw. G. Johnston)

EXHIBITORS who book these two reel Fred Gilman Westerns will find that this one is well up to par, having the usual amount of riding, fighting, etc.

The scene is laid in Little Creek, where the only hostelry is steadily losing out for the reason that the wild and wooly Western atmosphere is no more. Fred, in the role of "Barrymore Tommy," a versatile character owning a mixture of histronic and gun-shooting ability, undertakes to provide some excitement. And why not, for he is in love with the hotel man's daughter and wants to see him get along. A New York crook appears and crosses Tommy's love affair to the extent of getting an elopement under way and at the same time steals $5,000. The New York chap turns out to be much wanted by the police and after a wild ride the eloping couple are caught. And, of course, the heroine always loved Tommy, anyway.

"George's Many Loves"

(Universal-Stern Bros.—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Edw. G. Johnston)

SID SAYLOR is the featured player in this Stern Bros.' two reeler, and Director Scott Pembroke is to be credited with a pretty fair piece of work. Saylor, as "George," is thrown out of his home for causing his father to lose a hard-fought checker game. He contracts a black eye during the eviction. He arrives at a summer hotel ahead of the expected visit of a champion pugilist who is also decorated with a black eye from his last fight. George is taken for the champ and is besieged by the girl guests. The champ arrives and George leaves, but is again "picked up" by a large blond vamp. He finally decides to walk home and on the way is enamoured of a girl who turns out to be his father's choice of a mate.

"Felix the Cat in Eye Jinks"

(Educational—One Reel)

FELIX in an occulist's store undergoes the same experiences as the well-known "bull in the China shop." He is hired to exterminate the mice but they prove one too many for him numerically and intellectually, making him the butt of a series of mousy jokes which annoy him and should amuse the spectators.

This is worth-while seeing.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Chills and Fever"

(Sportlight-Pathe—One Reel)

A COMPARISON of winter sports as indulged in North and South forms the subject matter for this week's issue of the Grantland Rice series. Toboggans at Lake Placid and water sleds at Palm Beach; ice-boating and sunland boating; dancing and skiing; choose your own form of pleasure. Interesting, entertaining and capable of arousing envy in those of us not fortunate enough to travel either way.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Digging For Gold"

(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

THE average amount of giggles are to be drawn from the current issue of the Aesop's Fables, in which Al Falfa and his cohorts quest for gold in "them thar hills," but, unwittingly, they mine a claim already taken. Discovered, they flee and take refuge in a "gilded" den of iniquity, but again invite trouble and get it. O. K. for any house.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

Is Zat So?

Stage Hit Makes First Rate Comedy

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE stage play which made a delightful comedy, written as it was around a prizefighter and his wisecracking manager, is in the bag insofar as the celluloid version is concerned. It was sure-fire stuff in the original—and its adaptation almost speaks the same language. If it isn't as funny the reason may be found in the silence of the crisp dialogue—and the wealth of stage "business" which aided largely in putting it over.

"Is Zat So?" sticks to its idea, characterization and incident with good fidelity—even to incorporating many of the wisecracks. The two central figures dominate the action just as they did in the play—and carry on a give-and-take by-play. The camera is so penetrating, however, that it shows up the plot skeleton as nothing much to rave about. This was effectively covered up in the play due to the above-mentioned "business."

It falls upon Edmund Lowe and George O'Brien to keep it moving. And both acquit themselves well, though O'Brien doesn't make the "pug" quite the dumbbell as he was portrayed originally. However, he is colorful enough to please any follower of the ring. The piece is appropriately staged and travels its journey across the screen with speed—and an adequate amount of punch.

The Cast: George O'Brien, Edmund Lowe, Kathryn Perry, Cyril Chadwick, Doris Lloyd, Dione Ellis, Richard Maitland, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Philippe De Lacy, Jack Herrick. Director, Alfred Green.

THEME: Comedy-drama of prizefighter who is "wisecracked" into winning the championship by his manager. Both win their sweethearts.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The gags and incident. The ring scene. The reconciliation after romantic misunderstanding. The subtitles. The atmosphere.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up as smart comedy of stage hit. Tease the title. Use stills of Lowe and O'Brien. Tie up with athletic clubs, fight clubs, etc.

DRAWING POWER: Should do business on its title. O. K. for downtown houses and general trade.

Length, six reels. Released, May, 1927.

The Telephone Girl

Interesting and Well Acted

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE'S not so much that is new of plot here—it's the way it is done that satisfies. Herbert Brenon, who made it, knew his dramatic situations here and how to project them properly. In spite of the obvious theme and the conventional settings he has succeeded in capturing a deal of suspense. We have before us the telephone operator who, sitting in on the plugs and cords, discovers some valuable information. And uses it to bring out the truth.

The story builds convincingly because it is treated with fine realities. Any slight variation on the side of sentiment or heavy heart interest would have spelled ruin. Brenon, however, steered a straight course—and played for his dramatic situations and won. The picture carries a strong and well-balanced cast that comprises Madge Bellamy—who extracts a deal of emotion from the title role—Holbrook Blinn, Warner Baxter, May Allison, Hale Hamilton and Lawrence Gray.

The Cast: Madge Bellamy, Holbrook Blinn, Warner Baxter, May Allison, Lawrence Gray, Hale Hamilton, Hamilton Revelle, William E. Shay, Karin Hansen. Director, Herbert Brenon.

THEME: Drama of politics with boss determined to wreck opposing candidate with polite blackmail. Is frustrated by courageous telephone girl.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The incident of boss and the frame-up. The scenes in hotel. The frustration of political scheme. The romantic complications. The first rate photography. The splendid acting by Madge Bellamy, May Allison, Holbrook Blinn and Warner Baxter. The good direction.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Put on matinees for telephone girls. Play up the political fight. Mention the cast—featuring the prominence of the names.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for any type of house. Cast should attract them.

Annie Laurie

Fine Picture---Appealing All The Way

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE much heralded "Annie Laurie" affords a fulsome evening (or matinee) of entertainment. It is substantial of plot, colorful in its action, settings and costumes—and charming and vigorous in its interpretation. No Scottish holiday is declared to build the feudal war between the Campbell and MacDonald clans—and yet it suggests in the thoroughness with which it has been created that much attention to detail—and much expenditure—have been employed. John S. Robertson (a Scot himself) has seen to that. With simple but dramatically effective strokes he has built a story that travels directly to its thrilling climax—a story which contains fine conflicts and contrasts.

The tender touches are saturated with charm and romance—and the rugged scenes suggest all the bluntness of Scotch character. The types are wonderfully true, especially the braw, bewhiskered laddies and the bonnie bairns—the Laurie bairn being played by Lillian Gish. She may be too ethereal for a lassie, but there's no denying her appeal in plaids and kilts. It is an effective performance by the star, though Norman Kerry, Russell Simpson and Hobart Bosworth are more in character as the clansmen who fought wi' Wallace, et al.

The Cast: Lillian Gish, Norman Kerry, Tom O'Brien, Hobart Bosworth, Russell Simpson, Patricia Avery, Creighton Hale, David Torrence, Frank Currier. Director, John S. Robertson.

THEME: Romantic drama of feudal days in Scotland—with bonnie Annie Laurie being the pawn in the lovestakes.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The festival scenes. The Glencoe massacre. The lighting of the beacon. The romantic moments. The rich atmosphere. The athletic games. The acting. The types.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Stage Scotch prologue with bagpipers, etc. Play up famous song. Put on heavy campaign. Feature star and director.

DRAWING POWER: Should pack a house wherever shown.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
Length, ten reels. Released .....

The Heart of the Yukon

Ingredients of Entertainment Are in It

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

IN this tale of good men and bad away up yonder in the Alaska of the Klondike days W. S. Van Dyke, who wrote and directed it, has done a creditable piece of work. It is a story of melodrama and adventure and as produced by H. C. Weaver it offers a fairly diverting period of amusement. The two leads are played by John Bowers and Anne Cornwall; the latter has a really difficult role, but the best acting of the picture is contributed first by Frank Campeau as a drunk and second by Russell Simpson, a thin hatchet-faced villain. Too lengthy in spots as the picture is the atmosphere of realism is aptly conveyed and it has several beautiful shots of the snow covered region of Mount Tacoma.

One of the final sequences is above a crevasse where Bowers is battling Simpson for the girl; they both fall, one to his death and the other to find a grip upon a projecting rock. The girl locks her arm through Bowers' and with her other holding onto the dog team drags him to safety. Thus ends the story which had begun with the discovery of gold by Bowers and his partner, and the invasion of the Alaskan country by the girl in search of her father, a dissolute character. We would not brand this thing a knockout, but fans of the average houses should find it entertaining.

The Cast: John Bowers, Anne Cornwall, Edward Hearn, Frank Campeau, Russell Simpson, George Jeske, Nell Barry Taylor. Written and directed by W. S. Van Dyke.

THEME: Quest for a lost parent and of an impostor who takes his place. Girl is saved from villain's evil propensities by young miner and finds her father.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Heroine's transformation from drabness to beauty. Slaying by saloon keeper of hero's partner. Battle on brink of crevasse.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Bill as drama of the gold rush days. Place emphasis on primitive element who pioneered Alaska.

DRAWING POWER: Good. Patrons of average and neighborhood houses should find something in it.

Produced by H. C. Weaver. Distributed by Pathe.
Length, 6,562 feet. Released, May 29, 1927.

New York & New Jersey

A. H. SCHWARTZ and his associate, Harry Clay Miner, had two auspicious occasions facing them last Thursday evening, the one being a dinner given them at the Huntington Yacht Club, which was followed by the second, the opening of their new Huntington Theatre. Both of these events proved most successful in every sense of the word.

The dinner was arranged jointly by the trustees of the Village of Huntington and the Huntington Chamber of Commerce and was attended by over thirty political, business and social celebrities.

Included in those who attended this testimonial dinner to Mr. Schwartz and Mr. Miner were Supervisor A. L. Field, Judge Wallace E. J. Collins, Assemblyman John Boyle, Henry B. Bixby, Russell E. Sammis, Ambrose W. Rose, Dr. George Willis, E. Nott, Dr. MacLean, Col. H. Stanley Todd, Tom Miner, P. J. Parinchief and William Gormley.

Pelham Lynton, for some time connected with the Pathe New York exchange, resigned from that organization last Saturday and will sail on the S. S. Celtic the latter part of this week for a visit to his home in England. He will spend six months on this long-looked for vacation.

On Lynton's return to this country he will engage in business for himself, probably opening offices in the Paramount Building where he will book high class presentation acts for the larger theatres.

Lynton has been one of the best short subject salesmen who ever worked out of a New York exchange office and is particularly well liked by everyone in this zone. His past experience in the legitimate field where he has played with many of the topnotchers stands him in good need in his future line of endeavor.

W. G. ("Teddy") Roosevelt of First National's New York branch sales staff, has been declared winner in Jules Levy's First Anniversary Sales Contest which has been spurring the salesmen of the New York exchange to high-powered action for several weeks past.

The exchange is still all agog over that "surprise award" which "Teddy" has won. He is receiving the congratulations of Manager Levy and his fellow contestants.

The contest, which marks the completion of Mr. Levy's first year as manager of the New York exchange of First National, proved a powerful stimulant of late spring business in the New York territory.

The actual playing period covered by the contest is the five weeks from May 1 to June 4th. First National's latest releases were the pictures on which the salesmen concentrated their activities.

Recent installations of Typhoon two-in-one cooling systems reported in the New York and New Jersey zone include the Bay Ridge Theatre, Brooklyn; The Mayfair Theatre, Asbury Park; The Monroe Theatre, New York City; The Savoy, New York City, and the Fresh Pond Theatre, Brooklyn.

Over thirty political, business and social celebrities of Huntington, L. I., attended dinners arranged in honor of A. H. Schwartz and his associate, Henry Clay Miner, on the occasion of the opening of the new Huntington theatre. Mr. Schwartz is at the extreme left

With his recent acquisition of the Consolidated Amusement Company's 72nd Street Theatre, 72nd and 1st Avenue, New York City, William Salkin's strong position in Yorkville has been increased to the extent of about 600 seats.

George Stephans, operator of the Royal, Parkway and Mapleton theatres of Brooklyn, has taken over the Eagle Theatre, 16th avenue and 43d street.

Bert Mendelsonn, well known in this zone as a salesman and recently with the Commonwealth exchange, will soon enter the exhibition end of the film business with Trenton, N. J. as his location.

Billy Osborne, lately of the P. D. C. sales force in New York, has joined the Fabian organization.

Jack Hertz will fill the post formerly occupied at Commonwealth by Bert Mendelsonn.

Joe Friedman won the Universal "Button" at the Big U last week.

Some people have their pockets picked, but just the opposite happened to David Snapper, well known New Jersey theatre owner, when he came to New York last Tuesday. Instead of losing his watch or something of the sort, Mr. Snapper acquired a little present from someone in the various exchanges he visited, and when last seen was endeavoring to check up. Mr. Snapper will open his new Stadium Theatre in Tottenville in about two weeks.

Both the Loew and Universal theatre circuits are bringing their houses in the Boro Park section of Brooklyn to a stage past the half way mark of completion. The Loew house is located at 86th street and 18th avenue and the Universal, at 46th and New Utrecht. The latter will probably be ready during August while the former is not expected to be finished until a month later.

Rapp and Rudin will open their Marlboro Theatre, Bay Parkway and 70th street, Brooklyn, Thursday or Friday of this week.

. "Mike" Glyn is building a theatre in Sayville, L. I.

Jerry Adler recently sold his Kings Park Theatre to Jack Clifford.

Glen Cove, L. I., has been the scene of a theatre construction race between the Calderone Circuit and Dave Esterson, according to report. It is said that work has recently ceased on the Easterson project, awarding, it would seem, the decision to Mr. Calderone.

Two new theatres are under construction at Baldwin, L. I.; one being built by a local builder and the other by M. Frankel. The latter is reported as connected with the Loew theatre circuit.

One of the finest neighborhood theatres in Brooklyn will be built in the Bensonhurst section of Brooklyn by the 18th Avenue and 64th Street Corporation at that intersection. It is said that the owners of the Senate Theatre are also behind this project.

The Small & Straussberg Grand Theatre in Astoria will soon have direct opposition in its section, according to the report stating that a new house is nearing completion there.

B. S. Moss' new theatre in the Ridgewood section of Brooklyn on Myrtle avenue will be called the Beacon.

Joseph Karesh, operator of the Hudson Theatre, Amsterdam avenue and 157th street, New York City, sold that house last Saturday to D. Moses. The latter also operates the Hollywood (not the M&S Hollywood) theatre, 27th street and 2nd avenue.

John Frey, formerly with the Loew theatre circuit, is at present with Keith's Hamilton. From there he will be assigned to the management of one of Keith's Far Rockaway houses.

Harry Lightstone, husband of Fanny Lightstone, the latter a well known exhibitress of Brooklyn, is now with the Mecca Theatre, a link of the Delancey-Clinton Theatre Corporation.

Work is progressing nicely on the new Keith theatre at Church avenue and Kenmore Place, Brooklyn, where a house which will seat from three to four thousand is under construction. The iron work is fast being put in place. It is said that it took four years to pass on the strict zoning restrictions of this fine neighborhood.

Workmen have started to lay the foundation of the new A. H. Schwartz theatre at Flatbush avenue and Fenimore streets, Brooklyn.

It is rumored that the Shubert Theatrical company has acquired the Winter Theatre on Fordham road and will in the future change the policy of that house from stock and Sunday concerts to a program of pictures and vaudeville.

Keith's 181st street house will soon have plenty of opposition on its hands when two new theatres in that section are completed. The Loew circuit is building one at 178th street and Broadway and the Moss circuit has one going up at 195th and Broadway.

Fred Dollinger is managing "Mike" Glynn's Bayshore Theatre.

In an issue of the NEWS a couple of weeks ago these columns stated that Manager Cox, formerly of the Chas. O'Reilly theatre circuit, had taken charge of Leon Rosenblatt's Rex Theatre, Bayonne, N. J. Mr. Cox went to Bayonne, alright, but the name of the house is the Lyceum. It was the Rex that he left.

David J. Lustig, of the Delancey-Clinton Corporation's staff of management and in charge of the Apollo Theatre for some time, has recently added the Palestine to his supervision. Like the Apollo, the Palestine is of the newer and better type of de luxe neighborhood theatres.

Sol Kravitz, assistant booker in First National's New Jersey exchange, is receiving the congratulations of the personnel of the branch on the arrival of a daughter, Myra, born early Tuesday morning. Mother and child doing well; the father as well as could be expected.

Miss Mary Belle Reid assumed the duties of secretary at the Charlotte local office of the National Theatre Supply Co., last week, succeeding Mrs. Faust.

Scotty Chesnutt and his salesmen and booker, returned last Monday from New York where they attended the Paramount Famous Lasky convention. Salesman M. L. Stevens was elected President of the Paramount 100 Per Cent Club, and received a substantial check in recognition of this work.

E. B. Price, salesman, who has been working out of the Atlanta office, has returned to the Jacksonville Paramount Famous Lasky exchange. Mr. Price was formerly connected with this exchange and was transferred to Atlanta, temporarily.

H. Pittman of Clearwater, Fla., was a visitor in Jacksonville this week.

Salesmen R. Brenner and Hubert Lyons of F. B. O. in Jacksonville, have returned from Atlantic City, where they have been attending the F. B. O. Convention.

The Jacksonville Universal exchange initiated the new selling season with an invitation screening Monday night. Division Manager Ralph B. Williams, who came down from his Atlanta headquarters for the event, was at once a special guest and host extraordinary, receiving a royal welcome from the Universal exchange and giving greetings to the visiting exhibitors.

A banquet at the Mason Hotel, at which professional entertainers appeared, was followed by the screening of Universal's next year's product at the Temple Theatre. After the screening of the pictures, Manager Jesse Clark of the Palace Theatre and E. B. Coleman of the Honey Bunch Company, invited the party to the Palace.

Al Fourmet, manager of the Rialto and former assistant to Jesse L. Clark at the Palace, Jacksonville, is leaving the Publix organization to go with his former superior officer, Charles G. Branham, now division manager for Universal in Kansas City and Omaha. Mr. Fourmet left Thursday for Kansas City, where he will manage a house under Mr. Branham. Newton Treece, manager of the Imperial, will handle both the Imperial and Rialto for the time being.

The Hippodrome, Miami, is reported to have closed for the summer on Tuesday. The Fairfax, with summer stock, is also slated to close shortly, because the current company is dated for Asheville, N. C. The Olympia and the Capitol are doing the business in Miami, according to reports locally, presentations playing their part at the Olympia.

Harry Simpson, popular Universal salesman in Jacksonville, left Wednesday night for Key West and Miami.

H. L. Robinson, auditor from Publix New York office visited the Jacksonville district office Monday of last week.

J. J. Fitzgibbons, former Publix district manager left Jacksonville last Saturday for New York, where he will assume the position of division manager for Eastern Division. Frank Dowler, Jr., has taken charge as supervisor of the district office, with headquarters at Jacksonville.

Mrs. Alma Walton, secretary of the Memphis-Little Rock Film Board of Trade, Don Douglas of the Dallas board and Mrs. J. B. Hiney, of the New Orleans body are planning to join in Memphis and proceed to the first get-together convention to be held in French Lick Springs, May 31, June 1, 2 and 3. This will be the first convention of these secretaries in four years.

C. W. McKean, branch manager of the Fox Film exchange in Memphis with several salesmen is attending the national convention at Atlantic City.

D. P. Rathbone, First National's Memphis branch manager, plans to attend the national sales convention in Los Angeles.

W. E. Sipe, and several of his force in the Universal exchange in Memphis have returned from the Chicago Convention held at the Drake Hotel.

Universal, Fox, and First National exchanges especially report to the Memphis Film Board of Trade that conditions are improving somewhat in the flooded areas. However, shipments are still far from normal.

J. F. Willingham, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer branch manager for Memphis, C. D. Lyne and C. A. Diehl, salesmen, will attend the Los Angeles convention of M. G. M. in Los Angeles May 19-24.

Des Moines

ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM has resigned as manager of the Capitol theatre, Des Moines. Mr. Cunningham has been with the A. H. Blank organization as manager of the Capitol for the past year, and at the present writing will go from here to the Coast. Harry Watts, who has had the Rialto theatre at Omaha and has been with Mr. Blank for the past twelve years, will take charge of the Capitol. A man from outside the Blank organization has been recruited to take the Omaha house.

Salesmen of the First National office, who left last Sunday for California for the convention, were Phil Fenter, Lew Elman, Frank Crawfurd, and Clyde Pratt. E. J. Tilton, manager of the exchange, also is included in the party.

Mrs. Mary Burke, who was until recently Miss Wintrob, has charge of the Des Moines office of Tiffany Productions while her brother is in Omaha on business.

Harry David, manager of the Des Moines office for Publix Shows, was in Omaha last week on business.

A. H. Blank met S. R. Kent and Paramount officials on their way to the convention in San Francisco at Omaha last week. A visit was made to the new Riviera theatre, and business was discussed in regard to other theatres of the chain.

A double 40 Hertner transvertor was bought for the Rialto Theatre at Adel, for the changing of the current from A. C. to D. C. The Theatre is owned by Mr. Sage.

Visitors in Screen Row were Youngclass and Latta, who are opening up the Rex theatre at Perry on May 24, Charles Guerney, of Estherville, Mr. Stephens, of the Orpheum theatre at Webster City, who reported that his partner, Mr. Puffer, is quarantined with scarlet fever, Alexander Frank, of the Frank Amusement Company, George Meisner, of the Grand theatre, at Greenfield, Stanley and Cecil of the Rialto at Bedford.

Youngclass and Latta, of Perry, were in Des Moines last week buying new equipment for their theatre at Perry, the Rex, which they recently took over in partnership as well as the other house there. Mr. Youngclass bought a new screen through the local office of the National Theatre Supply Company. He said that they are contemplating the changing of the name of the theatre, which may be rechristened, the Roxy.

Mr. Kauffman, manager of the Pathe office, was out in the territory last week with O. H. Garland, who travels the southern part of the state. It is probable that they hit some mud, too.

Raymond Donahue, assistant booker of the Pathe exchange, resigned his position last week due to ill health. He is now at Broadlawns Hospital recuperating from a general breakdown. No plan is being made to put anyone in his place and Mr. Kauffman will take the matter into consideration on his return from a trip into the territory.

Passports arrived last week for A. H. Blank and his two sons, Raymond and Myron, who will leave June 4 for a trip to Europe. Mr. Blank, who within the last year sold a half interest in his chain of theatres to the Publix Shows Association, has been planning this recreational trip with his sons for some time.

J. F. Richards sold two houses recently. The Yale theatre at Yale, and the Royal theatre at Panora, were bought by Clarence Lauver and his father, C. D. Lauver.

A Peerless lamp was bought and installed in the Eagle theatre at Eagle Grove, which is owned and managed by Mr. Morris.

W. G. Bishop, exploitation man from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer headquarters, visited the Des Moines exchange last week.

Equipment for the new Shrine Temple of Des Moines was installed by the National Theatre Supply Company in time for the special film show for the kiddies of Shriners.

Mr. Veenschoten bought a new screen for his theatre, the Highland, one of Des Moines' suburban theatres.

Albany

JOHN GARRY, manager of the Clinton Square in Albany, is once more handing out the cigars, but this time it's a son. On the former occasion, it was a girl. And Mr. Garry didn't so much as take a single day off in celebrating the occasion.

Julius Byck, of Tannersville journeyed up to Albany last week, spending a day or so along Film Row. Mrs. Byck was to have come along, but at the last minute she decided not to make the trip on account of a hard cold.

"Pop" Linton is observing his first anniversary as owner of the Olympic, in Utica, this week. Mr. Linton recently bought a fine new home in Utica, fronting on the park.

Mr. and Mrs. Chris Marx, of Utica, the former being the owner of the Highland and Rialto theatres in that city, were in Albany during the week, driving down for the purpose of booking pictures and looking over some of the new product.

Happiness once more reigns in the Veiller home in Albany, for the bull dog that wandered away a few days ago has been found and is again the pride of the establishment.

Harry Hellman has let the contract to a Schenectady company, for the erection of his new theatre in Albany, ground being broken during the past week. Incidentally, Mr. Hellman is developing into a pretty good golfer. His son-in-law, Jack Little, vaudeville and radio star, who was here a short time ago, has now returned to the Middle West where he is making personal appearances.

J. D. Redmond, of New York City, has been added to the booking department of the Pathe exchange in place of Bernard Goetz, who has been transferred to the Buffalo office.

Charles Henry, owner of a motion picture theatre in Theresa, who was recently shot in the back by patrol officers, when mistaken for a bootlegger, has recovered to the extent that he was able to leave a hospital in Watertown, last week.

Sam Shapin, from the home office of Warner brothers in New York City, spent a day or so in Albany, last week. Charles Henschel, Eastern division sales manager for Pathe, and Charles Klang, of New York City, connected with Timely Films, were also here.

Elizabeth Murphy has succeeded Mrs. Heavenor as an inspector at the Pathe exchange. Miss Marie Mahar, of the same exchange, has resigned from the office force, and has been succeeded by Miss Carroll.

Max Milder and George Lynch, of the Schine forces in Gloversville, were in town during the week. So was Ben Straus, manager of the Palace in Saratoga.

Garrett Hannan, salesman at Paramount, is the proudest boy in all Albany. He has been elected to the 100 per cent club, and is likewise enjoying a very substantial bonus check. Dick Hayes is now doing the booking at the exchange, succeeding Mr. Eastman.

H. Landsman, of New York, an auditor for F.B.O., was in Albany, going over the local accounts last week. Edgar Hollander, of New York an ad sales manager for Famous Players, has joined the local exchange.

The Kallet boys are expanding, and have now taken over the Cornhill theatre in Utica, which was run for years by Jacob Elias. A. W. Goodman, who formerly ran the Orpheum in Utica, is now on the Kallet payroll.

Visitors along film row during the week included W. L. Foote, of Delanson; George Dwore, of Schenectady, as well as Jimmy Daniels of the Lyric, in Utica. Oscar Frick, who looks after the booking of pictures at Mount McGregor, was also in town. Lew Fischer came down from Fort Edward, and brought the Missus with him.

C. R. Halligan, of the Universal exchange, deserves a whole lot of credit for the screening and dinner given by the Universal company, in Albany, a week or so ago. The whole affair was conducted in a most systematic manner and in a way that reflects a great deal of exchange men in Albany.

Mayor Thacher has consented to [illegible] on the opening of Harry Hellman's new Albany theatre, which is scheduled for Labor Day. Mr. Hellman got in his bid early, realizing that the Mayor would be a busy man on the holiday.

C. H. Buckley, owner of the Leland, and Jack Bulwinkel, manager of the First National exchange, have both shaved off their mustaches.

Mrs. Nat Levy, wife of the new manager for Universal in Albany, has returned to Philadelphia, much happier than she was during the first day or so in Albany. It devolved upon Mrs. Levy to discover an apartment before she returned to her former home. Two days she spent in searching over Albany, without much result, and then came a couple of friends who solved the whole problem and the Levy household goods will soon be enroute to Albany.

There is nothing selfish about W. W. Farley, who resides in Albany, but who has theatres in Schenectady, Yonkers and elsewhere. When the Stanley Amusement company wanted a site for their new residential house in Albany, Mr. Farley consented to sell his home and now he is looking for a house.

Philadelphia

A LARGE delegation of Philadelphia picture men went to New York to attend the annual M.P.A. dinner. Among those from Philadelphia who were present were John J. McGuirk, president of the Stanley Company; Abe Sablosky and Al Boyd, vice presidents; Frank W. Buhler, managing director; Irving D. Rossheim, treasurer; Abe L. Einstein, publicity director; and Lew Sablosky and Geo. W. Young, of the B. F. Keith interests.

Bart McHugh, well known Philadelphia theatrical producer, who has been very active in motion picture circles, sailed recently with Mrs. McHugh and Frank O'Donnell for a two months' vacation in Europe.

Billy Goldenberg, secretary of the late Jules E. Mastbaum, who is now serving in a similar capacity to John J. McGuirk, is now in New York in charge of the Stanley Company offices there during the absence of Jack McKeon, the regular New York representative, who is on a two months' tour of Europe making a survey for presentation acts.

Harry D. Westcott, who was in charge of the public service and educational department of the Stanley Company, has discontinued the Saturday morning performance for children in the houses where the practice has been established and where it has flourished since the late winter. The Saturday morning performances will be resumed in the fall on a larger scale. An effort will be made at that time to secure more films suitable for children, there having been a scarcity of this sort of production during the past season.

It is understood that plans are being considered for the closing of Al Blofson, who has been acting as Philadelphia manager for Associated Exhibitors, has leased the property at 1313 Vine Street for Tiffany Pictures and is now equipping the place to be operated as the local Tiffany office. Mr. Blofson has been appointed branch manager by E. J. Smith. Tiffany product in Philadelphia up to the present has been handled by the Masterpiece Exchange.

Harry Wiener, branch manager for Columbian Pictures, and members of his sales force have just returned from New York where they have been attending a convention of Columbia executives and salesmen. A. Shoemaker, who has been with Columbia Pictures for some signed and will join another local organization.

B. F. Keith's Chestnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia, during the summer. The plans as now outlined provide for the entire renovation of the house, which was built some twenty-five years ago, and which has not been closed since its opening. The theatre, is of the type of a quarter of a century ago and still has its pillars and old type interior.

Morris Wax, who operates the Royal and two or three small theatres in South Philadelphia devoted very largely to colored patronage, has purchased Fay's Knickerbocker Theatre at 40th and Market Sts., Philadelphia. The total consideration is said to be $450,000. The house has a seating capacity of about 2,000 and has been run as a combination vaudeville and picture house under the Fay policy with C. C. Spink acting as resident manager. Mr. Wax will take over the house as of July 9th, and it is understood that he will close the theatre for a short period time in a sales capacity, has rewhile interior renovations and improvements are made.

Green & Altman, who recently became a member of the Equity Theatres Corporation, will close their Park Theatre, Ridge Avenue & Dauphin St., Philadelphia, on July 9th. The company has a lease that still has four or five years to run and will sublet the building to be used for non-theatrical purposes. The closing of the house is predicated upon the opening of their new house at 31st & Diamond Sts. on Labor Day. It is fast nearing completion and will be one of the outstanding neighborhood houses in Philadelphia. Walt Woodward, who has been resident manager of the Park for the past few years, will be in charge of the new theatre.

The Orient Theatre, a beautiful naborhood house at Philadelphia and Linwood Avenues, Detroit, Michigan., has installed a new Marr & Colton three-manual organ. Reginald Webb, organist, has been engaged to play the new organ. Mr. Webb will also broadcast a concert hour each noon over Station WJR.

Atlanta

FOLLOWING the return of Arthur Martel to the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston, George Lee Hamrick, who has been organist at Keith's Georgia, became feature organist at the Howard, Atlanta, this week. Mr. Martel had been guest organist at the Howard for several months, having come to Atlanta from the big Publix house in Boston to succeed Melvin Ogden, who went to the West Coast.

Joe Wheeler, who operates the Capitol Theatre at Montgomery, Ala., and the Grand at Cedartown, Ga., was a visitor on Atlanta's Film Row this week.

At the regular meeting of the Atlanta Film Board of Trade held in the offices of the organization, 101 Marietta Building, Atlanta, Ga., on Monday, May 9th, the following members were elected directors for the coming term: George R. Allison, Fox Film Corporation; John Quillian, Enterprise Film Corporation; Dave Prince, Paramount-Famous-Lasky; W. W. Anderson, Pathe Exchange, Inc., and John T. Ezell, Warner Brothers.

The newly elected Board of Director will hold a called meeting prior to the next regular meeting of the board and elect officers and name committees for the new administration.

Ben Y. Cammack, Atlanta branch manager for Universal, is the retiring president of the Board.

George R. Allison, manager of the Atlanta, Ga., exchange of Fox Film Corporation and dean of the Atlanta film fraternity, has hung up a new high record for his office and for the Fox sales organization. Not only did Mr. Allison lead his forces to a victorious finish in the national sales drive named in honor of his chief, General Sales Manager James R. Grainger, winning first place in the enthusiastic campaign which came to a close April 30, but by the splendid showing his exchange now stands first in the national race for accumulated net sales for the season 1926-1927.

The South-West division under the guidance of Divisional Sales Manager Lou B. Remy is leading all other divisions in Fox sales for the current season.

Still another distinction which the Atlanta exchange claims as the record salesman, Paul C. Bryan, who has led the sales force continuously since the opening of the 1926-1927 season last September.

C. L. Peavey, head of the Atlanta exchange of F. B. O. has returned to his office after attending the recent Eastern division sales convention of his company at Atlantic City.

D. A. Stewart, who operates the Loop Theatre at Sulphur Springs, Fla., was a visitor on film row, Atlanta, this week, while on his way by auto to his old home at Sheridan, Wyoming.

Arthur C. Bromberg, president of Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, with headquarters in Atlanta, spent several days in Birmingham last week.

Leon Cazin, operating the Cazin Theatre at West Tampa, Fla., was a visitor in Atlanta last Saturday.

G. L. Wynn, who operates the Ritz Theatre at Newman, Ga., was seen in Atlanta last week.

Ed. Peter, who more than twenty years ago owned the Atlanta baseball franchise of the Southern League, and who later operated motion picture houses in Texas, was a visitor in Atlanta last week, having arrived from his home in Tampa by auto. He visited Birmingham before coming here.

John W. Mangham, Jr., manager of the Atlanta exchange of Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, made a brief trip to Macon last week.

John Ezell, manager of the Atlanta branch of Warner Brothers, has returned from the recent sales convention of his company, which was held at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York.

G. Y. Harrell, salesman for Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, left Atlanta last week for the South Alabama territory, expecting to be away from the home office about eight weeks.

Roy Martin, head of a chain of motion picture theatres in and around Columbus, Ga., visited Atlanta's film section this week, accompanied by J. N. Morgan, his booker.

H. Pittman, who operates the Fort Harrison and Capitol Theatres in Clearwater, Fla., was in Atlanta this week.

W. H. Odum, of the Pastime Theatre, Sandersville, Ga., was a caller on film row, Atlanta, this week.

Hank Hearn, manager of the Atlanta exchange of Liberty-Specialty, returned last Tuesday from a trip through the territory.

E. A. Rambonnet, who for a long time has been affiliated with the Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, serving as special representative at Dallas and Oklahoma City, has been transferred to the Charlotte exchange of the company, where he will continue to act as special representative.

Universal staged a "Straight From the Shoulder" screening of some of the new season's product Wednesday afternoon at the Biltmore Hotel, Atlanta, for a group of exhibitors from all sections of the Atlanta territory, after which the guests were entertained at a banquet in the Pompeian Room at the hotel.

A feature of the program, which began at 1:30 o'clock, was a radio announcement by Earle E. Griggs, exploiteer for Universal in the Southeast, over WSB of the screening which Universal was holding at the time.

After the screening came the banquet, at which Ben Y. Cammack, Atlanta branch manager for Universal, acted as master of ceremonies.

Portland, Ore.,

THE Universal boys are back from their Chicago convention, filled with pep and enthusiasm. The Paramount crowd are in San Francisco, and the First National and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer gang leave this week to attend their conventions.

Jimmy Lynn, manager of the local Fox exchange, is in Atlantic City, and Bob Hill, and Bob Hill, manager of Warner Bros. exchange, is just back from the managers' convention in New York.

Those who will go to Los Angeles from Portland to attend the F-N convention are: A. Oxtoby, manager, Bruce Keller and Cal Edwards, salesmen. Manager Louis Amacher is taking a couple of his salesmen with him to attend the M-G-M conclave.

Rumor has it that the Liberty is going to put in vaudeville.

C. S. Jensen is the proud possessor of a new Rolls-Royce town car.

Manager Kiggins, of the U. S. A. theatre in Vancouver (he is also mayor of the city), tells a strange tale about a stray film. It seems that he walked into his theatre one morning about a week ago and stumbled over a can of films in the darkness. Upon investigation the can proved to contain a film showing the Dempsey-Tunney fight. Of course, Kiggins knew nothing about how the film arrived at his theatre, but being an opportunist he put it on added it to his program, and advertised it in Portland newspapers. He repeated the showing again this week.

G. Kramer, traveling auditor for F-N, is in town checking over their records.

Chicago

SPECIAL Representative Tom North is making his headquarters at Pathe's Chicago exchange and will probably be located in this city for some time.

Frank T. Pope of P. D. C.'s publicity department and F. R. Parsons of Pathe, stopped off for a visit at the local exchange enroute to the West Coast from New York City.

Fitzpatrick and McElroy divided $4,000 among the branches of the Red Cross for the flood sufferers' fund. This was the amount derived from benefit performances given in theatres of their circuit on May 7th, each of the large houses holding a special midnight show. Donald McElroy, director of the executive offices of Fitzpatrick and McElroy, had the campaign in charge.

The group from Educational, headed by Manager J. J. Scully, are on the West Coast.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's group left Sunday, with the group from New Haven, en route for Los Angeles. In the group from Boston are Manager M. N. Wolf, Henry Eckman, Herbert Rose, J. R. Smith, Samuel Lubell, Emanuel Cohen, Benj. Abrams, Ray Curran and Thomas Donaldson, the latter all members of the sales force. When they return, Mr. Eckman, who has been office manager, will transfer to the sales force.

The group from First National left last Friday for Chicago and thence on to Los Angeles. In this group are District Manager Thomas B. Spry, Del Bibber, James Burns, Frank Vine, Jack Magann, Ed Anderson and Frank Scully.

Universal's entire sales force returned during the week from the convention of that company at Chicago.

The Fox forces also returned this week from their conventions in New York and Atlantic City.

Warner Brothers' sales force also returned during the last of last week from the convention of their company at New York City.

Universal entertained about two hundred exhibitors from all sections of New England at the Copley Plaza Hotel, Boston, Tuesday, for a pre-showing of many of their forthcoming releases.

At noon a luncheon was served to the guests and the entire sales force, which was present to assist. Harry Asher, of the Boston, was in general charge.

Mr. and Mrs. Emmons, of the Bijou Theatre at Morrisville, Vt., were visitors to Boston during the week.

H. Wagner, of the P. D. C. home office, was a visitor to the Boston exchange during the week.

A. S. Reiseroff, of the Royal theatre, Worcester, was welcomed to Boston during the week after a long absence.

Unique Theatre, Boston, has closed for an indefinite period. The Unique occupied part of the site taken by the city of Boston for street widening and improvement purposes. Owners of the theatre plan to reconstruct and remodel the house after the city's work is completed and will probably reopen at a later date.

Lincoln Hall, at Quincy Point, Mass., has closed for the summer season.

The Royal Theatre, at Olneyville, R. I., is closing for an indefinite period.

The Everett Square theatre, at Hyde Park, Mass., closed May 21 for extensive redecorating and improvements. Walter Littlefield, manager, plans to reopen at an early date.

The Quincy Theatre, at Quincy, Mass., is to undergo extensive redecorating and renovating.

It is rumored that the Medford Theatre, Medford, Mass., will undergo extensive redecorating during the summer.

Maurice Curran has resigned from Warner Brothers' staff to join the sales force of Herman Rifkin's Supreme Films exchange. E. J. Farrell, who was formerly in the Canadian territory, has also joined the Supreme staff.

The Federal theatre, at Salem, Mass., is holding its annual May vaudeville festival with many additional acts booked during the month.

Milton Hill, who has been manager of the poster sales for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at Boston, has been promoted to the home office as a special representative.

The Wollaston theatre, at Wollaston, Mass., has changed its policy to stock for the summer.

Ray S. Averill, formerly at Fall River and at the Franklin Park theatre, Boston, has been appointed manager of the Regent theatre in Arlington, Mass.

Miss Martha Ferris, secretary of the New England Film Board of Trade, who is to attend the secretaries convention at West Baden, Ind., was tendered a surprise party and dinner on Thursday by the bookers and friends in Film Row and presented a fitted traveling case.

Miss Gladys Killam of Brighton, Mass., has joined the staff of Independent Films, Inc., at the Boston exchange.

The undefeated Fox baseball team, of which Tom Jennings is manager, ably assisted by Arthur Ruscica, has challenged any other team from the Row to combat. A special challenge has been issued to the Pathe team. The bookers are also organizing a team.

Thomas Martell is booking for the United States Army camps.

A Kilgen Wonder Organ is being installed in the Park theatre at Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

Southwest

A CONTRACT for a cooling system for the Jefferson Theatre, under construction in Fannin Street, Beaumont, Texas, which, with all equipment needed for its installation will cost about $150,000, has been awarded to the Carrier Engineering Corporation.

Tiffany Productions, Inc., announces that the new Tiffany exchange established in Dallas will be located in the Film Exchange Building, with Jack Huey appointed by General Sales Manager Ed. J. Smith as the manager for this territory.

The Ritz Theatre at Brady, Texas, has recently installed a new ventilator and cooler.

The Concord Theatre, Springdale, Arkansas, is installing a large pipe organ.

John Ford, formerly with Paramount, is now associated with Pathe in Dallas.

Jake Jacobs has been appointed salesman for the Enterprise Film Corporation in East Texas; "Scotty" Scott will represent the company in South Texas; and L. B. Rozelle will sell the product in West Texas.

"Simp" Simpson has severed his connection with Pathe and is now with Paramount in Dallas.

Ed. Lowry has been appointed special representative for Universal in this region. Ed hales from Kansas City.

A $20,000 fire on May 11th, completely destroyed the Crystal Theatre at Eden, Texas. The building was located on the South side of the square, and was partially covered by insurance. Will Molloy, owner of the structure, announced he would rebuild immediately.

Fire of unknown origin early last Friday morning destroyed all of the stage drops, badly damaged the stage and overhead structure, and injured seats and a $5,000 organ in the Criterion Theatre at Tonkawa, Oklahoma. Mrs. E. M. Billings, the owner, announced that rebuilding would be started immediately.

Harlan Starr left last Thursday for Los Angeles with the idea of attending the Educational sales convention to be held there.

Bill Clark has joined the Tiffany sales department as state representative. Manager Al Moritz made the appointment last week.

Floyd and Frank Wadlow, who some months ago disposed of their theatres in Detroit, are back in the game once more, having purchased the Buchanan theatre on the West side.

London Brothers have inaugurated the new Regent theatre policy and crowded houses are the rule at every performance. Paul Specht's orchestra, costing nearly $2,000 a week; Vitaphone, vaudeville, news weekly and short subjects are the attractions booked by them.

Minneapolis

CHARLES PERRIZO has sold the Lyceum theatre at Deer River, Minn., to Charles Mullins of Cass Lake.

The State theatre at Fairmont, Minn., has engaged Bernice Mulare of Minneapolis as its organist.

The Opera House at Chisholm, Minn., owned by George Jacobs and run in opposition to a Finkelstein & Ruben theatre, will be enlarged to accommodate 1,200 patrons.

M. L. Finkelstein, of Finkelstein & Ruben, has been elected to the board of directors of First National.

Girls in the F. & R. office of Minneapolis have organized the Tokomo club and entered in the Minneapolis diamond ball league. Tokomo, they explain, is Japanese for friendship.

The Finkelstein & Ruben managers' convention will be held in Minneapolis July 12 to 14, it was announced last week. The committee which has been named to take care of the arrangements for the convention includes Ben Ferriss, chairman, Theodore Hays, H. D. Finkelstein, J. F. Cubberley, Dan Finkelstein, James T. Stroud, Ralph Branton, Ed Prinson, Eddie Ruben, Bob La Piner, Art Abelson, Harry French and Charlie Winchell.

M. A. Levy has been made manager of the Fox exchange in Minneapolis. He was formerly in charge of the Omaha exchange for Fox. Levy succeeds Max Roth, who will remain at the Minneapolis office for a few weeks while Mr. Lavy is getting acquainted with his new duties.

Finkelstein and Reuben's Lagoon Theatre in Minneapolis, opened its program of organ presentation on May 1st. The new Marr & Colton organ arrived in Minneapolis about the middle of April and on May 1st, Larry Goldberg, feature organist, took his place at the console. Mr. Goldberg gives special feature numbers at the De Luxe performances, which have proved to be exceptionally delightful.

Inquiries and Comments

A. P. S. in Washington Holds Successful Meeting

A FORTUNATE combination of circumstances permitted the Washington Chapter of the American Projection Society, at its regular monthly meeting held Friday night, April 29th in Loew's Palace Theatre, to provide a program of exceptional interest to its eighty odd members.

The date of the meeting immediately followed the close of the Spring Convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers which was held in the Monticello Hotel, Norfolk, Va.

Knowing that a number of the members planned to return home by way of Washington, Lester Isaacs, formerly chief of projection at Loew's Palace and now Supervisor of Projection for the Marcus Loew Circuit with headquarters in New York, was quick to sieze the opportunity so presented for obtaining a number of speakers for the Chapter meeting.

The meeting was called to order shortly after midnight by the president, G. J. McConnell, who briefly explained its purpose and then called upon Mr. Isaacs, as the chapter's first president, to conduct it from there on.

The first speaker was W. Kunzman, of the National Carbon Co., Cleveland, Ohio who described, and illustrated by means of lantern slides, the properties of carbons and the operating characteristics of both the low intensity and high intensity arcs.

There followed a lively discussion concerning misadjustment errors common to the operation of the high intensity lamp during which it was revealed that few of those present held the same views.

The second talk was given by J. H. Kurlander, Engineer of the Brenkert Light Projection Company, Detroit, Michigan, who described and illustrated by slides methods of providing so-called theatrical atmosphere by means of effect lighting, and explained how effect devices in general are constructed and used.

After the lectures and the discussions bearing upon them were finished, Mr. Isaacs called upon the representatives of other equipment companies who were present by way of introducing these men to the members of the society.

Those called upon were J. E. McAuley Manufacturing Co., Chicago, Ill., J. C. Kroesen, Edison Lamp Works, Harrison, N. J. and Herbert Griffin, Powers Division, International Projector Corp., New York City.

After the meeting, refreshments of a harmless nature were dispensed back-stage and the gathering broke up with no serious casualties.

The American Projection Society has as its principal aim the advancement of the practical side of motion picture projection by means of lectures, demonstrations and technical articles printed in its official organ, The American Projectionist.

Its membership is open to all projectionists.

The officers of the Washington Chapter are as follows:

G. J. McConnell, President; L. Bernheim, Vice President; F. J. Storty, Treasurer, and J. H. Lehman, Secretary.

Two New Books Available

One of the most troublesome things to the projectionist who seeks to make a serious study of projection, is the matter of understanding the seemingly odd terms used in connection with lighting practice.

Illuminating engineering these days embraces a wide field and, indeed, includes a number of other, more specialized, studies, the most notable of which is probably that of optics.

As in the other arts and sciences, so in this a vocabulary has been established, the terms of which are most confusing to persons who do not follow closely the progress made by the particular art.

When the need arises, therefore, to make use of the information so presented by these studies, the usual result of attempts to apply this information is confusion, since the inexperienced persons who attempt to use the information have not covered the elementary ground work of learning the terms peculiar to the subject, and so cannot possibly obtain a correct understanding of the principles as they are set forth.

It is like attempting to learn the information contained in a book written in a foreign language without understanding the language itself.

A Dictionary of Lighting Terms

There has long been a need for an authoritative explanation of the various terms used in connection with lighting practice and this need has at last been met by the Engineering Department of the Edison Lamp Works, at Harrison, N. J.

The filling of this need has taken the form of a 56 page book, entirely devoted to clear, complete, detailed explanations of every term which in any way is connected with lighting.

Not only are these explanations in themselves sufficient to explain the particular subject, but many of the more involved ones are illustrated by small drawings carried on the margins of the pages opposite the respective terms.

Thus, there should be no reason why every projectionist and theatre manager, or any other person having to do with lighting, theatrical or otherwise, should not be able to clearly understand the fundamentals of lighting practice.

The lighting terms used in theatre lighting, particularly back-stage, are also explained and illustrated.

On the whole the book is one which no person interested in lighting can well afford to be without, and in view of the fact that the Edison Lamp Works is distributing this book free to persons desiring a copy, there should be no excuse for being without it.

Persons desiring to obtain a copy of it should address their requests to A. L. Powell, Engineering Department, Edison Lamp Works, Harrison, N. J.

It might be interesting to know that it required nearly two years of effort to collect the information and properly present it.

In this connection, we would also like to call projectionists attention to the fact that the National Carbon Company has also published a smartly bound little volume, fully explaining the matter of projection carbons and also giving much valuable information on arc sources of light in general.

This book, too, can be obtained free by addressing the Advertising Department, Carbon Sales Division, National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio.

The name of this book is "Projector Carbon Hand Book."

Projectionists and managers should not fail to obtain both of these books.

Large Theatre Under Way in Oil City, Pa.

A corporation that plans the erection of an $800,000 theatre, store and office building in Oil City, Pa., has been formed there by George J. Veach, John B. Veach and M. Marks, and is known as the Vemark Theatre Corporation. The new structure will be at Duncomb and Seneca streets. The theatre will be known as the Colonial Drake, and will seat 2,500. There will be a large stage and the policy of the corporation will be high class motion pictures and vaudeville. Plans are being drawn by Rapp & Rapp.

The same corporation will operate the Venango theatre, also in Oil City, which will be remodeled and renovated late in the summer. It will be run as a straight motion picture theatre.

Oklahoma House Remodeled by Messrs. Crandall

Messrs. Crandall & Crandall have just completed the remodelling and redecorating of the Liberty Theatre at Alva, Oklahoma, which now compares very favorably with the most up-to-date play houses in the southwest. Steel seats with leather upholstering and air cushions have been installed and the latest picture projectors will be used.

Ackerman & Harris Break Ground in 'Frisco

Ground was broken, April 18th in San Francisco for a new 3,100 seat theatre to be added to the Ackerman & Harris chain of vaudeville and motion picture theatres. The location is on Mission Street, between 19th and 20th. El Capitan will be its name, and will be the largest district theatre west of Chicago and also the largest theatre in San Francisco with a stage area surpassing any theatre in San Francisco. The project also consists of a three-story hotel building, group of ground floor stores and the total cost of improvements will be approximately $750,000. W. H. Grimm, Jr., is the architect and G. Albert Lansburgh the consulting architect. It is planned to be completed and open in 11 months.

Walcott Plans New House for Racine, Wis.

"Dad" Walcott, manager of the Majestic theatre at Racine, is contemplating building a new theatre in Racine on the north side. The new house is to have a capacity of 1,800 to 2,000. Building will be begun very soon according to Mr. Walcott.

Two for Detroit's East Side

Two new theatres are to be erected on Detroit's east side. According to George Flucksa and John Fortu, owners and operators of the Hazel Park Theater Co., both of these new houses which they have planned will seat approximately 1,500 and work is to start immediately.

California Theatre, San Jose, Has Brilliant Premiere

"THE CALIFORNIA" opened April 16th at San Jose, near San Francisco. The theatre is an innovation of architectural design for theatres in cities other than the largest population. The most imposing and noticeable feature is its commodiousness and its retiring rooms. M. Bowles provided his local manager, Harry Brown with a program for the opening which was unsurpassed at such events. Charley Murray was master of ceremonies. Murray presented the film celebrities and guests of honor. One of the real big hits of the evening was the Fanchon & Marco presentation.

Complete and modern stage equipment planned to produce the most extensive spectacles is the big feature of presentation facilities. Armstrong-Power Studios placed all the stage drapery. The splendor of lighting and color effects were attributed to the Theatre Lighting & Equipment Co. of San Francisco. A Wurlitzer organ pealed forth its marvelous tones at the touch of Miss Falvey.

The projection booth was equipped with National Theatre Supply Co. and Walter G. Preddy supplies of projectors, mirror arcs and spotlights. C. F. Weber & Co. of San Francisco installed the seats and loge chairs. At the end of the second performance the guests repaired to the banquet room of the St. Claire Hotel where the West Coast officials were in waiting to welcome them to a midnight supper more sumptuous and joyful.

George Douglas to Manage Mt. Baker Theatre

Opening of the new $500,000 Mount Baker Theatre at Bellingham, Washington, was celebrated last week as the newest house in the Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., chain and the first house to open since the P. N. W. group has affiliated with West Coast. George Douglas, well-known among Northwest film men, has been selected to manage the house, which has a seating capacity of 2,000 and is entirely modern and new in every regard.

Harlingen, Tex. Project to Seat 1,600, Is Report

Definite plans for construction of a new theatre in Harlington, Texas, of not less than 1,600 capacity will be announced shortly by the Valley Theatres, Inc., according to information obtained during the recent visit of Louis Dent, president of the Dent Theatres, Inc., with which the Valley Theatres are incorporated.

Work Starting or About to Start on Many New Projects; Remodeling Extensive

NEW construction work on theatres in New England is moving forward rapidly. Perhaps a dozen of the older theatres which have enjoyed large patronage in various parts of New England are either closing or planning to close for extensive alterations, remodelling and redecorating, to keep abreast of the modern innovations which have been introduced. Many of them will reopen with some form of musical film installation.

In addition, construction work is either starting or about to commence on many new projects. Included among these are the following:

A new theatre in Salem, Mass., for W. A. Dunne and others, from plans by John H. Bickford & Sons, Boston. The theatre will be at Dodge and Washington streets and will be the largest theatre in Essex county. Cost of the building, exclusive of decorating or furnishing, will be about $750,000.

Capitol Amusement Co. has closed bids for a new theatre on Lowell street, Manchester, N. H., from plans by Desmond & Lord of Boston. It will have a balcony and be 150 feet by 100 feet, two stories.

Stoughton, Mass., will have a new theatre costing $100,000 exclusive of equipment. John M. Curley, Boston and Edward Ansin, Boston, are building the house from plans by Funk & Wilcox, Boston.

The Middlesex Theatre on Main street, Middletown, Conn., is to be practically entirely rebuilt from plans by Thomas W. Lamb of New York.

The Davis Square Theatre Co. has started construction of its theatre at 402 Highland Avenue, Somerville, Mass. The cost will be about $150,000.

Mark-Strand interests are preparing to break ground for a second new theatre in Worcester at 568 Main street. Plans are said to be in preparation.

Goldstein Brothers have started construction of their new theatre at Chicopee, Mass., from plans by Blackall, Clapp & Whittemore of Boston. It will be three stories and cover 15,000 feet of land.

Both the Union and Elm Theatres in Attleboro are to be remodelled on a large scale. The former is operated by Julius Levenson of Boston and upwards of $35,000 will be expended in the remodelling. The Union is owned by the Union Theatre Co. and in addition to remodelling, its seating capacity will be increased to between 900 and 1,000.

The Boston & Maine Railroad is awaiting permission from the Public Utilities Commission before going ahead with its proposed theatre as part of the North Terminal development project. Plans for the theatre have been drawn by Architects Funk & Wilcox of Boston. It will be a 3,000 seat house.

Fox Project in Philadelphia To Cost $12,000,000

C. H. CRANE & CO., of New York, Detroit and Chicago, are now preparing plans for a 5,000 seat motion picture theatre to be erected by the Fox Film Corporation at the south west corner of Seventeenth & Market Sts., Philadelphia. The plans have not been completed to the extent that it has been possible to submit them to builders for bids, but it is expected that the contract will be awarded by July 1st and that work will be started almost immediately thereafter. One of the bidders for the work of erecting the new building will be the Chanin Company, of New York.

The plans provide for the erection of a twenty-five story office building, the cost of the ground, office building and auditorium to be approximately $12,000,000. This will give the Fox Film Corporation two theatres within a square of each other, the present house being located at 16th and Market Sts. Another on which the company has a ten year lease is at Broad and Locust Streets and is devoted to long run picture engagements. Poggi & Winters, Philadelphia architects, will be the local representatives of Crane & Co., and will oversee the construction of the building under the general supervision of Mr. Crane.

Studio Briefs

The first of the 26 Warner Brothers' pictures for the new season, Monte Blue in "The Bush Leaguer," which is now in work under the direction of Howard Bretherton, has had all its production details arranged, according to an announcement by the company this week. Charles Gordon Saxton wrote the story and Leila Hyams has been chosen as the star's leading lady. Clyde Cook has a comedy role.

Camera work on three of United Artists' seventeen releases for this year were finished this week at the company's studio in Los Angeles. The three are comedies, and their titles are: "College," starring Buster Keaton; "Topsy and Eva," featuring the Duncan Sisters; and "Two Arabian Knights," a Caddo production in which appear Louis Wolheim and William Boyd, the original Captain Flagg and Sergeant Quirt of the stage play, "What Price Glory?"

As her first assignment since the writing team of Hope Loring and Louis D. Lighton was dissolved, Miss Loring is preparing the script for Thomas Meighan's next picture for Paramount, "We're All Gamblers." James Cruze will direct Meighan in this production, which is an adaptation of the stage play by Sidney Howard, "Lucky Sam McCarver."

Quite a number of the large stages at the Warner Brothers' studio are being used for the filming of highlights for Dolores Costello's next picture, "The Heart of Maryland." This David Belasco play is being transferred to the screen on an elaborate scale by Lloyd Bacon. The largest interior sequence, President Lincoln's Inaugural Ball, was shot this week.

Final scenes of "Clancey's Kosher Wedding," an Irish-Jewish production in which George Sidney and Will Armstrong are the two leading males, have been completed at the F. B. O. studio under the direction of A. E. Gillstrom. Supporting players in the comedy drama are Sharon Lynn, Ann Brady, Mary Gordon, Rex Lease, Ed Brady and others.

Bill Blaisdell has the role of the village blacksmith in "No Sparking," a new Educational comedy starring Jimmie Adams. Besides his characterization as the mighty smithy in the Adams vehicle, Blaisdell has appeared in the two current productions from the Educational studio, "Dodging Trouble" and "Have Courage."

Lillian Gilmore, daughter of Barney Gilmore, the actor and playwright, has just been signed by Universal to enact the leading feminine part in Fred Gilman's new "Texas Ranger" series of thirteen two-reel productions for next year's market. Joe Levigard is the director. Miss Gilmore is a newcomer, eighteen years old, and has been on the stage for several years.

Herbert Moulton, Los Angeles critic and journalist, has been added to the cast of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Trail of '98," thereby joining several other former newspapermen who are on the M-G-M payroll. Edward Connelly of the company's stock company, was a reporter for several years on the New York Sun. Richard Travers, in "Twelve Miles Out," was a police reporter on the New York Evening World before starting his career as a thespian. Other erstwhile newspapermen are Monta Bell, Edward Sedgwick, and Christy Cabanne.

Harry Sinclair Drago, novelist, has signed a contract with Fox Films to write stories for that organization and will leave for Hollywood on June 1. He was formerly editor of the Macauley Company, book publishers. His "Whispering Sage" has already been filmed by Fox Films.

James Marcus and Robert Fischer have signed Universal contracts to appear in "Buck Privates," the army of occupation comedy which is to be produced from Stuart N. Lake's "Let's Go Home." Lya de Putti, Zasu Pitts, Eddie Gribbon will be some of the principals of the cast. Mel Brown will do the directing.

Edna Marion, one of the 1926 Wampas Baby Stars, has joined the list of long term players at the Hal Roach studio. Charley Chase selected Miss Marion as his leading lady in his latest Pathe comedy, as yet untitled, and just completed. No decision has been arrived at as to her next role.

The trio of actors who will interpret the respective roles of Abraham Lincoln, Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant in Warner Brothers' "The Heart of Maryland," will be Charles Edward Bull, James Welch and Walter Rodgers. Warner Brothers say that the beards and hair of the trio are their own, their features and statures almost exact, and they are each within a few years of the age that the characters whom they represent had attained in the Civil War. It took several months of searching on the part of the Warner Brothers to fill these three roles, it it said.

F. B. O.'s "The Great Mail Robbery," which has been under the supervision of Director George B. Seitz for the past several weeks, had its final scenes photographed this week. Theodore von Elts, Frank Nelson, Jeanne Morgan, Lea Shumway, De Witt Jennings and Charles Hill Mailes are in the cast of "The Great Mail Robbery."

In the Warner Brothers' cutting room are two other important productions for release on the current schedule. One is "Dearie," starring Irene Rich and directed by Archie Mayo, and the other is "What Happened to Father," based on the story by Mary Roberts Rinehart and featuring Warner Oland in the title characterization.

Members of the production unit working on "Flood Waters," a new Paramount picture starring Richard Dix, have departed for Sonora, California, with several carloads of technical equipment and a crew of nearly 100 men. Mary Brian and Phillip Strange and others are some of the players who will support Dix. Spectacular scenes are to be taken near the Malone Dam, where there is a heavy overflow of water at the present time. Pack mules will be used to get to the camera locations. A caterpillar tractor, five trailers, air compressing machines and drills are among the props for "Flood Waters."

With the program of the Warners for this year being rapidly completed, the production staff of the company is now devoting its efforts mainly to the preparation of the picture group for next year. Several of the extended run productions are to be started soon, among them will be "Noah's Ark" and "Ham and Eggs at the Front."

The De Mille and Metropolitan studio are busy these days with five productions now in the making and another five now in preparation. "The Country Doctor" is nearing completion rapidly. Donald Crisp has begun working on "Brigadier Gerard," a new special, which will be built around the Napoleonic period and adapted from "Adventures of Brigadier Gerard" by A. Conan Doyle. A new Vera Reynolds picture is in work, "The Bar Sinister." Other pictures in production are "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary" and "His Dog."

Marguerite de La Motte has been signed by Columbia Pictures for the feminine lead in "The Kid Sister," an adaptation of Dorothy Howell from a short story, which appeared in the Argosy-All Story Magazine. Malcolm McGregor is the only other member of the cast chosen so far. Ralph Graves will direct "The Kid Sister."

Director E. Mason will soon launch forth on the production of Metropolitan's newest vehicle for Marie Prevost, tentatively titled, "The Azure Shore." Zelda Sears and Fred Stanley adapted the story from Fanny Hatton's original. The male lead in support of Marie Prevost will be portrayed by Harrison Ford. F. McGrew Willis is supervising the production.

Taking with him a company of over 50 persons, Ralph Ince, film actor and director, set sail this week on the schooner "Alice," from the Isthmus at Catalina Island to inaugurate work on the sea scenes of "Shanghaied," the sea story he is filming for F. B. O. Players who accompanied him on the location trip included Patsy Ruth Miller, Tom Santschi and others. Joe Waller, chairman, and Wally Ford, assistant director, accompanied him on the trip.

Casting for "The Azure Shore," a Metropolitan picture starring Marie Prevost, is nearing completion with the selection of David Butler and Ward Crane for important roles. Ford plays opposite the star; he has just finished one of the leads in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary."

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

'His First Flame"—Pathe, Mark Strand Theatre, New York City

Herald-Tribune: "Highly amusing comedy. Filled with number of hilarious and frequently imaginative comic scenes. Langdon is, as usual, his sad-eyed, helpless, trusting self, playing with that amazing feeling for proper mixture of wistful and ridiculous that he possesses."

Times: "Mr. Sennett and Mr. Langdon do their parts in this nice mile of fun. Sennett deserves no little credit for hilarious situations. And Mr. Langdon is to be congratulated on generous supply of sad smiles and wide-eyed effects. Mr. Langdon at his best in this humorous piece of work."

Sun: "Again Harry Langdon is with us. Proves that no comedians are half so funny away from direction and supervision of Mr. Sennett. There are several notable bits in film."

Evening World: "Harry Langdon makes out of 'His First Flame' a surprisingly funny picture. People at the Strand laughed continually in spite of themselves and Mr. Langdon was entirely responsible. Wistful, puzzled face of one of motion picture's best actors kept one glued to seat. Harry Langdon worth seeing."

American: "Harry Langdon is appearing at Mark Strand this week in his first five-reeler for Mack Sennett, 'His First Flame.' Mr. Langdon has such round-eyed wondering gaze, which he puts over without batting a single eye-lash, that you're bound to find yourself laughing."

Daily Mirror: "Hilarious fun and Langdon really worth while seeing. That is, if you enjoy honest-to-goodness merriment."

Telegram: "This picture seemed to have sufficient humor content to keep Strand audience in continued howls of glee."

"The Understanding Heart"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Chicago

Herald: "Great movie. Forest fire so realistic that it burns you. Has been tenderly handled in filming. Magnificent picture, deftly directed, beautifully photographed and sincerely acted by unusually fine cast. You will never again see anything more thrilling on screen than forest fire. Can feel fire in your face. There's more to plot than mere conflagration, however. Great little picture and if you don't like it you'd better take up chess."

American: "Thrilling tale. Intelligent picturization of Kyne's story. Theme highly unusual. Tale has intensity and great thrill, exciting drama, much good humor. Laugh after laugh. Thrills interlaced with sentiment and pathos with humor. Ripsnorting spectacle and sure-fire entertainment."

Tribune: " Film of thrills. Effective fire stuff. Many forest fires have burned their way across myriad silversheets, but there was never one where flames seemed hotter. Decidedly full of action. Fne scenery and splendid photography. Eye-pleasing and entertaining."

"The Love Thrill" Universal, Roxy Theatre, New York City

World: "The handsomest blonde in all Universal City, pink and white Miss Laura La Plante, employed to very good advantage."

Herald-Tribune: "Short and fast moving."

Mirror: Miss La Plante bounds through invigorating performance. One of few screen traipsers able to farce and mean it. "The Love Thrill" lives up to title insofar as principals are concerned."

Times: "Some highly amusing situations that are eminently well directed."

Sunday News: "Laura La Plante's as cute and dimpling as ever."

American: "Millard Webb directed picture and is co-author of story itself. It is as light as champagne and as scintillating. Director has handled 'The Love Thrill' with deftness and adroitness that would do legendary Lubitsch credit."

Evening Post: "Miss La Plante plays with considerable effectiveness. Does charming job as insurance heroine. Picture well done throughout with some deft and humorous titles to carry story and touch it at times with lighter stuff."

Morning Telegraph: "Laura La Plante very fine, indeed. Has that blonde personality causing so many golden hairs to be found on masculine shoulders, legal property of brunettes. 'The Love Thrill' helps make Roxy week's bargain."

It all comes back to screen quality

The impression your theatre conveys, the reputation it enjoys, the day-to-day patronage it attracts —whatever phase of the business you consider, it all comes back in large measure to the screening quality of the pictures you show.

Specify prints on Eastman film —the medium that first made movies practical, that has been known from the infancy of the industry for its never-failing screen superiority.

Superiority guarded thirty-eight years

In 1889 Eastman film made movies practicable. And today the famous Kodak Research Laboratories still safeguard the superiority that has always marked Eastman Negative and Positive.

Superiority in film includes higher screen quality. High screen quality insures satisfaction to the public. And constant satisfaction is needed to maintain and increase box-office receipts.

Always specify prints on Eastman Positive, and look for the words "Eastman —Kodak" in the transparent margin.

More BIG Pictures

Let's talk FACTS. Your Theatre is open for a Year. A Year consists of 12 months—52 weeks. Elementary, but a good thing to remember when you're buying product. That means you need a lot of pictures. But that's only half the story. You need a lot of BIG Pictures if you're going to show a profit on the YEAR, which is what counts.

Now look over all the announcements of product for 1927-28, and ask yourself where this YEAR 'ROUND BIG PRODUCT is coming from.

There's only one answer—from the program that has the greatest QUANTITY of QUALITY. That's PARAMOUNT—and Paramount you know will deliver. It's the one line-up that stands up under the closest scrutiny of the hardest boiled exhibitors in this business.

In 1927-28 PARAMOUNT is the WHOLE SHOW!

---One Big Purpose

It is the man with one ambition, one big purpose, who generally accomplishes most. Christopher Columbus discovered America because he concentrated on one purpose. Captain Lindbergh flew to Paris because he put this great task above everything else, even life itself.

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., was organized to specialize in short features. It has not turned aside from its one big purpose—to make Educational Pictures the best short features on the market, backed by service and support that would make them earn the best possible profits for the exhibitor.

That's why Educational Pictures are the best. That's why 13,000 theatres have been playing them regularly. And that's why the contracts for our great 1927-1928 group of short features are coming in so fast.

"6,000 persons arose and cheered," says the New York Times, when they saw and heard Lindbergh's take-off in Fox News Movietone at the Roxy

The N. Y. Times in its main news story of the triumph of Lindbergh says:

"The second evening performance at Roxy's Theatre last night evoked a demonstration during the showing of pictures of Lindbergh. By a recording device, the roar of Lindbergh's plane was heard as pictures of the ship leaving the ground were shown. The film and sound of the motor, together with the cheers of watchers in Roosevelt Field observing the plane ascend made a powerful pull on the imagination of the audience, and more than 6,000 persons arose and cheered, drowning out the noise of the recording machine."

Mordaunt Hall, critic of the N. Y. Times says:

"An impressive feature of the program is the Movietone of the take-off of Captain Lindbergh. The roar of the propellers is heard and when the gallant aviator leaves the earth the cheers of the throng on the field come to the ears of the spectators in the theatre. Yesterday afternoon this short feature not only stirred up enthusiastic applause, but in all sections of the theatre many persons shouted and hurrahed."

The N. Y. Sun says:

"The patrons of Roxy theatre are witnessing this week the first demonstration of the 'movietone,' or sound reproduction machine adopted by the Fox News Service to report timely news. Pictures of Lindbergh's takeoff from Roosevelt Field are being thrown on the theatre screen to the accompaniment of the roar of the motor and the plaudits of the crowd."

The N. Y. Morning Telegraph says:

"The first demonstration of the adaptability of the Movietone, the Fox News Service with sound reproduction, came Friday when the take-off of Lindbergh from Roosevelt Field was thrown on the screen of the Roxy Theatre, accompanied by the roar of the motor and the shouting of the crowds."

My dear Mr. Hatrick:-

I wish you could have been in the Capitol Theatre when the International shots of Lindbergh's take-off went on the screen. The audience simply went wild, and particularly when they saw so graphically pictured the laboring of the aeroplane as it sped down the runway, and the final take-off within a fraction of disaster!

It was a wonderful piece of news reel photography, and you are certainly to be congratulated.

Sincerely yours,

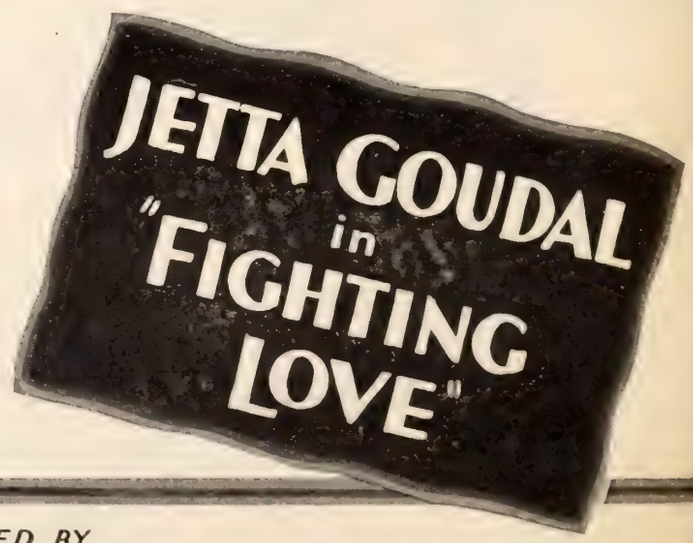
"We consider Miss Goudal one of the loveliest ladies on the screen, as well as one of the most talented. Our advice is decidedly do not miss Jetta Goudal in 'Fighting Love'."

Harriet Underhill, Herald-Tribune

"The cast is exceptionally good. Jetta Goudal, looking lovelier than I have ever seen her, gives a sincere portrayal. Miss Goudal acts with charming restraint."

Regina Cannon, N. Y. American

"Its individual performances are expert. This happens to be my first observation of Miss Goudal, and she is good. There seems to be a genuine gift for playing in emotions; she can act."



Quinn Martin, N. Y. World

"Excellent screen acting in a photopla that is simply bound to thrill you. Her is burning melodrama, containing all th essentials requisite to an action picture Will hold your interest throughout th footage. It is simpler to register motio than emotion. Miss Goudal does bot in as competent a characterization as sh has thus far contributed."

"Herb" Cruikshank, Morning Telegrap

"A colorful romance, packed with excite ment and thrills, well directed and cap ably acted. We did not wonder that th results satisfied Miss Goudal. Never ha she looked so beautiful nor has she in terpreted a role with such realism an charm."

Volume XXXV NEW YORK CITY, JUNE 3, 1927 No. 22

What About the Future?

HOLLYWOOD is on its way toward a glorious future. There can, I believe, be no question about that. Somehow, some way, Hollywood will achieve that future. It can hardly be avoided. Perhaps a few men out there see and know that Hollywood is destined to be the world's centre of film production, vast as such a conception is.

But about all you can say of Hollywood at large—very large,—is that it is merrily, and selfishly, and recklessly, on its way.

* * * *

A speaker at the initial meeting of the newly-formed Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences—a large name, to be sure—made a startling statement. He said that practically every notable advance in production technique—ideas, inventions, improvements in general—has come from outside the industry.

Startling enough, it would seem. Yet, apparently, true. One recalls, easily enough, such advances as:

Technicolor, an outgrowth of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Vitaphone, from the Bell Telephone and Western Electric Companies, and Phonofilm from Dr. Lee De Forest; incandescent studio lighting, from the General Electric; the Scheufftan system of trick photography, from a former portrait painter; the Akeley Camera, from an explorer.

And not from the studios but from Eastman Kodak's research laboratory came Panchromatic and Panchromatic K film, and "duping" stock; while, it also occurs to us, "Nanook" and "Chang," two of the most distinctive films ever made, came from men not trained in Hollywood.

* * * *

Yet, according to our correspondent, this statement made no appreciable effect upon the Hollywood meeting. More attention was paid to a proposal to send out bulletins answering the many ill advised criticisms against the people of the film colony.

* * * *

Every industry of any importance today has a research laboratory, the function of which is to work ahead of the present and advance and safeguard the industry's future.

I have heard some big business men declare that a competent research laboratory was about the best business insurance that could be had.

And I have always noted that in any industry the concern at the top is one with a research laboratory that has been in competent swing for a period of years. You cannot compete with such a concern with mere millions of capital; you cannot overtake, with money or any other such means, the well-along-the-road position of an enterprise which knows just where it is bound.

* * * *

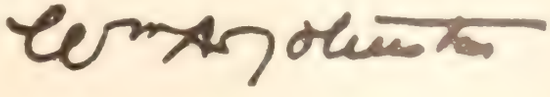
If any product in the world needs scientific nurturing it is the motion picture.

For one thing, the manufacture of it is most puzzling and costly. Anything that will simplify and economize studio operation is, admittedly, of enormous value.

For another thing the product itself is highly dependent upon technical improvements. The thoughtful man in this business—yes, we have had some—is keenly aware of the fact that just a single but radical scheme of making a picture more pleasing to the public might swerve the whole business into other hands.

Yet—Hollywood has no research laboratory!

* * * *



In last week's issue, Alfred Hustwick suggests just such a scheme. He makes the practical suggestion that it be a business enterprise upon the part of each company. Nothing much could be expected from a community of interests in this respect. But he also suggests that the laboratory work could well be conducted with the interested assistance of the colleges and universities.

* * * *

We are spending several hundreds of millions a year, these days, upon the production and distribution of pictures. In other words, we are lavishly spending upon the all-important present.

We look ahead from one season to another, but not further.

It's about time to consider the future—from a strictly business angle.

Comment on Passing Affairs

AN instance of the high esteem in which the modern photoplay palace, and its sponsors, are held is at hand in the case of the new Saenger Theatre in New Orleans.

This house is, of course, one of the world's great theatres, and a monument to the progress of the Saenger Amusement Co., in which E. V. Richards, Jr., is the guiding spirit. Recently, the Women's Federated Clubs held a competition for the best expression on the theatre and the award went to Mrs. J. S. Cave, of the Orleans Club.

Thus it is when a theatre enterprise really becomes a community leader and an institution of the first rank in its city.

LAST week, in our Short Feature Service Guide, the return of the two-reel drama was predicted by Roxy—to which we added some comment of our own in the same vein. Rather more quickly than expected, the prediction was fulfilled.

We learn that the revival of the two-reel drama in the New York territory is marked by the booking of "The White Mouse," produced several years ago by Selig-Rork, and released by Educational, over the Loew circuit. Other short features in the Selig-Rork group are also being revived.

There can be no question that this is an important sign of the times. Ordinarily, booking stories do not interest us, because bookings of pictures are common to all theatres, and therefore do not have novelty so far as publication is concerned.

But the reappearance of the short-reel drama is decidedly news. We are glad to call special attention to it, because we do feel that it is of decided—and novel—importance.

EDWIN SCHALLERT, of The Los Angeles Times, made some very apt remarks the other day in his column, on the subject of humanness in the films. He pointed out that the trend is away from the spectacular, lavish picture, with its big, expensive sets, crowds and mechanism.

It is not Mr. Schallert's idea that the spectacle will disappear, for of course it will not. It will always have its place. But "the story will henceforward be the all-prominent thing," as Mr. Schallert says.

This is somewhat in line with the speech made by King Vidor at the A.M.P.A. meeting in New York the other day. Vidor outlined his new picture, "The Crowd," as being a picturization of the life of an average man and woman. Here, of course, the emphasis is squarely on story value, and the idea is as original as any ever attempted.

GOING back to Mr. Schallert, we print his article in some detail:

"A year or so from now I look to see a preponderance of original stories written for pictures. They are, in fact, being written right today, and they are being done by writers inured to the syntax—as some one has aptly called it—of the screen.

"What pictures have disclosed this trend toward humanness? Well—any number that might be mentioned. The war pictures, first, perhaps, because they successfully dwelt on the more intimate and friendly side of the war. They passed up the battlefields for the daily round of happiness behind the front. The theory existed, though, that they had to be made 'big' by the including of a few elaborate battle scenes. It was the fear that perhaps the picture would not look as if a lot of money had been spent on it—that therefore it might not impress.

"The parts of these pictures that really did impress were, however, the simpler and less spectacular scenes.

"It has been a steady growth since then toward simplicity. Were 'The Big Parade' made today the extra battle scenes would have been eliminated. They were shot at large cost after the original film of 'The Big Parade' was finished in order to give it a greater apparent momentousness.

"It is that way with nearly every new idea that is introduced in the films. It has to be brought on with the blare of trumpets and the rattle of drums. The costume picture a few years ago came in with a similar fanfare. Lavish decorativeness almost killed these films. But the best of them have learned the lesson of simplicity.

"Pictures at present are suffering from a complex of camera angles, but it is not serious. The camera has become momentarily self-conscious to the extent that it must be moved around in a way to attract attention, and to shoot from obviously odd angles at certain scenes.

"The innovations in the use of the camera will find their place along with many other so-called radical departures that are part now of the regular routine of the making of films."

Plan Sought to Prevent Floods

M. P. T. O. A. Would Prepare Newsreel as Part of Idea to Secure Aid from Congress

AS a result of the tremendous amount of property damage caused by the flood in the Mississippi Valley, support of every theatre in the United States is sought in a recent move by the M. P. T. O. A. to secure from the next session of Congress an appropriation whereby a sound plan may be evolved to prevent another such disaster.

Frank R. Reid, of Aurora, chairman of flood control, in conjunction with Mayor William Hale Thompson, of Chicago; Mayor Arthur J. O'Keefe, of New Orleans, and M. P. T. O. A. representatives will take the initial action at a meeting in Chicago June 2, 3 and 4.

Tentative plans call for the preparation of a special newsreel of the devastated region and its showing in hundreds of theatres as a means for enlisting the aid of congressional representatives. It is thought that a plan made by engineers for Secretary Hoover for flood prevention will be used in connection with the appropriation. Messrs. Woodhull and O'Toole, of the M. P. T. O. A., urge all theatre owners to co-operate with local organizations in support of the move.

The fine response made by theatre owners to President Coolidge's plea in behalf of the American Red Cross continues to evidence itself.

In a letter to R. F. Woodhull, of the M. P. T. O. A., E. W. Van Norman, president of the Wisconsin M. P. T. O., stated that the benefit put over by the theatrical profession of Milwaukee was the biggest thing of its kind ever held in that city, and while the exact amount raised is not yet known it is thought to be near $40,000.

Over $12,000 has been turned in from the downtown theatres of Minneapolis, while in St. Paul, the big F. & R. performance netted about $6,000. Practically all theatres in the Northwest are in some way contributing to the flood fund.

The final benefit planned by the Pantages Theatre of Memphis was held last Sunday, and approximately $500 was donated. Three negro theatres—the Palace, Daisy and one other—handed over $600 for the fund. The Memphis total now exceeds $16,000.

At a twin affair at the Granada and Loew's Warfield Theatres of San Francisco, said to be the biggest thing of its kind ever held there, Messrs. Ackerman, Baron and Work, in co-operation with the Red Cross, raised $16,000 instead of the $12,000 goal that was set by the committee.

Twenty Denver theatres have thus far held benefit performances, and approximately $2,000 has been turned over to the Denver Red Cross. Complete reports from over fifty theatres in Denver territory holding benefits have not been received by the Film Board of Trade. Some houses are still putting them on.

In all about 150 theatres in the St. Louis zone have contributed to the relief fund, and one of the most recent to donate the proceeds of a special performance was Loew's State, where $2,113 was raised. The St. Louis and Grand Opera House further aided the fund by contributing 25 per cent of regular shows held May 20.

In some sections of New England, exhibitors met with opposition as to their methods of raising funds for flood relief. James Jackson, chairman of the New England Red Cross, stated, through Judge Albert Brackett, that past efforts had shown that minute speakers and collections in theatres were not favored. As a result, individual performances will probably be held by many theatre owners in this section. The Palace and Capitol Theatres of Worcester, Mass., turned over to the Red Cross a check for $7,009.03, the largest single contribution to a quota of $36,000. Fay's Theatre in Providence, R. I., raised $5,000 in their benefit performances, and turned all of it over to the Providence Red Cross Chapter.

The flood relief committees in Oklahoma territory are well pleased with the results of their campaign, $6,500 having been turned in thus far. One hundred and seventy-five theatres responded.

Believing that there might be some objection to holding a Sunday show in La Grange, Ga., R. E. Golden, operator of the two Golden theatres in that city abandoned the idea and instead gave to the Red Cross his personal check for $125.

A benefit held at Manager O. C. Lam's Rivoli Theatre, Rome, Ga., netted the flood sufferers $193.

The opening of theatres on Sunday in Albany, N. Y., was the means of raising $7,000 for the Red Cross Chapter of that city. In the same territory, J. L. Foote, of Delanson, and John Mattice, of Middleberg, each gave benefit shows.

Actors and actresses from virtually all legitimate and motion picture theatres of Kansas City gave their services free of charge at a Sunday night show arranged by Manager A. F. Baker, of the Electric Theatre.

Three hundred and fifty Chicago motion picture theatres, practically every house within the limits of the city, are taking part in the drive for funds to aid the flood sufferers. The tie-up was affected by the Exhibitors' Association of Chicago, with the Chicago Daily News Radio stations WMAQ and WQJ and the Red Cross for this purpose, and the Red Cross workers have been soliciting in the various theatres for the past week, the theatres showing on their screens a 500-foot reel depicting scenes taken in the devastated area by the Daily News Screen Service.

Colleen Moore Ceases Production for First Nat'l; John McCormick Resigns

By WILLIAM McCORMACK

West Coast Representative Motion Picture News

HOLLYWOOD, May 25.—John McCormick has resigned as West Coast production manager for First National, effective at once. The Colleen Moore production, which was to start filming immediately after the close of the sales convention, has not been begun.

Richard A. Rowland, First National general manager, and Mr. McCormick refused to make any statements for publication. Future developments, it was said, might heal the breach.

M. C. Levee, studio business executive, leaves June 1 to join United Artists, and Watterson R. Rothacker has been chosen to fill Levee's place. According to the best information obtainable, Mr. Rothacker will be asked to take over John McCormick's duties temporarily.

An opinion voiced today in quarters close to Mr. Rowland was to the effect that McCormick's resignation would not affect Miss Moore's contract to make four more pictures for First National. In checking this with Mr. McCormick, the statement was characterized as unofficial. When questioned regarding forthcoming Moore productions for First National and her contractual relations with the company, Mr. McCormick referred the matter to Miss Moore for answer, but Miss Moore could not be reached for a statement.

Restrictions imposed on the studio by a group of Eastern bankers, who recently became connected with First National, are rumored as having some bearing on the McCormick resignation.

Fox Sues DeForest for $100,000 on Talking Picture Option

IN AN action instituted in the New York Supreme Court for Bronx County, William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation, has brought suit against Dr. Lee DeForest to recover $100,000, which Fox alleges to have paid Dr. DeForest during October, 1926.

It is further alleged by the plaintiff that an agreement was entered into with Dr. DeForest whereby, for the sum of $1,000, option was granted Mr. Fox to purchase from him 120,000 shares forming a majority of the voting shares of the capital stock of the DeForest Phonofilms, Inc., at the price of $21 per share. This option was to be exercised on or before October 7, subject to certain terms and agreements, it is stated.

The option is said to have not been exercised on the stipulated date, and that Fox and DeForest entered into a new agreement by which the former was to pay the latter $100,000 to secure a renewal of the option. It is claimed that the suit for recovery of the $100,000 is largely based on alleged misrepresentations regarding the ownership of patent rights.

Dr. DeForest declined to comment on the matter.

Film Boards Meet May 30

Secretaries Convene at French Lick for Policy and Problem Discussions; First Annual Session

SECRETARIES of the Film Boards of Trade throughout the United States and Canada are now en route to French Lick Springs, where, beginning Monday, May 30, the first annual convention of this group will be held. Colonel John A. Cooper, of the Hays allied organization in Canada, and G. O. Burnett, secretary of the Toronto Board, will represent Canada.

Many problems will be discussed at the sessions which will terminate Tuesday evening; zoning in various territories will be brought up, the workings of arbitration, and the entire general business principle of amicable relations between exhibitors and exchanges will be gone over and improved upon wherever possible in order to bring about better understanding.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Film Boards; Gabriel L. Hess, general attorney for the Hays organization; Louis Phillips, secretary of the New York Board, and Hickman Price, in charge of conservation work and the reduction of fire hazards in exchanges throughout the United States will leave from New York in a day or so for the meeting.

The secretaries and the Film Boards each will represent at the meetings include:

Jane M. Holloran, Albany; E. L. Cole, Atlanta; Martha W. Ferris, Boston; Emma Abplanalp, Buffalo; Harry Meyer, Butte; Audry Littell, Charlotte; J. D. Abramson, Chicago; E. McNamee, Cincinnati; Mrs. G. D. Moffett, Cleveland; Don C. Douglas, Dallas; Duke W. Dunbar, Denver; Miss M. Benjamin, Des Moines; David Palfreyman, Detroit; Miss M. McCullough, Indianapolis; Miss A. L. Menagh, Kansas City; A. P. Michael Narlian, Los Angeles; Ben Koenig, Milwaukee; Mrs. Alma Walton, Memphis; G. B. Wiggins, Minneapolis; Kathryn Sullivan, New Haven; Mrs. J. B. Heine, New Orleans; Louis Phillips, New York City; Charles R. Zears, Oklahoma City; Clare Foley, Omaha; J. H. Greenberg, Philadelphia; Olive J. Harden, Pittsburgh; E. K. Oppenheimer, Portland; Miss L. B. Schofield, St. Louis; D. T. Lane, Salt Lake City; Milton A. Nathan, San Francisco; Mrs. R. B. Lynch, Seattle; James B. Fitzgerald, Washington; Mary Mason, Montreal; G. O. Burnett, Toronto; F. Donnenworth, Vancouver; Miss P. Frederick, Calgary; Mrs. T. R. Ginsberg, Winnipeg, and Mrs. Florence Marr, St. John.

On Friday of next week, Tom Taggart, developer of French Lick Springs, will tender a dinner to the secretaries.

Kennedy Offers Outlet for Creative Energy

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY, president of F. B. O., has instructed his scenario department to open its doors to the new and live ideas and original stories that college students can supply for motion picture production. Saying that "young, fresh, vigorous ideas combined with academic college training will give the industry the impetus it needs at its very foundation—originally in story construction," Mr. Kennedy has invited the students of Photoplay Composition in the Extension School of Columbia University to be their guests at a preview showing of "Splitting the Breeze," a Tom Tyler film. As a result of the showing the F. B. O. scenario department has received many manuscripts for the star. The stories are now being read and an announcement will be made shortly concerning the purchase of one or more of them.

New House for Bluefield, W. Va., to Cost $250,000

A new theatre building to have a seating capacity of about 1,150 persons, measuring 94 by 124 feet, will be built at Bluefield, W. Va., by the Commerce Building Company. The cost will be about $250,000.

Russian Film Official Due Here to Buy Supplies

The American-Russian Chamber of Commerce, in this city, has been informed by Charles H. Smith, representative of the Chamber in Moscow, that M. E. Gordon, an important official of the Russian film industry, will arrive in this country within a few days. Mr. Gordon is coming to America to study the Moving Picture Industry, and make arrangements to purchase large quantities of films, projecting machines, kodaks, printing machines, and other necessary equipment for this industry. In addition to the above, Mr. Gordon will purchase the requisite machinery for one or two plants which are now under construction.

Anyone wishing to get into communication with Mr. Gordon should address the secretary of the Chamber, at 145 West 57th Street, New York City.

Bennett Brandon Now With Lafayette, Buffalo

Bennett Brandon, well known in the theatrical and film business, has recently been appointed assistant manager of the Lafayette Square Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Brandon has been associated with theatres for nine years and prior to his present appointment was with Pathe as Special Home Office Representative for three and one-half years. The Lafayette Square is operated by the Monument Theatre Corporation of Buffalo, M. Slotkin general manager.

Changes in Seattle's Censor Board Suggested

The Seattle City Council Public Safety Committee last week fostered a change in the censor board, recommending nine members in place of the former board of seven, and suggesting a change of name to the Board of Theatre Supervisors. By the new plan it is expected to be able to have one theatre manager and one representative of the film industry (exchange manager preferably) as members of the new board.

Electrical Research to Distribute Vitaphone

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the Western Electric Company that its subsidiary, Electrical Research Products, Inc., has taken over from the Vitaphone Corporation the handling of the sale and commercial relations of the equipment used in theatres for the reproduction of the Vitaphone. It will continue to operate from the Vitaphone Company's former headquarters in the Fisk Building, 57th Street and Broadway, New York.

In the past the trade name Vitaphone has been used to apply both to the production and to the equipment installed in theatres. Under the arrangements recently entered into with Warner Bros. the name Vitaphone will hereafter apply to theatrical productions, while the electrical equipment by which the reproduction is made possible will be known as the Western Electric Sound Projector System.

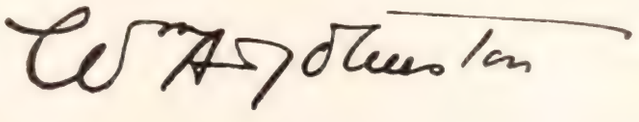
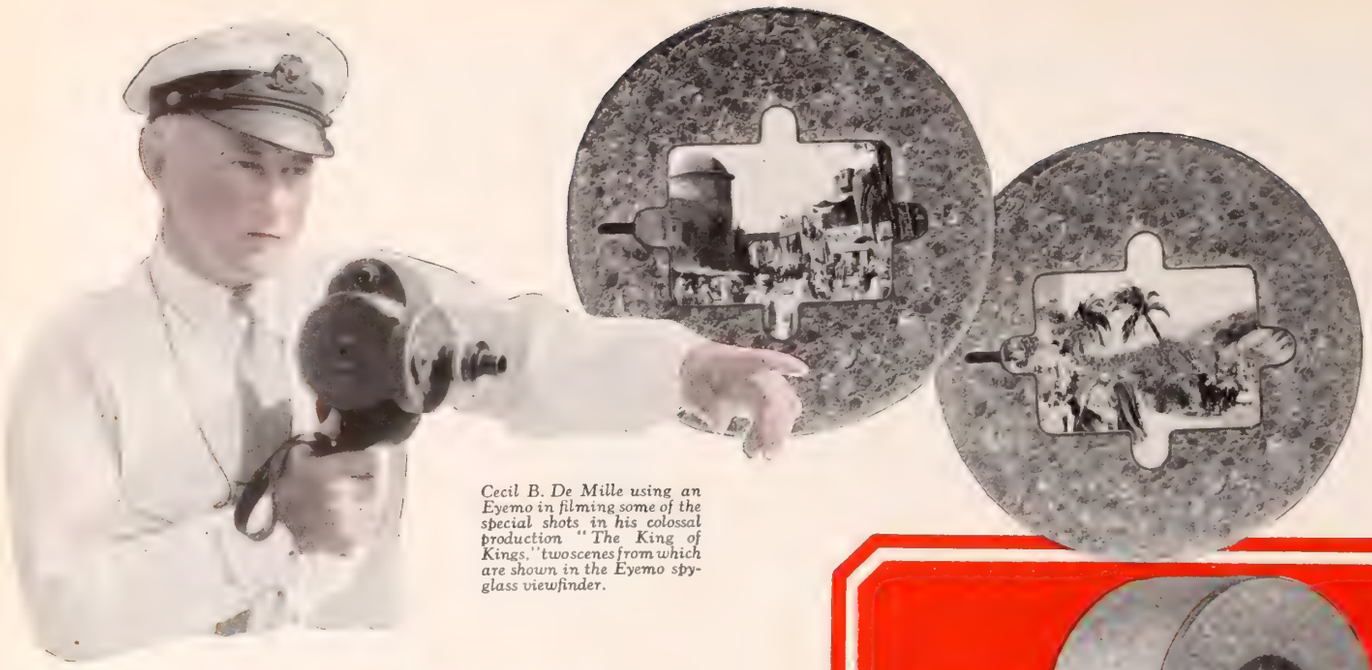
Stage Lighting —Past and Present

Review of New Equipment



THE enhanced purchasing power of the dollar, the result of a gradual decline of prices during the past five years, is nowhere more spectacularly shown than in the matter of motion picture entertainments. Improvements in production have been accompanied by vastly improved methods of presentation.



Under the urge of a changing condition, showmanship has responded to the challenge brought about by the more descriminating picturegoer, taught in the market place to expect more for his dollar.

Here and there have been flair-ups in which added attractions were given an inflated value by theatre men, with the result that in some instances the extras,—whose worth in many cases was measured more in terms of "talking points" for advertisements than in real entertainment quality—were stressed above the attraction to which they were added. But the tail could not wag the dog, and some bitter experiences succeeded in bringing the more alert back to first principles.

The same natural result is following in the wake of the program of added bulk, the outcome of misconceived notions of "good business" in the face of general business conditions and increased competition. The policy of more for the money, mere bulk that is, will never please the amusement seeker.

Competitive methods aimed to attract patronage in the face of increasingly elaborate programs at rival theatres dictate a course based upon a more sound showmanship policy. The complete entertainment, reflecting the individuality of the showman intelligently informed as to what his public desires, and served up under conditions which enhance the enjoyment of theatregoing—service—are tools with which successful theatre men are working, and continued prosperity is convincing proof of their efficacy.

OMAHA'S ATMOSPHERIC THEATRE---THE RIVIERA

John Eberson Designer of De Luxe House in Italian Renaissance Style

MOST recent and perhaps most elaborate of the atmospheric theatres designed by John Eberson is now the leading theatrical attraction in Omaha, Neb., where the Riviera, operated by the A. H. Blank enterprises, associated with Publix Theatres, had its formal opening late in March.

The Riviera has a seating capacity of 3,000 and was built at a cost announced as $2,500,000. The erection of a theatre of such thoroughly modern design and elaborate equipment places Omaha among the American cities in which the finest examples of theatre architecture may be found.

The exterior of the Riviera, executed in pulsichrome terra cotta and textured buff brick in multi shades with highly polychromed metallic domes, presents an interpretation of the romantic Italian period of art and architecture. It is a symposium of the walls of the palaces of Venice, Florence, Milan and Rome. There are bits of detail in the polychrome treatment of brick, the medieval touch of antique Spanish lanterns, embrasure and niches, projecting balconies, pediments surmounted with gargoyles and vine-encircled pillars, the whole being capped with Moorish towers.

The interior of the theatre is even more colorful and attractive. The main lobby, almost a block long, is broken up with intimate nooks and corners, and has the effect of the loggia entrance to the patio of an Italian palace.

The atmospheric effects of the Riviera, where the carnival spirit rules, pervades the interior lobbies, lounges and auditorium of this magnificent playhouse. The loggia is enclosed with trellised walls, capped with warm-hued tile and relieved with grotesque carvings on weathered oak beams.

The auditorium creates the effect of an open air garden, in conformance with the basic idea of the atmospheric theatre. The blue of the skies, studded with constellations of stars, elaborated in its effects by the drifting clouds, obtained by means of projector devices, is the first feature to strike the eye.

The dissymmetry of the sidewall treatment offers an interesting study in balance. The right-hand side features an Italian garden scene, with a Venetian fountain in garden walls, surmounted by glowing urns silhouetted against the moon-lit sky. The triumphal arch is used for the stage treatment. The left wall shows an interesting group of classic statuary and illuminated niches. The illusion created is as nearly perfect as has ever been achieved in theatre design, a secret lighting effect serving an important part in this feature.

DE LUXE THEATRES FOR DOWNTOWN AND NEIGHBORHOOD

THREE theatres of unusual recently opened, designed by the firm of C. W. & Geo. L. Rapp, Architects, were designed to meet unusual conditions and are here illustrated as part of a study of the modern tendency toward the planning and designing of theatres where large crowds are handled. The architects find that theatres built in the downtown district vary in policy to theatres built in the outlaying districts or residential sections. The theatres in the downtown district are such as appeal to the transient type of patron as compared with the outlying or residential theatres which may claim to be a neighborhood theatre. The outlying theatres become more or less a neighborhood center where people can meet their friends during the week, and becomes more or less a place of gathering in a friendly spirit.

The Palace theatre, Chicago, and the Rialto theatre in Joliet, Ill., are very successful in this particular point of view.

Above — the auditorium of the Palace Theatre, Chicago, operated by the Orpheum Circuit, and with a seating capacity of 2,800. The style of the Palace throughout is French Renaissance.

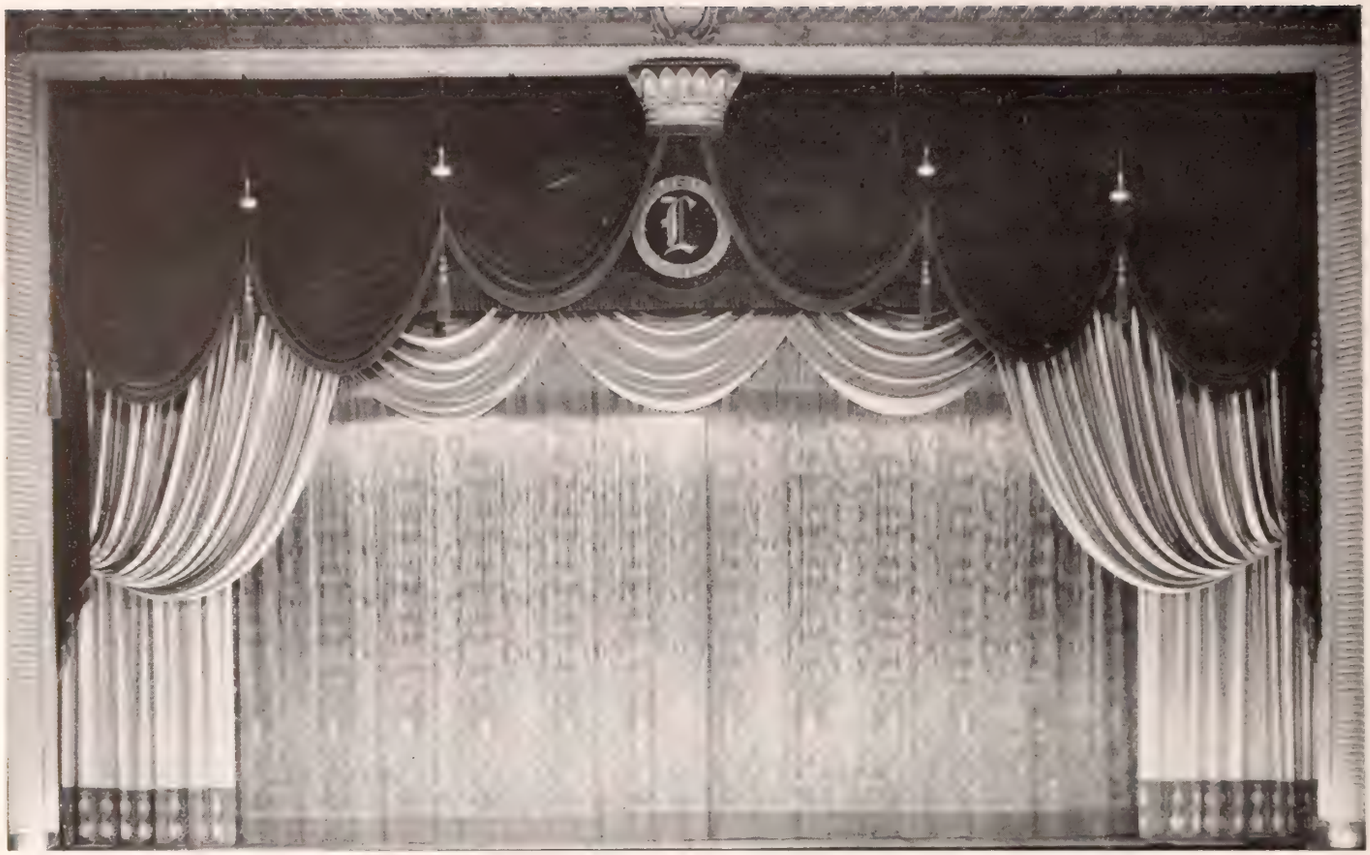
COURTLY SPLENDOR MARKS JOLIET THEATRE



A magnificent motion picture theatre in Joliet, Ill., is one of the newest accomplishments of C. W. & Geo. L. Rapp, architects. Above is shown a view of the inner lobby, spacious and luxuriously furnished in accordance with the new development, trising with the de luxe picture playhouse, that the patron who is awaiting the opportunity to see the performance must be made comfortable and his interest engaged by beautiful architecture, decoration and furnishings.

The auditorium of the Rialto is shown on the right. The decorative treatment is majestic, and yet the inviting air of comfort and intimacy is preserved.

House Seating 1215 Operated by Publix Theatres

ONE of the finest theatres and office buildings in Florida has been completed in Jacksonville for the Publix Theatres Corporation from plans by R. E. Hall & Company, Architects.

The building is located at the corner of Forsyth and Newman Streets on a plot 115 feet by 158 feet, the theatre proper measuring 90 feet by 158 feet, and office building 25 feet deep by full length of property on Forsyth Street.

The theatre has a seating capacity of 1,215 seats on Orchestra Floor and 996 on balcony, making a total of 2211 seats.

The office building is seven stories in height with stores, theatre entrance and exits on first floor, and offices on upper floors.

The façade is of light buff brick with polychrome terra cotta trimmings, copper cornice and tile roof.

The theatre entrance lobby has Spanish Tile wainscot, with terrazzo floor and steps and faïence tile inserts. The ticket booth and display frames are of hammered wrought iron, with glazed panels of antique glass set in leaded bars.

Steps from lobby lead up to Promenade, which has been designed as a Spanish Patio with arched openings in Mezzanine Lounge overlooking Promenade.

At each side of Promenade, wide stairs lead to Mezzanine Lounge and lower Cross Over aisle of Balcony, and continue up to Passage and upper part of Balcony. Off the Mezzanine Lounge are located the Ushers' and Check Rooms and the Men's and Women's Rooms with toilets.

The walls of Auditorium are finished in rough textured plaster with richly panelled ceiling and arched sounding board and ornamented exit openings.

Organs are located in spaces each side of Proscenium opening, and perforated grilles in panels of sounding board allow for sound entering Auditorium.

A Roof Garden covers entire area over Auditorium, with dance floor in center and raised dining platforms on three sides with space for musicians at one end. Ample space is provided for kitchen and serving pantries, and toilets for roof garden.

All lighting fixtures are in keeping with the Spanish style of Architecture, the main Auditorium having four chandeliers of hammered wrought iron, and colored glass set in lead.

Cove lighting is provided in the arch of Sounding Board and in the architrave of Proscenium Arch. Concealed lighting is also provided in the ornamental recesses under balcony and drapery hoods on the side walls.

The theatre is ventilated and air cooled by a special refrigerating system, with condensing water apparatus and cooling tower, and the stage equipment of the most modern type, both as to stage rigging and electrical switchboard.

The interior decorations are striking and colorful and the draperies, carpets and furnishings have been selected to harmonize in every detail with the Architectural features.

Throughout its design, the Florida is a theatre structure combining the utmost in modern conveniences, utility and harmonious proportions. The use of space to the practical purposes of a picture theatre make it a striking example of efficiency in design.

CAMERA ANGLES OF TWO NEW PICTURE HOUSES

Attractive surroundings are not a feature of the large picture theatres of today alone—the modern small theatre as well is being built with a view to beauty and comfortable surroundings for the patrons of the screen. On this page are shown two interior views of the Temple Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. It was built by Charles DePaul, of the Soo Amusement Co., of that city. DePaul also operates the Strand Theatre in Sault Ste. Marie.

At the left is a view of the auditorium lobby, carrying out the features of coziness and dignity incorporated in the design of the Temple, a theatre seating 625. Below is a view of the auditorium taken from the balcony. The treatment is plain, and the bright and lively note demanded in the theatre has been accomplished by colorful treatment of the wall panels. A cloud effect machine gives added appeal to the tree and panorama effects of the panels.

The latest addition to the chain of motion picture houses under the control of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., took its place when the New California in San Diego, Cal., opened its doors to the public last April. Approximately three-quarters of a million dollars represents the cost of the new theatre, and the structure has taken nearly a year in its erection. The house has a seating capacity of 2,200, making it the largest theatre in San Diego. There is one balcony, but no boxes. A double stairway, with mirrored landing and with intricately wrought iron railings, leads from the foyer to the

THE VENETIAN THEATRE IN MILWAUKEE

Recent Addition to Universal Chain is Atmospheric Type

MILWAUKEE'S northwest side boasts one of the most modern and most beautiful motion picture theatres in the city, the new Universal Venetian, at 27th and Center Streets.

The theatre is the latest addition to the Universal chain in that city (the Milwaukee Theatre Circuit), which now controls eleven houses there.

The Venetian theatre, which was built at a cost of more than $500,000, is Milwaukee's first atmospheric theatre. It is in pure Italian Renaissance style. The interior decorations portray the beauty and glamour of a summer night in Venice. The soft blue of a Venetian sky at dusk is represented on the arched ceiling, while a cloud machine, one of the few in the northwest, creates soft, languorous clouds lazily sweeping overhead. Stars twinkle out from behind the clouds in an enchanting way. Shrubs and trees surmount the arched aisles on either side, through which one can see gondolas against a Venetian background.

The walls are hung with heavy wine colored and blue drapes, adding an atmosphere of courtly splendor. The walls themselves are paneled, etched in gold.

The auditorium is lighted by huge flood lamps concealed in coves to give indirect reflection and to create a true twilight effect.

In the basement are two large, luxuriously furnished lounge rooms designed for the utmost comfort of the patrons.

Foyer of the Venetian, stairways at either side give access to balcony

The exterior of the building is finished in buff terra cotta. Along the upper cornice is a series of shields done in blue and red, as are also the spiral pillars along the side. A large canopy is suspended over the sidewalk, over which is an electric sign which can be seen for blocks. The entire front of the building is brilliantly illuminated with flood lights. The exterior dimensions of the building are 95 by 120 feet. The structure contains four stores in addition to the theatre.

The stage, fully equipped to handle elaborate vaudeville acts and road shows, is 18 feet deep, with proscenium opening 24 by 42 feet. Complete counter weight rigging system has been installed for the handling of machinery on the stage.

The seating arrangement is unusually well worked out. The incline is very gradual, yet clear vision is obtained from every seat in the house. The balcony is wide and spacious. The Venetian is one of the few theatres in the city where patrons actually prefer to sit in the balcony. The theatre has a capacity of 1,430.

A large ventilating system has been installed, which has a capacity to wash, temper, and retemper 33,000 cubic feet of air per minute.

The Venetian is managed by Stanley Gross, who brings to the theatre a wealth of theatrical experience gained over a long period of time, during which he has risen from the lowest ranks to the management and direction of this new theatre. He was for several years manager of the Downer theatre before coming to the Venetian.

Radio and Showmanship

The Correspondence We Have Received Furnishes an Unerring Criterion of What the Public Really Enjoys, Says Roxy

ROXY is one of the most vivid personalities on the air. He and his "gang" are known from coast to coast, and proof of their popularity is evidenced not only by the boxes of "fan mail" in the store room, but by the hundreds of letters which are received by Roxy after his weekly appearances "on the air." These letters come from all parts of the country and express the sentiments of the great mass of humanity who spend their evenings "listening in." They come from all walks of life, the business man, the school girl, invalids, baseball heroes, lawyers, who take this opportunity to express, in their own way, their likes and dislikes.

Has this intimate glance into the hearts of the people aided Roxy in his career? Does he act upon their suggestions? Has it affected his viewpoint as a showman? Has this contact with human psychology taught him anything?

Says Roxy:

"I am firmly convinced after five years of work with radio that its great function is to create good will. What the direct benefit derived from it is, no one can say, but radio properly applied and transmitted with a sincerity of purpose cannot help but create good will. No man or woman can have contact with a great listening audience without being benefited by it both spiritually and practically; and if a sincere effort without any thought of commercialism is the basis of radio work, the benefits to be derived are unequalled in any form of contact with the public.

"The correspondence that we have received has been a great source of help in determining the nature of the programs and are an unerring criterion of what the public really enjoys.

"On the whole, it is a subject that one could speak about at great length and yet there is a vagueness about it that is very difficult to define.

"I consider radio one of the most important factors in the work at this theatre; and just as a huge concern spends millions of dollars a year for advertising to create good will, so do we with our programs—only that good will which we feel we have created, and we are convinced that every effort that we have made has been repaid."

In illustration of the benefits of good will and guidance for the showman through this radio contact, upon which Roxy places great value, a few excerpts may be quoted from a random selection of some letters in the files of fan mail at the Roxy Theatre.

The enthusiasm on the part of those outside New York to see the new theatre is one of the most striking impressions resulting from a glance through some of these letters.

"I haven't seen your new theatre yet, but, I certainly shall see it upon my next trip to New York," is the declaration with which a man living in Pennsylvania concludes his letter of thanks for an especially enjoyable radio program. "My sister and I have been invited to spend the week-end in New York and the biggest thing we want to do is to visit your theatre," writes a young girl from her home in Pittsburgh.

A resident of a Northern New Jersey town in the course of a note telling his appreciation of the radio entertainment from the Roxy says that as his wife is an invalid they are not able to get around very much, "but we have hopes in the near future to get over to New York to spend at least a night so that we may see your wonderful theatre and see and hear the Gang that we love so well" he adds.

Here's a letter from a Washington woman saying "our morning papers are telling us you will have a theatre here soon—GOOD," and there's one that says "we are more than pleased that your new Roxy Theatre is such a success," and so on through letter upon letter, all bearing the most tangible evidence of good will.

The radio fans express their likes and dislikes with equal candor. Some of the programs broadcast bring in floods of letters of applause, tempered here and there with a suggestion for improvement. Thus a woman, "an old musician born in a musical family," makes the suggestion to "tone down the orchestra (which is fine) in the accompaniments for the singers," whom she applauds for their art and talent.

The sins of omission as well as those of commission, as conceived by the public, are also checked up in this intimate contact afforded by radio. "I was so disappointed last Monday evening," writes a Brooklyn resident, "when you had your travelogue on your program and traveled all around Switzerland but not in it. When you arrived in Czecho-Slovakia I bet a dime with my husband that you

Fulfill the Public's Demand for Comfort

PEOPLE have learned to feel for themselves and to recognize immediately the delightfully comfortable atmosphere in a Carrier Conditioned Theatre. Proper air conditioning in the theatre now rests on a par with the beauty of the theatre and the quality of the entertainment as an attraction to the public. This explains the remarkable rate at which the fine theatres of the country are adopting Carrier conditioning equipment. The Carrier system, designed especially for each theatre, is guaranteed to maintain uniform conditions of Temperature, Humidity and Air Purity every day in the year. It is the development of more than twenty years of specialized air conditioning experience. A recent development provides the same complete system for the fine, small theatres.

Stage Lighting—Past and Present

By A. L. Powell

Manager, Engineering Department Edison Lamp Works of G. E. Co.

FROM time immemorial men have been accustomed to meet for amusement, edification and companionship, and today we have for these purposes the theatre, the lecture hall, and the club or lodge room.

Long before the Christian era the Greeks used the natural formation of the hillside as a means of obtaining the necessary elevation of seats and sang or spoke their choruses in the circular space at the foot of a group of hills. The sacrificial table was usually placed at the center of this ring and, unquestionably urged by the desire to command greater attention, the leader of the chorus sprang on the table; this was no doubt the birth of the elevated stage.

The Romans were somewhat more skilled in architecture than the Greeks, and by the proper use of the arch they were enabled to erect their theatre and its banks of seats on level ground. With them the stage became larger. The dug a deep slot in the earth and dropped the curtain down in this. In fact, in the ruins of the great theatre at Pompeii this still exists in fairly good condition. Behind the stage they provided dressing rooms for the actors and, by placing seats on the level ground for distinguished persons and officials, originated the orchestra seating arrangement.

Their dramas and spectacles, we are told on good authority, "began early in the morning—in fact, so early that some of the spectators came during the night before the performance." With our present-day complexities of business life, most meetings and performances occur after dark, and generally indoors. Proper lighting has become a very important factor, not only from the standpoint of necessity, but in these days as a very effective means of decoration and of creating a suitable atmosphere. In ancient days little scenery was used, the architectural features of the building serving as a setting for the action.

The Roman theatre apparently existed until about the fifth century, but from then until the twelfth century we find little trace in history of any sort of theatrical performances. At that time there was awakened a desire to educate the mass of the people in the rudiments of Christianity, and the Miracle play was one of the means employed. A crude stage was erected near the church, or in the public squares, and the audience sat about this in the open air. Most of the action consisted of a series of tableaux. Sometimes the stage was mounted on wheels and moved from town to town, carrying the story into the more isolated parts of the country. Still the daylight was necessary for presentation, and it was not until about three hundred years later that we find mention of the use of burning pine knots in wrought iron baskets for very inefficiently illuminating the stage and tthe area around it.

By Shakespeare's time we find the drama indeed at a high standard, and it is doubtful if, from the standpoint of literary material, this period will ever again be equalled. His plays, however, were often presented on very crude platforms erected in the courtyard of a castle or inn with merely a lettered sign indicating the place of the action, no attempt as yet being made for a scenic setting.

At that period also, however, the enclosed theatre came into service, and we learn of performances being given in the evening. Lanterns, candles and torches furnished illumination, smoking, flickering, and indeed weak.

From then on, we find more thought being given to the arrangement and type of lighting. In 1628 Joseph Furtenbach in Germany described the arrangement of oil lamps or candles where our present footlights are located, and also a row at each side of the stage behind the wings where our strip lights are placed. The great English actor, David Garrick, apparently gave more attention to lighting the scene and did the best he could with the old illuminants available. He used a huge cluster of candles above the stage, and concealed candles for foot and strip lights.

In America the first theatre was built at Williamsburg, Virginia, in 1752 by the English actor, William Hallan. A brick theatre was built in Annapolis about the same time. Hallan opened the first theatre in New York in 1753 in Nassau Street. By 1775 Charleston and Boston had their own theatres, and before the end of the century there were others in Albany, Baltimore and Richmond. These were all lighted by candles.

One often wonders how plays were given by the lighting from flickering candles which had to be snuffed fre-

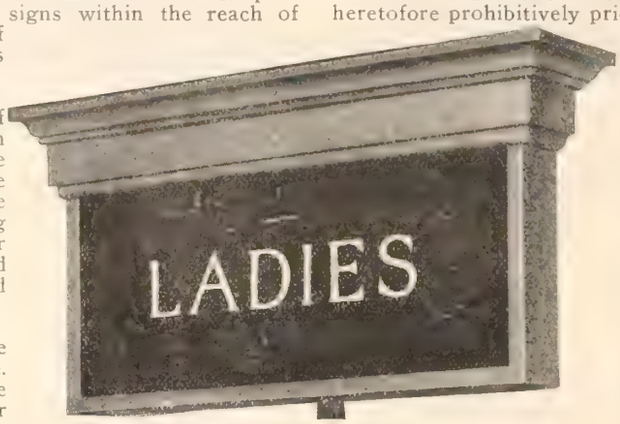
VALUE for VOLUME

—Another National Victory for Lower Prices and Better Equipment Service!



Here is another outstanding example of bigger value in better merchandise, made possible through National Service. A marked reduction in consumer cost which puts beautiful theatre directional signs within the reach of every exhibitor, regardless of the size of his theatre or its location.

It is just another instance of economy effected through volume distribution—a tribute to the support and patronage of exhibitors throughout the country who are co-operating with us in carrying out our program of better service and lower prices wherever and whenever possible.

Theatre directional signs are a necessity in every theatre. They are found only in the larger houses now-a-days, for the simple reason that their cost has always been considered prohibitive. As in the case of many other highly meritorious articles of theatre equipment, value in theatre directional signs has been denied the rank and file of exhibitors. Prices have been "out of line" because volume output for the manufacturer was lacking.

National Service in this instance, as well as many others, is solving the problems of both the user and the manufacturer.

Depending on YOU for your support of a policy that directly affects YOU and the entire theatre industry we have assumed the task of giving the manufacturer of heretofore prohibitively priced but highly essential equipment a greater field of distribution in return for marked reductions in factory costs.

WATCH THE NATIONAL "PINK SHEET" FOR FURTHER SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS OF "VALUE FOR VOLUME."

National manufactures nothing. It can reduce prices only through volume distribution and when a sufficient volume is forthcoming, prices will be automatically reduced in many instances and the saving passed along to YOU.

National has again utilized its enormous buying power. The entire factory output of the Willey Sign Company at Detroit, Michigan, has been contracted for and you may now purchase from your local National Branch Store, these attractive "Standard" Perlite Directional Signs at prices almost 60 per cent below what you have been asked heretofore.

Further economies will result from your continued support and patronage. We invite you to cooperate with us toward this end—and it is YOUR GAIN.

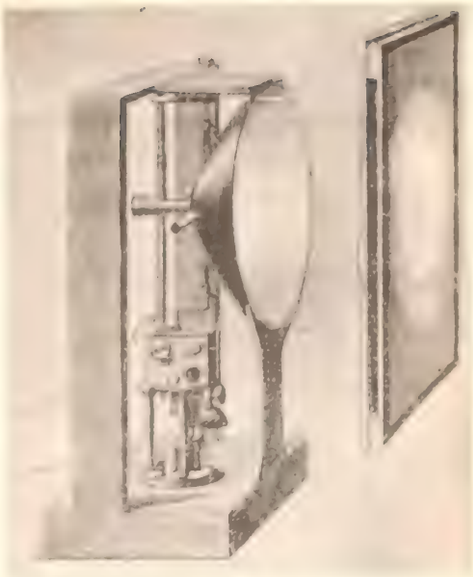
SERVING AND SERVICING THE AMERICAN THEATRE INDUSTRY

quently. It must have been strange at a tense moment in the action to see a boy walk across the front of the stage and take care of each wick. It must be remembered that the candle as we think of it was quite different from that of a century ago. Now the wicks of candles have incorporated in them one thread which is stretched tighter than the other threads of the wick. This has the property of causing the wick to curl over while burning and automatically "snuff" itself. This expedient had not occurred to the minds of our ancestors, and if the wick was not cut off every little whole, horrible smoke would arise and the light would go out. With all these handicaps one cannot help but marvel at the masterpieces which were produced at this period. Certainly the charm of the drama was a strong one to have survived and grown to the extent the play occupies in our daily life.

From now on, the history of theatres and stage lighting is directly tied up with the history of the development of illuminants. The oil lamp with the glass chimney superseded the candle and made much higher intensities of illumination possible, but even then, regardless of the number of lamps used, it must have been difficult to have recognized the players, and the scenery and properties must have been in almost total darkness in comparison with out present-day standards.



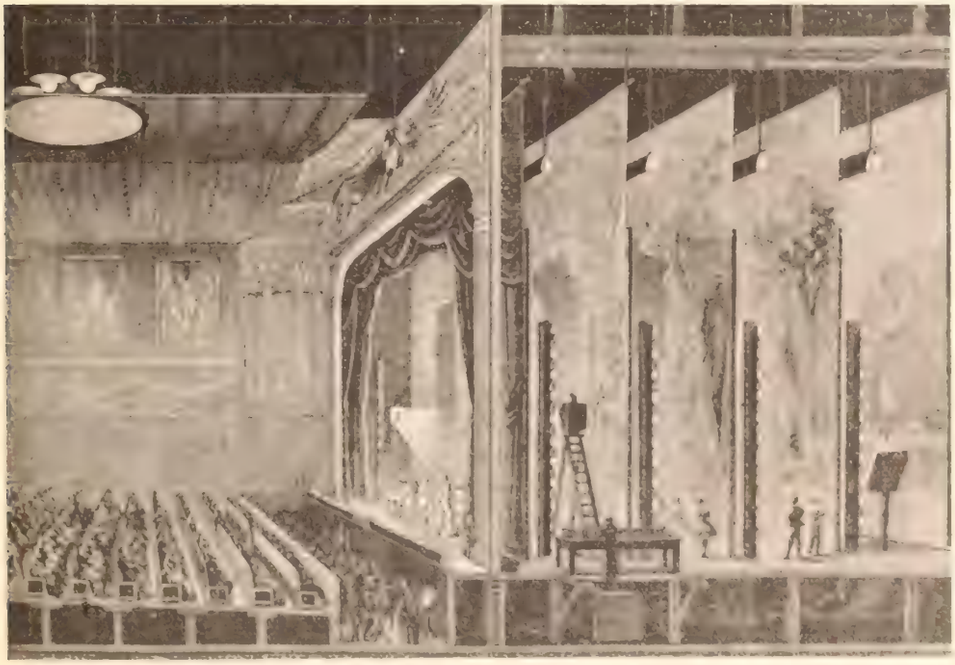
From the stage lighting standpoint, these illuminants also had the great objection that it was practically impossible to have any variation in intensity of light or color. Some crude attempts were made to imitate night-fall by the mechanical placing of screens in front of the lamps.

In 1781 illuminating gas was introduced in England, and in 1803 the experiment was made of adapting it to the stage of the Lyceum Theatre in London. Apparently the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia was the first in America to see this new means of lighting. It must be remembered that there were no regular gas plants in service at the time, and the theatre manager who wished to use it had to arrange to manufacture it himself. So, in spite of its advantages in the way of higher intensity of illumination, it did not come into general use until about 1850.

In contrast to electricity, gas is certainly unsuited to the theatre, yet in those days it was a remarkable step forward and one must marvel at the ingenuity used in the installation of control systems for gas lighting. With electricity a simple wire resistance inserted in the circuit, and a handle which easily glides over a series of contacts, are all that are necessary for getting any variation one desires in the illumination. With gas, huge control tables, regulators, water joints and mains of piping were necessary. The fact that some of the mains were more than 12 inches in diameter indicates the magnitude of this sort of work. At first, groups of gas lights were controlled locally by men stationed near them just as is the practice now where dimmers are located on portable spotlights. Then the piping was so arranged that all lights could be controlled from one point, as is the case with the present-day electric switchboard.

The danger from fire with all of these illuminants is self-evident, and there are numerous cases on record of serious accidents in crowded auditoriums. It was necessary to light the gas by a flaming torch on the end of a long cane and poke this in and about the inflammable scenery. Often a dancer with filmy costume came too near the footlights and lost her life.

Lighting equipment took up almost as much room as the scenery itself. Rubber tubing ran back and forth across the stage in every direction and, needless to say, the theatre was made exceptionally hot from the products of combustion.



"Prophet" at the Paris Opera in 1846, and probably the first use of electric light on the

About 1860 a device came into use which has from then on been intimately associated with the stage. This is the lime light. If a piece of lime is heated to a high temperature by a burning mixture of hydrogen and oxygen gases, it gives a brilliant and concentrated light which, placed behind a lens, gives a spot of illumination uniform and brilliant. This spot can be moved about to follow the action of the play, and is also very useful in creating effects such as sunlight, and so on.

The electric arc was somewhat similar to the lime light in its characteristic and, as we all know, was the first form of electric lighting. The Paris Opera was the first to use electric lighting. In 1846 the rising sun was imitated by the light from an arc placed at the focus of a parabolic reflector, and the beam projected through a silk screen in Meyerbeer's opera, "The Prophet."

At this point in development, the so-called stage effects came into being. Previously if one desired to imitate a rising moon, it had to be by means of a lantern carried at the end of a stick, and later by a gas flame back of a transparent yellow disc. This, by an ingenious system of pulleys, dragged its gas tube behind it as it ascended the scenic heavens, and, accompanied by the creaking of pulleys, wobbled its way upward. In the Paris production of Rossini's opera, "Moses," the rainbow was reproduced by passing the light from an electric arc through a lens system and prism. Lightning was produced by flashing of the carbons, and a spotlight used on Moses in his white robe, producing a very striking effect. Even such a detail as a luminous fountain was produced.

The earliest arc lamps had to be adjusted by hand, and the lamps could be used only where a man could be sta-

Lighting Control

C-H Simplicity Dimmers are profitable alike for the Virginia Theater, Fairmont, Va., and the new Paramount Theater, New York.

"Atmosphere" equalizes theaters

Twilight-smooth Dimming

Smooth as nightfall, C-H Lighting Control dims from full brilliancy to black out. 110 distinct steps without overlap — rack and pinion drive which eliminates backlash—perfect insulation provided by solid soapstone bases—three features of Simplicity Dimmers which guarantee flickerless control — even when many of the lamps are out of service. The booklet "Illumination Control for the Modern Theater" describes Simplicity Dimmers fully — lists by name and address over 800 theaters using C-H Dimmers, including most of the largest, newest and best. Write for a copy.

WHY DO PEOPLE go to movies? To leave behind the humdrum of every-day—to enjoy a few hours of forgetfulness. How effectively does your theater create a care-erasing atmosphere? Do you depend on film selection alone? Your competitors can keep pace with you there. But by presenting good films better, you can establish a preference for your theater—increase box office receipts consistently.

Beautiful lighting effects—so easily produced with C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers—add romance, the "stuff of which dreams are made," to every film. Fading and crescendo of light are produced without a trace of flicker. Any color blend—to suit every scene of every film—is easily secured. In addition to these refinements, C-H Dimmers are most durable. Soapstone bases protect them from burning out. You can be sure of long, expenseless service.

Ask your architect or electrical contractor how easily and economically C-H Dimmers can be installed. C-H Engineers will gladly cooperate with them to secure the proper lighting effects for your house.

Perfect Illumination Control for the Modern Theater

tioned. With the introduction of the more or less automatic arc lamps, they came into use for illumination of the whole stage, although this practice was by no means universal.

Needless to say that when the incandescent lamp became available, its advantages for stage lighting were at once recognized; and it may be said that as soon as it became practical, it came into universal use. Its introduction in about 1880 was simultaneous with the beginning of the modern theatre, with the movement known as the "stage reform," which originated in Austria. This had as its primary object the encouraging of the best and truest imitation of nature in the presentation of the opera and the drama.

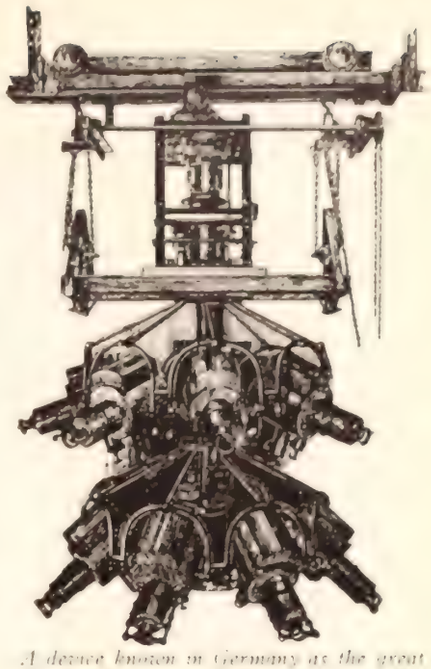
The introduction of the incandescent lamp marked the birth of a new art of stage lighting due to the ease of control, the ability to get much more light from a given space, the remarkable safety, and adaptability to color modification. Our modern stage productions would indeed be impossible if we had to depend on the candles, oil lamps, and gas burners of other days.

The various periods of the day, flashing lightning, moving crowds, fire, sandstorms, rain, snow, fog, running water, and dashing waves are among the hundreds of effects now successfully accomplished with the aid of electric lighting.

With suitable means of controlling and modifying our lighting, and the simplicity of operation, interest has been reawakened in a phase of stage direction that has been recognized as important for a long, long while, but difficult of attainment.

Light is probably the most valuable single medium available to the stage director for creating the desired psychological effect, and holding the attention of his audience. Color and direction effects are the very best means of securing artistic results. We think we are often very original along such lines, and yet Valerius Maximus, writing in 78 B. C., describes yellow, red, and blue awnings stretched over large theatres, fluttering in the breeze, dyeing the actors with the colors of transmitted light and producing a beatifully effective picture.

Each year we see more and more attention paid to lighting, and some of our most successful productions have gone back to the simplicity of staging of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries and are depending on the manipulation of intensity and color to create the setting.



The opera in Paris was the first to make an extensive installation of incandescent lights, which was completed in 1881. They used the footlight, border and strip lights quite similar to many of those in use today. The resistances for their control were mounted below the stage floor. The lever arms for dimming could be adjusted independently, or locked together and operated from a hand wheel at the end of the table. A year later at the International Electro Technical Exposition in Munich, a special theatre was erected to demonstrate the possibilities of electric stage lighting. A cluster of arc lamps was located over a skylight at the center of the auditorium—a system not very different from those which find favor today.

The color produced by the foot and border lights was changed by having a cylindrical revolving screen, one section of which was open, two other sections being blue and red respectively. A cord was connected to turn all the screens the same moment. The strip lights were changed in color by having a screen which raised and lowered in front of them.

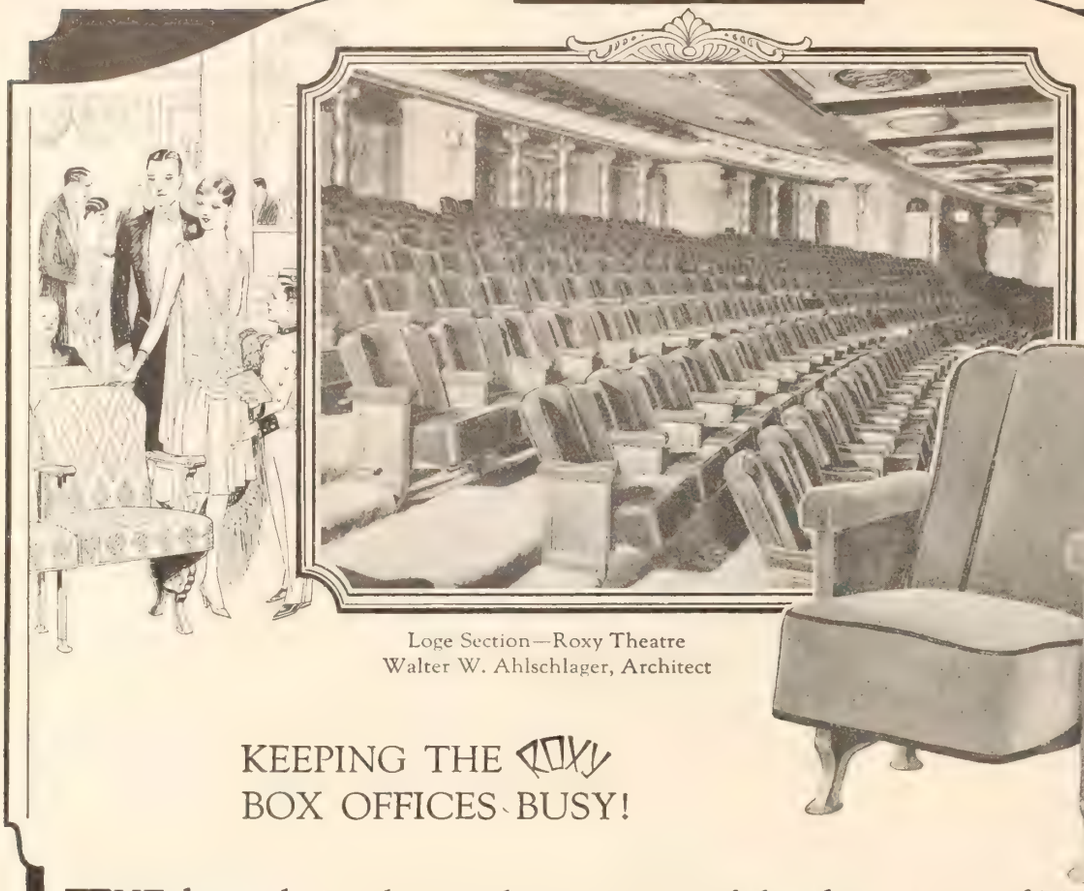
The Savoy Theatre in London installed electric lighting in 1882, and the first New York theatre to install incandescent lighting was the Peoples Theatre on the Bowery in 1885.

In studying the history of theatre lighting, and knowing the devices which are used today for various purposes, one realizes full well the truth of the old expression, "there is nothing new under the sun." It is remarkable how many of the features found in some of the earliest installations have survived to the present day, or have died and then been revived.

The location of lamps for general illumination, footlights, border lights, and strip lights is but little changed, and even the general design of these is quite the same. Slight improvements have been made to take advantage of the more efficient types of lamps and to secure a higher utilization of light. The modern interlocking type of dimmer is a development of that just described in connection with the first installation at the Paris Opera, with, of course, many refinements in construction. The old location of the switchboard below the stage is still retained at our Metropolitan Opera House. It has many advantages in that the operator can watch the entire scene from the same relative position as the audience.

A device known in Germany as the great cloud apparatus. Produces remarkable effects but is extremely complicated in design and is not applicable to American stage construction.

The old scheme used in Munich of having movable color filters dropped out of use for many years, and separate circuits of colored lamps were employed. It has recently been revived in Germany.



The writer has just returned from a stay of over a year in Europe, and took advantage of the opportunity to study quite carefully stage lighting practice. Having followed this line of work for a number of years, he believes he is in a position to speak with reasonable authority on the matter. We have heard the hue and cry for a number of years that Europe was far ahead of America in stage lighting—that the designers of American equipment were not on the job and keeping up to date. After making a considerable number of observations, the writer does not hesitate to express the opinion that he believes we lead the world in stage lighting.

Apparatus for stage service must, first of all, be practical, convenient, and easy to manipulate. The Germans, who have done the most extensive work in Europe on this subject, have developed a large number of types of appliances which, from theory and on paper, look to be very wonderful. They are ingenious beyond

Theatre Design and Decoration
in an interview by Thomas C. Kennedy

"SHOULD a theatre be dressed up as a home or should a theatre be a theatre, in its design and decoration as well as the presentations offered there for the entertainment of the public?"

Frank Cambria, art Director and General Manager of Publix Stage Productions, thus with a question that answers itself summed up his brief outline to the writer of the guiding principle of design and decoration as it is employed in the modern picture theatre.

The fact that the success of artistic decoration in the theatre is measured by its ability to stimulate a pleasurable emotion upon the majority of the people explains the prevalence of the colorful treatments used in the de luxe picture houses. Architects and decorators have sought their inspiration and styles in the productions of the Orient, the Mediterranean countries, the Louis XIV period, in which the Renaissance reached its highest degree of splendor in France.

Their productions are more pure in style than some critics of the cinema theatres would imply in their comment, and yet when one compares the theatres of to-day with the fire traps and uninteresting theatres of only a few years ago, is it not so that a decided and most thorough improvement has been made not only in construction and beauty but in the physical comforts of the patrons? Greater care for the safety of the people, infinite care for the health and comfort by installing marvelous systems of air purification and ventilation are among the improvements.

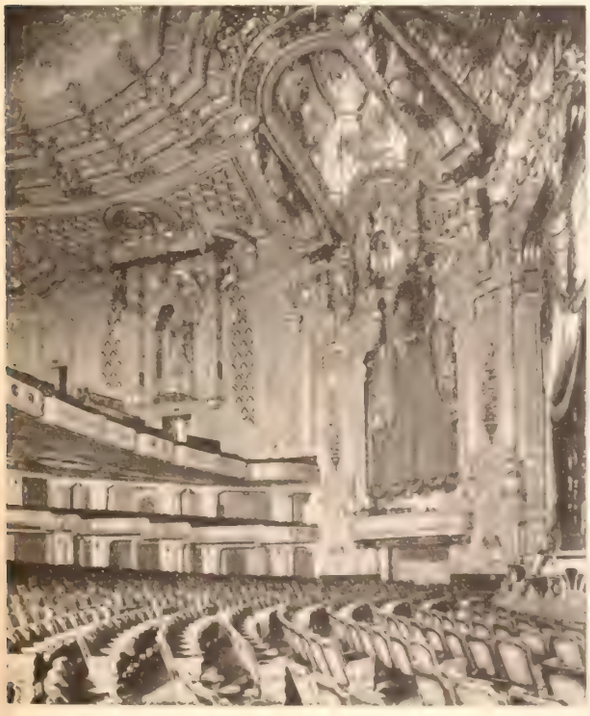
It is quite true that the subtle qualities of appeal arising from restrained treatment of the more classical forms are lacking. Their absence from the scheme, however, is mainly due to the style of treatment adopted, and not always because artistic standards are neglected.



To quote Cambria on this point: "merely because they are in a florid style is not sufficient reason for condemnation. Unless they are correct representations of that style, who can say that it is wrong to assume the point of view that the theatre must present an ensemble effect of brightness and gaiety? Moreover, we may ask 'what is art, and which is the correct style?'"

The palatial theatre is a comparatively new development. If it is true, as the historians tell us, that we must interpret the future in the light of the past, eventually there will be a trend toward more simple and restrained decoration in the theatre. The history of design seems to show that changes have been due to reaction from flamboyant to a more severe treatment in character and detail.

Cambria believes that this will take place in the theatre, and that the theatres of twenty years hence will feature a different form of treatment than is in demand today. One might prophesy an era of simplicity and majesty.

Designing treatments that will appeal to the mass of the picturegoers presents primarily a problem in crowd psychology. On top of this phase of "showmanship" which the art director must consult, are the elements of utility.

These include the necessity of having a theatre of large capacity—capable of accommodating a sufficiently large number to pay the enormous overhead on an elaborate program as well as a huge property investment. The large theatre is in itself an attraction, Mr. Cambria says, for the majority of the people like to follow the crowd, as it were. But the large structure is not without its problems in decoration, since designers have yet to find the way to entirely overcome the impression of space with treatments seeking intimacy—an effect necessary to the successful setting for a theatrical performance. Then there is the matter of safety for patrons—including adequate provision for free and rapid egress from the theatre in the event of fire. Structural features allowing for the most efficient system of heating and ventilation, are another, and in addition there is the requirement of an air of comfort and livability for the entertainment of people seeking amusement and a change from the prose of their daily routine and environment.

Take these factors into account and then consider one of the Publix theatres—the Paramount in New York, designed by C. W. & George L. Rapp, architects, for example—and judge then the merit of the design. A study of the theatre reveals to the observer a thoroughly sound principle of design, marked by a fundamental plan of strength and power, spaciousness and elegance.

The patron entering the lobby of that house receives a first impression of brightness and colorful appeal. The visit thus begins with a thrill, the power, dignity and elegance of the scene constituting a show in itself.

The mood is established and the patron begins to be interested from the instant he steps into the lobby. It is a blaze of black and gold marble, heightened in its effects by crimson hangings and crystal chandeliers. The elaborate effects of the Louis XIV period are represented, and in a grand hall that is 150 feet long and 50 feet high.

The patron's interest is maintained as he continues on up the grand stairway to the mezzanine, the walls of which are decorated with paintings covering a wide range of subjects and many of them the works of artists of renown. Located on the mezzanine and commanding a view of the inner and outer lobbies, is one of the most successful interest points of the Paramount. This is the music room, richly furnished with objects that have attracted the wide-eyed wonder and admiration of the thousands who visit the theatre each week. The furniture includes a console with painted panels, containing an elaborate clock and candelabra set in onyx, gilt and multi-color enamels. There is a fountain done in white marble with a statute of Peter Pan, a round Louis XV table in gilt and set with portrait miniatures. There are color, richness and an air of luxury not to be found in any similar public place in New York. That there is a demand for such a place of recreation there can be no doubt. Nor is there any question that these are the things which command a great popular appreciation. The crowds to which the Paramount plays weekly are evidence enough of that.

The artistic quality shows itself in the execution of many details planned in accordance with this formula, based on the principle that architecture and decoration must be made to conform to popular taste in order that the picture theatre may succeed as a business enterprise.

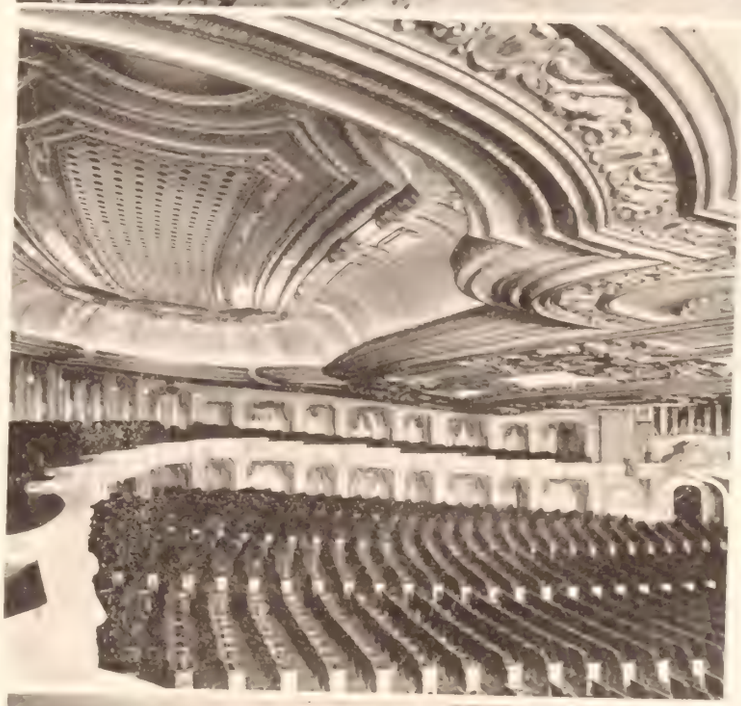
"Every effort is being made to observe the principles of what is correct artistically," Cambria said, "in the design of our theatres, and I think the honest and competent critics will frankly admit that the effort is evident in the finished works.

"In addition to appealing to the popular taste, there is, from the business standpoint, another phase of the showmanship angle to be observed. Details are needed to add definite points of impression. These become 'talking points' or reminders which serve to make conversation in which visitors describe the theatre to others, and thus carry forward the mouth-to-mouth publicity. The front of the entresole in the Paramount, done in crystal and illuminated from behind, is a feature in which this result was sought.

"Effects, impressions are the qualities we must strive to achieve. And always we must remember the type of people upon whom the effect is to be made. You must please your public or your efforts will be in vain. The public is fickle and exacting in their demands, particularly with regard to entertainment programs and amusement places. You can serve up a program containing $15 worth of amusement for an admission price of fifty cents for years, but the instant somebody else comes along with something they like better they will drop you like a plummet, and down you go—good art, good intentions, good everything, to the contrary notwithstanding.



"The first impression the theatre should create is one of brightness, gaiety. People coming to a theatre are seeking amusement and they are in the frame of mind to be pleased by effects that make an immediate impression of attractiveness. Objects which quickly engage the attention are therefore needed in the decorative scheme—spaciousness, elegance and the vivid coloring of a fairyland are the elements of the ensemble.

"In consequence of the more general appreciation for colors and styles of a florid nature, treatments marked by their features of display are the choice for the large theatre, catering to a large number of people and therefore representing the majority opinion of what is attractive. The first effect is the result of color; and if this is not right, direct in its appeal, no amount of furnishing and decorative detail can overcome the lack of response on the part of the patrons brought into the theatre.

"The large lobby is an essential, for the accommodation of hold-out crowds. A theatre front must not be crowded, for that would mean the loss of much patronage, because people intending to enter become discouraged from doing so if it appears that they will be forced to wait outside. When the patron enters a lobby comfortable in its atmosphere and decorated in a manner to interest him, en-

Nowhere else is control more vital than in the operation of high speed trains like the Century. The lives, not only of the engineman and his fireman, but of a hundred or more passengers depend upon it.

the vital factor in accomplishment

THE Century passes through the night . . . glare of headlight . . . crashing roar of locomotive . . . lighted pullmans . . . long march of signals — green to red — green to red . . . speed . . . safety . . . control . . . and light.

The story of the railroad is a story of control. To a remarkable extent the system which daily sends a thousand trains safely from East to West and North to South is based on complete, accurate, unfailing control through light.

The hand who keeps all "glass" clear and clean on his section knows the vital importance of light; the train dispatcher relies on the faint clear glow of pilot lamps to keep his division clear; the engineer in his cab watches and is completely guided by light; even the brakeman standing on the observation platform of a limited train sends and receives as he passes each towerman an "all's well" with light.

Does your dimmer equipment give you the smooth-accurate dependable control of light demanded for the successful presentation of a performance?

To you, as to the railroad man, light control is of utmost importance. No other single factor in theater operation so affects your audience as lighting well or poorly controlled.

Ward Leonard Vitrohm Dimmers are backed by more than a quarter century's experience. Ward Leonard engineers are ready at all times to give you their full co-operation in working toward the solution of your light control problems. We are freely at your service.

forced waiting for seats in the auditorium does not become a hardship.

"Public rooms, spacious and luxuriously equipped are an important feature. The decorative schemes of these rooms are based on styles of the display type. In the Paramount, for example, there are a number of these rooms which have won the greatest praise of theatre patrons. The Elizabethan Room, paneled and richly furnished and with red brocade prominent in the decoration, has display, but it is in correct style and treatment nevertheless. The same may be said of the Jade Room, in which Chinese art is represented with black furniture, gold and black satin upholstery and hangings.

"The auditorium is also in the vivid style, but a treatment harmonious with the selected scheme has been followed. The lighting is in the warm colors, indirect illumination being used all about the arches, the organ grilles and the main ceiling. Crystal and bronze fixtures are used. The organ chambers on each side of the proscenium arch have screens of crystal on which a tree design is worked out in colored jewels, which may be illuminated. All this because there is richness of effect and mass appeal achieved through such treatment."

Cambria is an accomplished hand with color. We have heard a theatre man, for years intimately associated with the leading stage producers in this country, pronounce him a "wizard with color—perhaps the leading colorist in the American theatre today." His stage presentations are examples of the remarkable effects which he is able to obtain with color combinations, both light and mass.

His lighting is unique and personal, much similar to the style of an artist working with pigment. This lighting puts into practice the elements of good art by painting with illumination instead of paints and brushes. It also involves the science of color as it affects another colored surface. For example, a red medium will turn a green surface into a colorless mass of brownish-black. So this art or science involves a method which brings out the color of one mass without changing the color values of an adjoining mass.

Mr. Cambria began his career as an architect, later turned to scenic art, later still to portrait painting, and after that, again, to the theatre. He is a recognized leader in the science of charting what the motion picture patrons want in a theatre and an entertainment.

His artistic training affords a background which gives him a superior equipment for his work. In 1900 he was apprenticed to Ernest Gros, a celebrated art director of his day and the man engaged by Belasco, Charles Frohman and the Klaw & Erlanger interests for some of their most ambitious productions. In this association Cambria worked on such productions as "Ben Hur," "Darling of the Gods," "The Heart of Maryland," "Madame Butterfly," "Stars and Stripes Forever" and many other notable stage presentations. He played roles in productions by Jessie Bonstelle's stock company in New York, and Rochester, primarily to study stage craft from a new angle.

Then he returned to art, achieving success as a portrait painter and mural designer. As a student at the National Academy of Design he was awarded the Suydam Medal for Sculpture nd other prizes. Cambria became interested in the picture theatre in its very infancy. Various efforts in this field culminated with his association with the Balaban & Katz interests in Chicago, where he developed a production department with scenic painters, designers, costumers, ballet masters and electricians fitted into a compact and resourceful organization for the production of stage presentations. He also planned the decorative schemes for the Balaban & Katz Tivoli, Chicago, Uptown, Oriental and the Michigan in Detroit.

Since entering the picture field he has made an intensive study of popular tastes and reactions to theatre decorations and presentations. Discuss with him but a short time this question of what the public likes and you become aware of the fact that here is an artist with a solid understanding of "showmanship" as we know that term. His grasp of the subject is marked by an authority and understanding that show the development of principles from an exhaustive study involving analysis and synthesis. He knows theatre art from the practical side and is interested in its advancement through the practical—which after all is the only way of putting the cart where it belongs; behind the horse. For a popular art cannot advance beyond the capacity for appreciation of it on the part of the public for which it is designed and which makes it possible.

"Music has charms....."

THE public demands good music in the theatre. How to provide the kind of music people want at a reasonable cost is a real problem for scores of theatre owners.

That problem has been solved through one of the foremost achievements in the field of theatrical music —the development of the Page Organ Player.

Not only does the Page Organ Company build the widely known Page Unit Pipe Organs, but also a special Unit Pipe Organ combined with a Page Organ Player. Many of the latter have been in constant use in theatres for several years. This complete unit is shipped ready to install in your theatre at surprisingly low cost.

. . . . . .

A remarkable feature of the Page Organ Player is that it creates superb pipe organ music with full orchestral effects from ordinary 88-note piano rolls, that can be purchased anywhere. Thus you can have all the recent compositions, either popular or classic. And because the Page is a two-roll player, the music can be changed instantly to fit the picture, making it more realistic.

. . . . . .

The Solo Device is a Page patented feature. By it the operator can select the solo or obligato from any roll—giving wonderful effects—simply by pressing a button.

All the effects of a two-manual orchestral unit pipe organ played by hand are secured with the Page Organ Player. Every detail of construction—pipes, chests, traps, percussions, etc.—reveals the finest materials and workmanship. All contacts are electric.

Installation of the Page Player can be made anywhere, or it can be attached to any modern organ now in use. The low price and extended terms will surprise you. Mail the coupon today for complete information.

PAGE ORGANS

PAGE UNIT ORGANS for theatres are built by craftsmen who have devoted their lives to their work. That is why, year in and year out, these organs are so wonderfully pleasing to patrons and owners alike.

The instant responsiveness, marvelous action and rich tonal effects of Page Unit Organs win unstinted admiration wherever played.

The Revival As a Box Office Attraction for Summer

Return Engagements of Old Favorites Were Popular Last Season

RENEWING interest in old successes well remembered by the bulk of the picturegoers, proved one of the most popular ideas employed last season by exhibitors so situated that a definite summer policy is the necessary thing. The "revival weeks," "Revival Festivals," etc., in many instances were highly successful as a selling idea, used as a policy to cover considerable periods of time and also as a special stunt to introduce the beginning of the summer theatrical season and therefore a new policy.

A large number of theatre men who experimented with the revival policy last season have been queried, with the result that most of them declare they will use the idea again this year, provided nothing occurs in the meantime to make another course advisable.

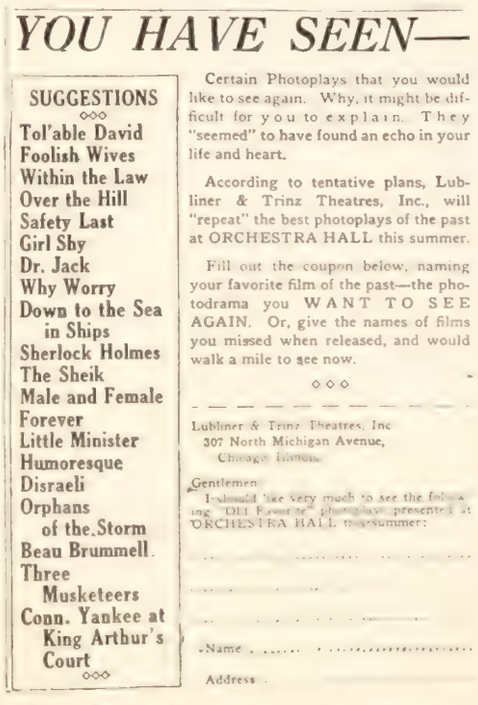
Many of the exhibitors report that the revival offers a selling point which they have been able to use to great advantage in stirring a new interest in picturegoing at a time when the general public begins to look away from the theatre to the beaches, outdoor trips, motoring, and other forms of relaxation to occupy their evenings and holidays.

Exploited as Novelty

The revival has something of novelty about it that can be worked up into effective advertising campaigns, and where successful in accomplishing this result, the outcome is usually a renewed interest in the picture theatre.

These campaigns take many forms, "request weeks" being one of the most popular. In this campaign well known screen successes are listed as suggestions and the public is circularized, by means of newspaper ads, hand-bills distributed at the theatre or direct mail material for the selection of the pictures they would like to see again during the revival season.

In employing this method, of course, the exhibitor should first make up a list of pictures he thinks suitable and then check it with the exchanges to make sure that only those which are available are included in the array of "suggestions."



Several theatre men have profited with an added phase in connection with request programs. One method was to print voting slips, containing the titles of several well known screen works. Six of these had been selected for showing during a "See Them Again Week," and the management offered prizes of a pass to each person who named the productions booked. As the pictures booked were those which had scored as the outstanding six attractions—the record holders—of the theatre, it required some intimate knowledge of the theatre and its history as well as a good memory for the patron to earn a pass. Nevertheless, this stunt proved highly effective in several towns, the public responding in great style.

The revival, as a set policy for the summer weeks, was resorted to at several large theatres last season. Notable among these were the Stillman in Cleveland.

Aided by W. Ward Marsh, the photoplay editor of the Plain Dealer, who commands a large following among the picturegoers of that city and therefore exercises great influence, the revival has developed into a formidable box office attraction at the Cleveland theatres.

Movement Popular in Cleveland

At one time last season there were three houses presenting revival bills. These were the Stillman, the Circle and the Palace. Both the Stillman and Circle showed return engagements as set policies for the summer, and they did so well with the policy that the Palace took advantage of the situation with a week of revivals. Thus in the revival movement, started by Mr. Marsh and under his leadership sustained through intelligent publicity renewing interest in the leading popular and artistic successes of the past few seasons, Cleveland picturegoers found a new interest in the cinema and new pleasures in a greater appreciation for the artistic accomplishments of scenarists, directors and screen players.

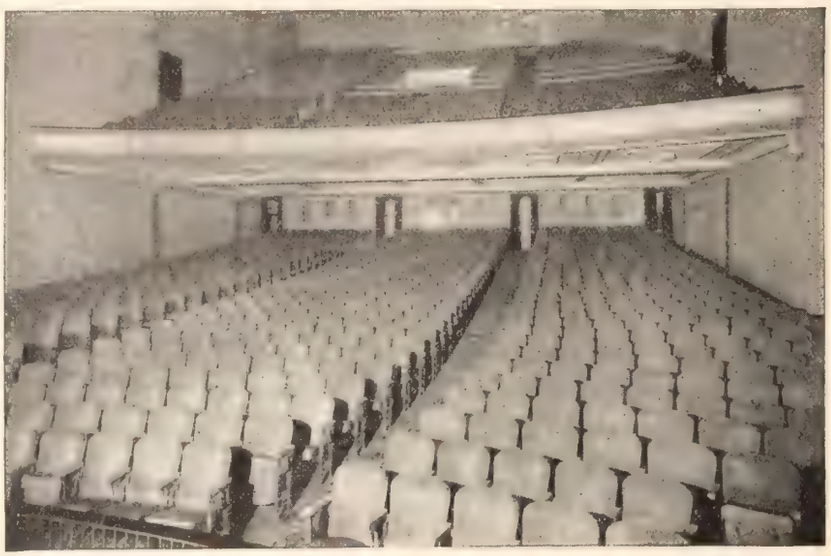
Another large theatre which "repeated" the best photoplays of the past as summer attractions was Orchestra Hall in Chicago, operated during the summer by Lubliner & Trinz under a revival policy.

The Orchestra Hall presentations were cleverly advertised well in advance of the season, and the response to picture titles which immediately come to the mind of the confirmed picturegoer as representative of the best in screen entertainment proved the value of introducing the "choose your own" element into these revivals.

The L & T Illustrated News, was at that time at the height of its power as the house organ of the company. Louis Kramer, who edited the paper, gave liberal space to the revivals inaugurated at Orchestra Hall.

These advertisements listed a large number of the screen successes of the past, and urged patrons of the photoplay to signify the pictures they would like to see repeated. There was a coupon providing space for nominations and the name and address of the patron submitting selections.

The Tower theatre in St. Paul, one of the F & R houses, started its official summer season last year with a Review Week, during which the program featured a new attraction each day. The pictures shown included attractions which had been offered during the fall and winter season.



Stars of the Season

Other houses which presented revivals last summer, for periods of a week or more, were the Adams, Detroit; Loew's, Newark, N. J.; Loew's Dayton, Dayton, O.; The Victoria, Rochester; Warner's State, Pittsburgh; the Majestic, Hartford, Conn.

Probably the outstanding star of last summer's revivals was Lon Chaney. This popular player was represented by a great number of starring and co-starring vehicles, dating back to "The Trap," which Universal brought out as a re-issue equipped with a new line of exploitation material. Among others in which his name was played up prominently by exhibitors featuring revivals were such pictures as "The Miracle Man," "The Blackbird," "The Unholy Three," and "He Who Gets Slapped." Harold Lloyd with "Safety Last," "Girl Shy" and "Dr. Jack" was also prominent, as was Mary Pickford in "Rosita," and "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." "Three Musketeers," "Robin Hood" and "Thief of Bagdad," repeated at many theatres over

A New Central Control System for Multi-Unit Projector Booths

Detroit Projectionist Evolves New Method of Organization and Operation

THE projection rooms of large theatres today are presenting a problem which, sooner or later, will require some serious thought if difficulties are to be avoided in the matter of efficient handling of the various pieces of projection equipment, as now installed.

It is not uncommon, in the big houses, for as many as eight separate projectors to be placed in the main projection room, and the proper handling of these equipment together with the auxiliary apparatus required for their operation calls for considerable thought and close application on the part of the projectionists.

Aside from the physical operation of the various projectors during the course of the show, there are innumerable other duties, such as the preparation of the film, which consume time and, what is probably more precious, divert the attention of the projectionist from the all-important presentation of the program.

It is now common practice, of course, in the large theatres, to have two men on duty at all times for the simple reason that it is physically impossible for one man to efficiently attend to all the duties as now form a part of this work. Should things keep on in this way, it is not at all impossible that three or even four projectionists will be required to handle the equipment.

The presence of more than one man on any job, no matter what this job be, immediately opens up the question of responsibility, because of the human element involved. In theatre projection rooms, it is common to dispose of this problem by making one of the men senior projectionist and upon him devolves the responsibility for the mechanical end of the program as it relates to the projection room.

Where a number of men are required to supply the necessary shifts for continuous operation, a Chief of Projection is properly chosen and the responsibility is then transferred to him with the senior projectionist of the shift on duty immediately accountable.

The Weak Point in Shift System

The weak point in this entire scheme lies in the fact that, with the shift system as now constituted, it is impossible to make one man justly responsible for the successful operation of the program.

The mere matter of arbitrarily placing responsibility on a certain man's shoulders does not necessarily mean that he will follow up this trust and take every precaution against error or failure. This, in spite of the fact that he may be thoroughly conscientious and willing in every respect.
